COMMITTEE FOR PRIVILEGES.

THE WHARTON PEERAGE.

A committee for privileges sat, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding, for the purpose of considering the petition which had been referred to the House by her Majesty, wherein Mr. Charles Kemeys Tynte, of Halswell, in the county of Somerset, laid claim to the dignity of Baron Wharton by descent from Mary, third daughter of the fourth Baron Wharton, by Jane Goodwyn, his second wife. The creation of the peerage was said to have taken place in 1544, during the reign of Henry VIII. and was by writ. It chanced, however, that there was no sitting under the writ, until the 2nd of Edward VI. in 1548. Baron Wharton, it appears, took his seat on the 26th of November, and that fact was duly set out in the journals of the House. This first peer having died in 1568, was succeeded by his son, and afterwards by his grandson. The latter married Frances, daughter of the Earl of Cumberland, and left issue, two sons, George and Thomas. Of these two sons the former was killed in a duel, on the 8th of November, 1609, by the eldest son of Lord Blantyre. Both of the combatants were, in fact, killed, and both were buried in the same grave, and in the register of burials at Islington their names appear to follow each other. The name of Lord Blantyre's son was James Stewart. On the death of this son, George Thomas, the second son, became heir to the barony of Wharton, but happened to die before his father, and therefore did not come to the title. Prior to his death, however, he had married Philadephia, a daughter of Lord Carey, by whom he had one son, named Philip, who eventually enjoyed the title, and left three sons. But he had previously had a daughter by his first wife, who married the fourth Earl of Lindsay, from whom the present Marquis of Cholmondeley is descended, as is also Lord Willoughby D'Eresby. He had several children by his second marriage, of whom one, Thomas, was created Earl of Wharton in 1706, and Marquis of Wharton and Malmesbury in 1714. There were not any children by the fifth lord by his first marriage, but he had several children by his second wife. The eldest of three sons succeeded to the title, and was afterwards, in 1718, elevated to the honour of Duke of Wharton. The duke was ultimately outlawed for high treason, and died at Taragona, in Spain. At the death of the duke the dukedom, the marquisate, and the earldom became extinct, whilst the barony fell into abeyance between the descendants of the fourth lord's daughters. Elizabeth, the only child by the first wife of this fourth lord, was the ancestress of Lords Cholmondeley and Willoughby D'Eresby. The descendants of Margaret, the second daughter by the second wife of the same, were now extinct. Mary, his third daughter by his second wife, was the ancestress of the present claimant; and his fifth daughter, Philadelphia, also by the second wife, was the ancestress of Mr. A. Cochrane, the son of Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane, C.B.

In the course of the proceedings yesterday, evidence was put in to prove the pedigree, and the examination of witnesses was proceeding when the house rose.

The Solicitor-General and Sir Harris Nicholas appeared on behalf of the claimant; the Attorney-General watched the proceedings on behalf of the Crown; whilst Mr. Austin represented Mr. Cochrane.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

CORPORATION OF GLOUCESTER v. WOOD.

Retaining fund in court pending appeal—Authority of corporation to enter into undertaking.

Swanston, Humphry, and Bailey, for the plaintiffs, said the corporation were willing to enter into the undertaking required by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, but could not enter into any further undertaking. An application having been made to restrain the transfer to the defendants of the fund in court, the Vice-Chancellor made a conditional order, that the plaintiffs were to submit to any order which the Court might thereafter make as to interest or costs. The plaintiffs having declined to enter into that undertaking, the Vice-Chancellor refused their application, with costs. An appeal was then made against that order, and also a substantive motion to restrain the transfer of the funds. The plaintiffs now asked that the order might now be made as if made on the day of the application to the Vice-Chancellor, and that the costs of that application and all subsequent costs might be reserved.

Walker and Rolt, for the defendant Osborne, one of the executors, objected that the corporation was not competent to give an undertaking, for, if given, it could not be enforced. (Re Corporation of Hythe, 4 Young & Collyer's Reports.)

The LORD-CHANCELLOR.—It is said the principal of the corporation property cannot be applied to corporation debts, incurred subsequent to the Municipal Corporations Act, but the dividends only can be so applied. May not the corporation enter into the contracts necessary to carry out such arrangements as this?

Walker.—The defendants are content with judgment. The Municipal Corporations Act prevents the plaintiffs from dealing with the principal of their property, and under such incapacity they ask for indulgence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—By the Municipal Corporations Act, the property of the late corporations was directed to be paid over to the new corporations, subject to existing charges, debts, and so forth; then to discharge the duties incident to the possession of that property; in so doing, expenses, such as they are authorized to incur, must be paid.

Tierney and Jolliffe, for the other executors, cited Willan v. Willan (16 Ves. 72, 216); Way v. Foy (18 Ves. 452); Attorney-General v. Mayor of Ipswich, before Lord Cottenham, and Snipe v. Lord Lowther, before Lord Lyndhurst, Nov. 20, 1842.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The circumstances of suspicion were such in Snipe's case, that I thought it proper to detain the fund, especially as Snipe was out of the country. The defendants are to be at liberty to apply for payment of the fund in court, or any part thereof, on giving security for the re-transfer thereof.

Re ROGERS, A LUNATIC.

Practice in Lunacy—Reference—Purchaser—Costs.

Montagu, in this matter, appeared in support of a petition, which asked that a trust-estate which was vested in the lunatic, might be conveyed under the Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, without a previous reference.

Affidavits in support of the petition by a surgeon and a personal connection of the lunatic, to prove his insanity, which was of long standing, were read; but on the first day his lordship thought them not sufficiently full. On the second day, his lordship, being satisfied with the affidavits, made the order that the purchaser's solicitor should be directed to convey in the name of the lunatic.

Rogers, for the purchaser, asked for the costs of the petition.

Montagu.—The purchaser has accepted the title, and this petition is a necessary part of the conveyance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The vendor must pay all the costs of the petition; it is not reasonable that that expense should fall on the purchaser.

BURRIDGE v. ROWE.

Trust fund—Retainer—Mutual credits—Settlement. Where a person who has an interest under a settlement is also liable to make good a portion of the trust fund, the trustees will be entitled to set off his interest against his liability, and, in the event of his bankruptcy, his assignees will be subject to the same equity.

The LORD CHANCELLOR then gave judgment.—This case turned upon a settlement made on the marriage of a daughter of Alderman Winchester with Mr. Rowe. The terms of the settlement were these:—Alderman Winchester gave a bond to trustees conditioned for payment of 5,000*l.* after his death, with interest at 5 per cent. in the meantime. This was settled upon his daughter for life, for her separate use, then to her husband Rowe for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. On the other side, Rowe covenanted to pay to the trustees 5,000*l.* six months after his death, and two policies of insurance for 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.*, effected upon the life of Rowe, were assigned to the trustees as a guarantee. That was also settled on the wife for life, and afterwards upon the children, and, in case there should be no children, to Rowe absolutely. The marriage took place, and three years afterwards Rowe became bankrupt. The trustees then applied to prove for the value of the debt payable on Rowe's death, and they were allowed to prove for 1,600*l.*, the value of their contingent debt. They received dividends on this proof, which were invested. After the bankruptcy of Rowe, he ceased to pay the premiums on his policies of insurance, which were paid by Alderman Winchester, and were ultimately deducted by him from the interest paid by him on his bond; and, after Alderman Winchester ceased to pay those premiums, they were paid by the daughter herself. At the bankruptcy, when the trustees applied to prove against the estate of Rowe, the assignees declined to receive their securities (the policies), which they had a right to have had given up to them. They probably considered the policies of no value. There was then no reason to suppose that Rowe would die soon. After Rowe's bankruptcy, Alderman Winchester applied to the assignees to purchase the reversionary interests of Rowe under the settlement, and it was agreed that he should have them at the price of 100*l.*; that sum was paid, and an assignment made from the assignees. In 1835 Rowe died, and on application to the insurance offices, the amount of the two policies was paid to the trustees. The policies, with the accumulations, amounted to 5,990*l.* Alderman Winchester became bankrupt in 1838, and in a few weeks afterwards died. The question now was between the plaintiff, who has since married Mrs. Rowe, and Alderman Winchester's assignees as to the right to this fund. The first question is as to the policies; and there is no doubt as to the interest during the life of Mrs. Burridge; but the contingent interest of Rowe had vested in the assignees of Winchester. Then what was his situation in respect of his bond? That was a credit in favour of the trustees; it was provable under his bankruptcy for nearly the full amount; for though the 5,000*l.* was not payable until after his death, interest was due in the meanwhile, which made it the same thing as an immediate demand. On the other side, Alderman Winchester had a regular assignment, which was a credit against the trustees. That fact, however, is immaterial, when there is mutual credit; and I consider this a case of mutual credit, according to a liberal interpretation of the statements. Whatever rights or liabilities were, it is unnecessary to resort to the the principle of retainer. A debt was due from Winchester to the trustees of the settlement, and a claim under the settlement belonged to Winchester. This is not precisely the case of Priddy v. Rose (3 Merivale's Reports, 86); Smith v. Smith (5 Vesey's Reports, 189), or that class of cases; but though not within the precise circumstances, the principle applies, and the trustees are entitled to enforce their claim on Alderman Winchester against the trust-fund. Whether as a mutual credit under the Bankrupt Act or on the doctrine of retainer, the assignees of Alderman Winchester are not entitled to the trust-fund until they have made good the settlement. This brings me to the question of the fund derived from the dividend under Rowe's bankruptcy. His assignees might have taken the policies, as they were guarantees for that debt which the trustees proved against his estate. But they must have kept up the payment of the premiums, to have reaped any benefit from those policies; they did not think it worth while to do so—they abandoned them. They were afterwards kept up by Mrs. Burridge out of her own income. Application was made to the assignees of Rowe to know whether they had any claim on the dividend, when they said they had none. They have no right afterwards, and it would be injustice to permit them to turn round and claim the dividend. As to Alderman Winchester's claim on that fund, it did not pass to his assignees; but it is not necessary to decide that question, because it will follow the fate of the other fund, and be subject to the same principle. This was the view of the Vice-Chancellor, and his decision must be affirmed, with costs, including the costs of the trustees.

Erratum in BONSOR v. COX.—A correspondent notices an error in our report of this case, in which it is said, "The Master of the Rolls overruled both exceptions;" whereas the decision at the Rolls was to overrule the exception on that part of the report which disallowed Messrs. Morrell's claim in respect of the note of 999*l*. 10*s*., and to allow the exception to that part of the report which admitted their claim on the 750*l*. note. The mistake is quite obvious from the context.

The short point decided—and distinctly reported—is, that the Master's finding in favour of an excepting party, though his exception has been overruled, may save him from costs if unsuccessful on appeal.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Tuesday, Feb. 20.

HANSEN v. MILLER.

Wife's chose in action—Reduction into possession—Post-nuptial settlement.

A lady being absolutely entitled, upon the death of her mother, among other property, to the sum of 900l. (in the hands of trustees under the marriage settlement of her father and mother), married during her infancy, without any settlement having been made of her property. The mother died shortly after her daughter's marriage, whereby the 900l. with other property, became a vested interest in possession, and was claimed by the husband in virtue of his marital rights, but the trustees refusing to pay him the 900l. unless he consented to settle a portion of it upon his wife, for her separate use, he agreed to do so: and accordingly, the sum of 500l. was paid by them, at the direction of the husband and wife, to new trustees, upon trust for her separate use for life (she being still an infant), and after her decease, to such purposes as she should by her last will and testament direct or appoint, and in default of such direction or appointment, in trust for her next of kin: Held, that this settlement, whereby the 500l. was transferred from the old to the new trustees upon different trusts, was such a reduction into possession in the wife's chose in action as bound her surviving him: and that the limitation of the settlement gave her but a life estate, with a power to appoint.

The bill was filed for the purpose of realizing for the benefit of the plaintiff certain funds vested in the defendants as the trustees of the plaintiff's marriage settlement.

In the year 1832, the plaintiff, being then an infant, intermarried with one Ludwig Peter Christian Hansen, her late husband, deceased, and no settlement was executed previous to the marriage for the purpose of securing to her any provision out of either her own or her husband's property. At the time of her marriage she was absolutely entitled, under the will of her father, to a share of his residuary estate, and also to the sum of 900*l*. under an indenture of settlement, made on the marriage of her late father and mother, subject to her mother's life interest therein.

Mrs. Harvey, the mother, died in the year 1833, whereupon the plaintiff became entitled to a share of her residuary personal estate and the before-mentioned sum of 900*l*.

L. P. C. Hansen, the late husband of plaintiff, received for his own benefit the wife's share in the personal estates of her father and mother, and claimed from Sir Edward Banks and John Plews, who were the trustees under the marriage settlement of plaintiff's father and mother, the above-mentioned sum of 900*l*.; but they, the trustees, refused to pay over that sum to him unless he would consent to make a proper settlement of part, at least, of that fund for her own benefit; whereupon, by an indenture of settlement bearing date the [illegible] day of October, 1833, made and executed between the said L. P. C. Hansen and plaintiff, of the one part, and William Miller and John Norman, the defendants, of the other part, reciting, among other things, that upon the death of William M. Harvey (the plaintiff's father), which took place on the 9th day of September, 1835, the plaintiff became entitled to a share of his residuary personal estate, and on the death of the said Ann Harvey, the plaintiff's mother, whereby she became entitled to a share of her residuary personal estate, and also to certain sums, amounting in the whole to 900*l*.; and that the said L. P. C. Hansen had received of Banks and Plews the sum of 400*l*. part of the said 900*l*.; and that he had requested Banks and Plews to pay over the said sum of 500*l*. to Miller and Norman, for the purpose of being invested as thereafter mentioned, which Banks and Plews had so paid accordingly; and that they (Miller and Norman) had that day invested the same in the purchase, in their names, of the sum of 573*l*. 1s. 4d. Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, and that the same was then standing in their names in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England; and that it was agreed that the said defendants should stand possessed of the said sum of 573*l*. 1s. 4d. Three per Cent. Consols, upon and for the trusts, intents, and purposes, and subject to the powers, provisions, and agreements, thereinafter declared concerning the same. The indenture then proceeds to declare that the said new trustees should stand and be possessed of the said fund, "and should, until plaintiff should attain the age of twenty-one years, pay and apply the interest and dividends thereof in such manner, for the benefit and advantage of plaintiff, exclusively of her said husband, as they, the trustees and trustee for the time being, should in their and his full discretion think fit, and should, after plaintiff should have attained the age of twenty-one years, and during the remainder of her life, pay, apply, and dispose of the interest, dividends, and annual produce of the same, to such person or persons only, and for such intents and purposes only, as plaintiff, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, and as if she were sole and unmarried should from time to time, by any writing or writings, signed by her with her own hand, direct or appoint (but not so as to deprive herself of the benefit thereof by sale, mortgage, charge, or otherwise, in the way of anticipation); and in default of and until such direction or appointment, into the proper hands of plaintiff, for her sole and separate use and benefit, exclusively of her then present or any future husband whom she might marry, and without being in any wise subject to his debts, control, &c. And that the receipts of plaintiff, or of such person or persons as she should from time to time direct or appoint to receive the said interest or dividends, should, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, be an effectual discharge for the money therein mentioned or acknowledged to be received: and that, after the decease of plaintiff, the said trust monies, stocks, funds, and securities, and the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof, should remain and be upon and for such trusts, &c. as plaintiff, by her last will and testament in writing, or by any writing in the nature of a will, &c. to be by her signed and published in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, should from time to time, notwithstanding her being under coverture, direct or appoint; and in default of such direction or appointment, and so far as any such, if incomplete, should not extend, in trust for the person or persons who, under the statute for the distribution of the estates of intestates, would, at the death of the plaintiff, be entitled to her personal estate in case she had died possessed of the same a feme sole and intestate, and to be divided between and amongst the same persons respectively, if more than one, in the shares and proportions in which the same would, under or by virtue of the said statutes, be devisable amongst the said persons respectively."

Bethel and Glass, for the plaintiff, Mrs. Hansen, contended that the transfer made by the husband upon trust for the wife of the 500*l*. which was merely a chose in action, and never reduced into possession by him, was consequently void, as against the wife, who survived him, and that she, therefore, took the absolute fund. That the mere transfer of a chose in action by a debtor to a third party, even by the direction of the husband, cannot be considered as a reduction into possession; and, according to the case of Perdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 1), reduction into possession and receipt are equivalent. That even if there had been a transfer by direction of the husband to the trustees for the benefit of creditors, provided the fund were found in their hands at the time of his death, the Court would not consider that a reduction into possession; and the circumstance of the husband having merely directed a trust in respect of the fund would avail nothing for that purpose, and that the mere change of hands would not in this respect cause the fund to lose its character of a chose in action. That the fund was not vested in the new trustees by any proper right of the husband so as to constitute them agents for him. It was also, on other grounds, argued on behalf of the plaintiff, why she claimed to be entitled to the absolute interest in the property—1st, that the settlement was made during her infancy, and pending her coverture, consequently void as against the husband; and, 2nd, that, even supposing the transfer to have amounted to a reduction into possession, so as to bind the widow, the result under the limitations of the settlement would be to entitle her to the absolute interest in the 500*l*. (and not a mere life estate), as it would be provided the ultimate limitation had been to her executors and administrators, instead of her next of kin. That the case of Robinson v. Dusgale decides that where there is a limitation to the wife for life, with an absolute power of appointment by will, it vests the absolute interest in the wife.

Stewart and Hall, for the trustees of the settlement, were not heard.

Cases cited: Perdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 1); Anderson v. Dawson (15 Ves. 532); Godsell v. Webb (2 Keen, 99); Robinson v. Dusgale (2 Vern. 180).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Reduction into possession signifies actual payment, but I am of opinion that payment to the husband's agent would be a good payment. The fund in the hands of the original trustees being a chose in action, was transferred by the direction of the husband to the new trustees appointed by him, to be held upon new trusts. Is not this, therefore, a reduction into possession by the husband? I conceive the transaction, on the part of the husband, to be as clear a destruction of the original character of the chose in action, in which his wife had a contingent interest, as could possibly be; and you could only proceed against the new trustees by bill, to enforce the trusts of that settlement. The same fact which constituted the receipt by the husband constituted a disposition by the husband. It was, in truth, a receipt and disposition at the same time. I do not agree with the arguments on behalf of the plaintiff. The deed of settlement represents that Banks and Plews, the original trustees, had property to the amount of 900*l*. upon trust, to which the plaintiff was entitled—this was, therefore, a mere chose in action. The husband of the lady had part of that sum paid over to him by Banks and Plews, under the consideration that he would settle the remaining 500*l*. Thus it appears that the old trustees were to have no control over the 500*l*., but the husband himself was intended to make the settlement. In pursuance of the terms of that settlement, the money was handed over to Miller and Norman, the new trustees. These last-named trustees were the nominees of the husband, and held the fund upon different trusts altogether. There was an end, therefore, to the original chose in action. I have no jurisdiction to alter the trusts. Even if the case of Robinson v. Dusgale were correctly reported, it would be with difficulty that I should be persuaded that it was right.

The plaintiff is only entitled to a life-interest in the fund.

Costs as between solicitor and client out of the fund.

CASTLE v. EATE.

Devise—Trust to sell after a child should attain twenty-one—Construction.

Devise to trustees to pay certain rents during the minority of children for their and their mother's support, and on the youngest attaining twenty one to sell and divide the proceeds of the sale among the mother and children,—if the latter die under twenty-one, the mother takes the whole.

Joseph Starbuck, of Sutton St. Edmonds, Leicestershire, farmer, by his will, dated 23rd of December, 1826, bequeathed to his wife Maria Starbuck, now Maria Eate, defendant, all his household goods, plate, china, &c.; and a legacy of 20*l*. and all the rest and residue of his moneys, &c. he gave to John Castle and Wm. Strickling, for payment of his debts, &c. and to dispose of the surplus as was thereinafter directed with regard to the moneys arising from the sale of his real estate; and he devised his messuages &c. to the said John Castle and Wm. Strickling, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, to hold, &c. in trust, to demise and let the same as they should think fit, till his youngest or youngest surviving child should attain twenty-one years of age, and should during the minority of such youngest or youngest surviving child, pay the clear rents and profits of the said real estate unto his (the said testator's) wife, for the maintenance and support of herself and of his children; and in case of the decease of his wife in the meantime, then the said rents and profits of the said real estates to be applied for the sole benefit of his said children; and when and as soon as his said youngest or youngest surviving child should have attained twenty-one years of age, then upon trust that the said Castle and Strickling, the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, should sell and dispose absolutely of the said premises, and pay his mortgage debts, &c. and then pay and divide the residue amongst his wife and all and every his children who should be then living, in equal shares and proportions, and if any of the children should die before the estates should become saleable leaving issue of his or her body, such issue to take their parent's share. The testator died 16th of May, 1827, leaving his wife and two children him surviving. Mrs. Starbuck afterwards, in December 1829, married her present husband. The two children of the testator died under twenty-one years of age and without leaving issue. Mrs. Eate claimed, on the events that had happened, to be entitled to the whole of the property bequeathed by testator's will; and John Starbuck, the brother of the testator and his heir-at-law, and also customary heir, opposed her claim. The present bill was filed to settle the rights of the parties.

JUDGMENT.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The testator has devised his real estate to trustees upon trust, that they should demise and let the same till his youngest or youngest surviving child should attain twenty-one, and should during the minority apply the rents for the maintenance of his wife and children, and in the event of the death of the former, for the sole benefit of his children; and when the youngest or youngest surviving child attained twenty-one, upon trust to sell, and pay and divide the proceeds among the mother and children. The two children who survived the testator have died under twenty-one and without issue; and hence a contest has arisen between the customary heir and the widow of the testator, now Mrs. Eate. For Mrs. Eate it is contended, that as she was entitled to at least one-third of the estate, the gift might be enlarged before the children attained twenty-one, and that at that time there being none to share with her, she was entitled to the whole. On the other hand it was said, that the sale was only to be made when some one child should attain twenty-one, and as that event could never happen, the estate was undisposed of, and devolved upon the heir-at-law and customary heir of the testator. Several cases have been cited, but none of them at all applicable to that before me. The event which has happened was not distinctly contemplated; but the will referred to objects of the testator's bounty, and they were to take by dividing the proceeds of the sale in stated proportions. Meantime the rents were to be paid to the wife for the support of herself and the children; and had she died there was no one to take her share, as the money resulting from the sale was to be divided among those living at the period of payment, and the rents among those living at the time they became due. The trusts for maintenance and support ceased on the youngest attaining twenty-one. I cannot exclude Mrs. Eate. The estate was to vest when the trust for maintenance ceased; and, therefore, Mrs. Eate takes the whole estate.

MUNRO v. FITZGERALD.

Legacy—Release from legatee to executors—A legatee, who also claims to be entitled to a share of the residuary estate of the testator, cannot, as a condition of being paid the legacy, be called upon by the executors to execute to them a release containing a recital that the residue amounts to a given sum.

Semble, by the law of Scotland, the husband is absolutely entitled to his wife's choses in action, whether reduced into possession or not.

Where executors, who are sued for a legacy by a Scotchwoman whose husband is dead, do not put on the record any suggestion, either that the law of Scotland is such as to render it necessary for them to have an indemnity before payment thereof, or that the husband of the legatee outlived the testator, they cannot refuse payment to the legatee herself, unless upon the production of special affidavits as to the grounds. A mere statement at bar will not do.

In the year 1791, Captain Andrew Ross, by his will, gave and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his wife, and his nephew David Ross, to convert into money and invest the proceeds thereof in the public stocks or funds; and the dividends, interests, and annual produce thereof, he gave and bequeathed to his wife for life; and after her decease, he bequeathed, inter alia, 300*l.* to each and every of the daughters of his sister, Catharine Ross, to be a vested interest at his death, and to be payable to them within six months after the death of his wife; and he appointed his wife and his said nephew the executrix and executor of his will. The testator died in 1793, and Mrs. Ross, the tenant for life, survived David Ross, the nephew, and died in 1840, having by her will appointed the defendants her executors. The defendants proved her will, and so became the legal personal representatives of the original testator.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Munro, was one of the daughters of Catherine Ross, and was entitled to 300*l.* under the will of her uncle Andrew. She was also entitled to 300*l.* the legacy under the same will of her sister, Mary Ross, who died in 1838, having appointed Mrs. Munro her executrix and sole residuary legatee. Mrs. Munro proved the will of her sister Mary, and after the death of Mrs. Ross, the wife of the original testator, applied to the executors, the defendants, for payment of the two legacies of 300*l.* each. The executors, admitting assets, consented to pay the legacies, and accordingly prepared a release (instead of an ordinary receipt) which they required Mrs. Munro to sign. This she refused to do, not because it was in the form of a release, but because it contained a recital that the residue of the estate of Andrew Ross amounted to a given sum therein mentioned (about 8,000*l.*). The executors insisted that the recital should be retained as a security to them in the event of a suit as to the residue, in respect of which there was some dispute between Mrs. M. and a third party; and on their refusing to pay the legacies unless their requisition was complied with, Mrs. M. filed the present bill to compel them.

Kindersley and James Parker, for the plaintiff.

Turner and C. J. Smith, for defendants.—The plaintiff claims a share of the residue of the original testator's estate, and it is but fair she should admit that which she intends to claim; for having two claims, one for the legacies and the other for the share in the residue, the Court will not allow her now to insist upon payment of the one, and leave the other open to future litigation. The trustees and cestui que trusts are the same in both cases, and it is better to settle the whole transaction at once. Though the bill alleges the plaintiff never had an opportunity of examining the matters in question, and therefore ought not to be called on to admit the residue, still she should at least admit that it was part of the testator's estate, so that she might not, after being paid the legacies, have it in her power to turn round and deny it was any part of such estate. Even if this should not be so, she should at least admit the legacies were part of the testator's estate. Besides, Mrs. M. is resident in Scotland, and was married in 1782; and by the law of Scotland, the wife's choses in action belong to the husband absolutely, whether reduced into possession or not. The legacies were given in 1791, and if the husband of Mrs. M. survived the testator, he became entitled to them, or at least to that given to Mrs. M. herself. As to costs, they ought to come out of the estate, and should not be paid by the defendants, who, had notice of the intention to file the bill been given them, would not have resisted payment. They cited Leslie v. Baillie (2 Y. & C. N. C. C. 91).

Kindersley, in reply.—The statement at the bar as to the law of Scotland cannot help the defendants' case. There is no suggestion of it on the record, nor that the husband survived the testator. We are entitled to a decree, and with costs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The defendants agreed to pay the legacies, though it was not absolutely incumbent on them to do so. I think, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to be paid the 600*l.* and costs; and if it is thought desirable to make inquiries in reference to the points made by counsel at the bar, application must be made this day for that purpose, otherwise the legacies to be paid absolutely.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

March 15 and 25.

BATEMAN v. FOSTER.

Construction of will—Infants—Maintenance.

A fund was given by will to trustees in trust for the child or children of J. B., who, being a son or sons, should attain 21, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry; and it was directed that the income of the share or expectant share of each such child should be paid to J. B. during his life, and after his decease, then, during the minority of each such child, be retained by the trustees, and be applied by him or them, as the events should happen, for the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of each such child, in such proportions, &c. as J. B. or, as the events might happen, the trustees should think fit. Held, that the whole income was payable to J. B., notwithstanding one of the children had attained 21.

Dr. Thomas Bateman, by his will, dated the 5th of November, 1829, gave to the trustees the residue of his real and personal estate, and directed that the same should be converted into money and invested, and that the said trustees should stand possessed of the same "as to, for, and concerning one full and equal fifth part or share of and in the said net produce of his said real and personal estate, so to be invested, and the stocks, funds, and securities to answer the same, and the dividends, interest, and income thereof, upon trust, for all and every the children or child of his son, James Bateman, born and to be born, and who, being a son or sons, should attain 21, and who, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or be married, to be equally divided between them if more than one, share and share alike as tenants in common; and in case there should be only one such child of his said son James Bateman, then the whole of the same part or share of the said trust-moneys, stocks, funds, and securities should be in trust for that one child absolutely: and the dividends, interest, and income of the share or expectant share of each such child, of and in the said trust moneys, stocks, funds, and securities, should be paid to his said son, James Bateman, during his life: and after his decease, then during the minority of each such child, be retained by his said trustees or trustee, and be applied by him or them, as the events should happen, in, for, or towards the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of each such child, in such proportions, manner, and form as he, his said son, James Bateman, or as the events may happen, his said trustees or trustee should think fit;" and the testator declared that the receipts of the said James Bateman should, from time to time, be good and sufficient discharges for so much of the said dividends, &c. The testator died on the 27th of July, 1834, leaving James Bateman him surviving. The plaintiffs were the three children of James Bateman, one of whom was a son, and had attained the age of twenty-one years, the other two being infant daughters and unmarried. The object of the suit was to carry the trusts of the will into execution, and to obtain the direction of the Court as to the mode of application of the income. It was also contended on the part of the son, that he was entitled to have one-third of the capital immediately transferred to him.

Swanston and Haddan, for the plaintiff, cited Whitbread v. St. John (10 Ves. 152); Prescott v. Long (2 Ves. 690); Soames v. Martin (10 Sim. 287); Kilrington v. Gray (10 Sim. 293); Jubber v. Jubber (9 Sim. 503); Haste v. Pratt (3 Ves. 730); Pearse v. Catton (1 Bea. 352); and Palmer v. Buckler (3 Sim. 417).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The point upon which my judgment was reserved in this case concerns the construction to be put upon the will of Dr. Bateman as to one of the five shares into which he directed his residuary property to be divided. It was contended that the words "during the minority" had not only reference to the time after the death of James Bateman, but that the words "during his life" were to be subject to the same limitation. To this argument I cannot accede. The expression "during his life" certainly refers to a period not yet determined. The next question is, whether James Bateman is entitled to expend and apply the income at his own uncontrolled will, whatever may be the conduct of his children, and I am of opinion that he is not so entitled. But was James Bateman entitled to expend and apply this income as to the son who has attained twenty-one, without reference to the son's ability? I think that he was; and as the testator's intention to that effect is expressed with sufficient plainness, I am bound to give effect to it. To the question raised on the part of the son, whether, being of age, he is entitled to one-third of the capital, I must give my opinion in the negative, as my impression is, that a child coming into existence after the death of the testator is not excluded from the benefit of the bequest. I shall therefore direct the whole income to be paid, until the death of James Bateman, or either of his three children, or until farther order, to James Bateman, he undertaking duly and properly to apply it in, for, or towards the maintenance and advancement of the three plaintiffs, in such proportions, manner, and form as he shall reasonably and fairly think fit, with liberty to apply.

OLDFIELD v. COBBETT.

Pauper—Costs—Contempt—Executor.

Where a defendant, an executor, was in contempt for the non-payment of costs, an order to defend in formâ pauperis was made, limited to the single purpose of clearing the contempt.

In this suit the defendant, William Cobbett, the executor of his father's will, was in contempt for the non-payment of costs incurred on a motion made by him before the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer.

An order to defend in formâ pauperis had been obtained by the defendant on the 4th of February, 1840, but the order was not properly entitled in the cause.

Temple and Addis now moved, on the part of the defendant, that the order of the 4th of February, 1840, and the petition upon which it was founded, might be amended, or that the defendant might be admitted to defend in formâ pauperis.

Simpkinson and Bacon objected to the hearing of this motion, as the defendant was in contempt.

Temple and Addis argued that this objection did not apply where the application was to be allowed to defend in formâ pauperis. The costs for which he was in contempt were costs incurred before the order to defend was made. The principle upon which the Court would not hear a party in contempt was, that he was in a position to clear his contempt, which in this case was impossible, unless this order to defend in formâ pauperis were allowed. A party in contempt has a right to make any application tending to remove the contempt. (Wilson v. Bates, 3 M. & Cr. 197.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If, the waiver is not proved, I am of opinion that this defendant being in contempt, cannot move except for the purpose of clearing the contempt, or taking a step having a tendency to clear such contempt. If his object be to clear his contempt, it is for further consideration whether the application to defend in formâ pauperis has that tendency. I will hear you upon that, if you wish it, Mr. Bacon.

Bacon cited Petty v. Lonsdale (4 M. & Cr. 545).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I hold that for the sole and limited purpose of clearing a contempt, a defendant may have an order to defend in formâ pauperis upon the usual affidavits being made.

Bacon then argued that the defendant being sued as an executor, could not be admitted to defend in formâ pauperis, and cited Oldfield v. Cobbett (3 Bea. 432).

Wigram, as amicus curiæ, mentioned Woodminster v. Doyle, a case from Ireland, recently before the House of Lords, where a similar objection had been taken before the Court below, and overruled. This circumstance had been mentioned at the bar of the House.

Temple argued that there was a difference between suing and defending in formâ pauperis, and cited Paradice v. Sheppard (1 Dick. 136); 11 Henry 7, c. 12; the 98th of Lord Bacon's Orders; Beames'-Orders, p. 44; Thompson v. Thompson (1 Daniell's Ch. Practice, 42); and Wallop v. Warburton (2 Cox. 411).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—A motion is made on behalf of one of the defendants, and is opposed on the part of the plaintiff. A preliminary objection is taken that the defendent is in contempt. The fact is first disputed, and afterwards admitted by the defendant's counsel. That being so, it was for the counsel moving to shew that, though in contempt, they might be heard. After fully hearing counsel upon that point, I came to the conclusion that they could not be heard, except upon the point whether, for the purpose of clearing the contempt, the defendant was entitled to the order asked. The argument of the plaintiff was limited to that point, and the argument of the plaintiff has not displaced the opinion of the Court, that to that extent assistance may be given. Upon a liberal and considerate, but not, I think, unjust, view of this notice of motion, I am of opinion that to that extent the defendant may be relieved, without trenching upon what was said by the Master of the Rolls, in Oldfield v. Cobbett. I shall therefore make the common order, limited to the single purpose of discharging or clearing the contempt under which the defendant labours in this cause.

WARREN v. POSTLETHWAITE.

Practice—24th order of August 1841—Copy of bill—Affidavit of service within the jurisdiction.

Where an application is made by a plaintiff for leave to enter a memorandum of the service of a copy of a bill upon a defendant according to the 24th order of August 1841, it is necessary to shew that the service was made within the jurisdiction, and that the copy served was a true copy of the bill, but it is not necessary to shew in what manner the copy was made.

D. Jones in this case applied to the Court, under the 24th order of August 1841, for leave to enter a memorandum of the service of a copy of the bill upon a defendant. The affidavit in support of the application did not shew whether the service was made within the jurisdiction, and the service also appeared by the affidavit to be of a "true copy of an office copy of the bill." The cases of Penfold v. Bouch (2 Hare, 157); Blew v. Martin (1 Hare, 150); and Coleman v. Racker (2 Hare, 354), were cited.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Unless the Lord Chancellor should consider that it is unnecessary, I shall continue to hold that it is necessary, under the 23rd and 24th orders, to shew whether the service is made within or out of the jurisdiction. With regard to the other point, my present impression is, that to swear that the paper served was a true copy of an office copy of the bill is not sufficient. If a draft is sworn to be examined with the engrossment as filed, a true copy of that draft is of course a true copy of the bill. The question whether I am to assume that the copy of an office copy is a copy of the bill is different. It is not always the case that these office copies are correct, and my experience of office copies is that they are occasionally incorrect. I am not sure whether, if the defendant is served with an incorrect copy, all the proceedings may not be erroneous; and it is, therefore, particularly the interest of the plaintiff to see that this service is properly made.

Ex parte TRUSTEES OF WASTE LANDS OF BOXMOOR, re LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY COMPANY.

Costs—Railway Act—Compensation.

Where the purchase-money of lands purchased by the London and Birmingham Railway Company had been paid into court, and subsequently, pursuant to the 42nd sec. of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 36, were sought to be re-invested in land, but in two separate purchases, the Court allowed the petitioners the costs of both purchases.

The London and Birmingham Railway Company had purchased certain lands of the trustees of waste lands of Boxmoor, for the necessary purposes of their railway, and had, pursuant to the 39th section of their Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 36), paid the purchase-money into court. Under the 42nd section of the same Act, the money was to be re-invested in land. The Master had approved of two purchases for this purpose, and these exhausted the whole fund. This petition was accordingly presented for the confirmation of the Master's report, and the payment of the costs of both purchases by the Company.

E. F. Moore, for the petitioners.

Bacon, for the Company, submitted that it was not usual for the Court to give in such cases the costs of more than one purchase; but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed that the petitioners should have the costs of both purchases.

WARREN v. POSTLETHWAITE.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, this morning, stated that the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor of England agreed with himself in these two propositions, 1st, that an assertion that the true copy of an office copy of the bill had been served ought not, or generally ought not, to be considered sufficient proof of a true copy of the bill having been served; and, 2ndly, that it is not generally necessary to shew in what manner the copy of the bill is verified.

HITCHINS v. OSBORNE.

Will spoliation—Resulting trust—Pleading—Int[e]ndment.

Where a plaintiff relies upon an equity, but does not exclude the possibility of an equity elsewhere, such a possibility will be intended against him; and therefore, where the next of kin filed a bill against executors and residuary legatees, charging them with spoliation, in having destroyed an instrument prior to that under which they claimed, without alleging that the legatees, under the instrument, are wholly unable to establish their right, a demurrer, for want of equity, was allowed.

Walker, Q. C. opened the demurrer in this case to a bill filed against the executors and residuary legatees, under the testamentary dispositions of the late Mr. Wood, of Gloucester. The bill alleged that the executors having, upon the decease of the testator, obtained possession of his will and papers, destroyed and burned, or otherwise spoliated, such papers as were of a testamentary nature, with the exception of the will, in which they were named residuary legatees. That one of the papers, so spoliated, was a codicil bequeathing various sums of very large amount, and which appeared to have been saved by some person from being burned, and anonymously sent to one of the legatees mentioned in it. The equity, therefore, of the plaintiff consisted in the fact, that the executors and residuary legatees had spoliated certain papers; and accordingly the bill prayed, that the defendants might be declared to have spoliated such documents, and that, by reason of such spoliation, they might be declared to be deprived of all beneficial interest under the will, and that the Court would, upon the deprivation, declare them to be trustees for the plaintiff. The defendants filed a general demurrer to the bill, for want of equity; and Mr. Walker, in the course of the argument, objected, first, that the Court had not jurisdiction to interfere in cases of fraud relating to testamentary dispositions of personal estate, on the authority of Allen v. Macpherson (Turner and Phillips, 133); and, secondly, that a plaintiff, coming into equity to complain of a fraud, must be a party injured by that fraud, whereas the bill did not allege such to be the case, but only prayed the Court to decree, as it were, an intestacy of that beneficial interest, which the defendants, but for their conduct and acts, would be entitled to.

Romilly, Q. C. and Rolt, followed on the same side; and Roupell, Q.C. and Tinney, Q.C. with J. Parker and Joliffe, appeared for others of the executors and residuary legatees.

Russell, Q.C. and Collins, contrà, contended that the Court had jurisdiction, and cited Middleton v. Sherburne (4 Y. & C. 358), and other cases, and argued that the moment the will and papers came into the hands of the executors, they became trustees for certain purposes, specific and ascertainable, but for the acts done by them; and that, therefore, they cannot, by such acts, destroy any part of the trust, and create a lapse for their own benefit, but must be considered as trustees still for some persons to be determined, and so, in default of the will giving a title for this purpose, the law must do so, in favour of the next of kin and the trust result accordingly. The next of kin has a right to be satisfied that his interests are not defeated. (Urquhart v. Fricker, 3 Add. 57.) As spoliators, they can take no benefit at all under the will, as the Court cannot tell how far their spoliation may have extended, for every particle of interest given them by the existing will may have been revoked by some of the papers destroyed. (See, as to suppression of papers, Smith v. Spencer, 1 Y. & C. New Cases, 75.) Such uncertainty in the testator's dispositions creates an intestacy, pro tanto, the beneficial interest bequeathed to the executors as residuary legatees, and therefore such interest will result to the next of kin, as well as the amount of the legacies defeated by the spoliation.

Walker, Q. C. replied.—The cases cited in support of the jurisdiction of the Court all referred either to wills of real estate or to mixed dispositions of realty and personalty, and in no instance to those purely of personalty, which, he contended, the Court never interfered with. [His Honour, in the course of the argument, intimated that what the Ecclesiastical Court has admitted to probate must be considered the whole will; for that court, upon allegations of spoliation and fraud, would not admit part of a will to probate, without first investigating the circumstances, and trying the truth of such allegations.] Walker, in continuation.—As to the equity of the next of kin as made out by the bill, he observed that while the bill stated that certain legacies were given for certain purposes by the writings or instruments destroyed, it did not pretend to say that those purposes were rendered unattainable, which it should have done in order to support the nature of a defeated trust resulting back to the family of the party creating such trust.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after going through the allegations of the bill, said, that the equity plaintiff sought was, in effect, that the Court should declare an intestacy of the whole residuary estate, on the ground that the residuary legatees had destroyed certain testamentary papers, whereby they had precluded themselves from taking any benefit under the will, and that they had, in fact, by their wrong acts, not destroyed, but created an interest in favour of the plaintiff as next of kin. The propositions sought to be established were these: first, that the executors were trustees of the property bequeathed by the suppressed papers. Secondly, that the evidence of the title of the cestui que trusts to that property had been destroyed. Thirdly, that the executors, as trustees, having fraudulently destroyed the evidence of the title of their cestui que trusts are not entitled to benefit thereby, as residuary legatees. And, fourthly, that the law must, therefore, treat the property as undisposed of, and give it to the next of kin. The second proposition, his Honour said, he thought was not made out by the bill; for it does not attempt to shew that the legatees named in the suppressed papers are not in a position to obtain their legacies. The bill prayed that the Court should give to the next of kin at least what the testator intended for such legatees; but, consistently with the allegations of the bill, those legatees themselves might be in a condition to establish their rights and claim their legacies. There was nothing in the bill to exclude the possibility that such might be the case; and unless that possibility was excluded, non constat that the plaintiff would be entitled to any relief at the hearing of the cause. The demurrer must, therefore, be allowed.

Friday, March 29.

LODWICK v. DAY.

Injunction—Contempt—Lien.

When the subject-matter of an order does not specifically exist, the order will be discharged.

The circumstances out of which this case arose are the following:—The merchant ship the Windsor Castle, bound to Australia, was compelled by stress of weather to put into Cowes, and her cargo was landed and warehoused, under the care of the defendant, as a ship agent. The cargo and goods thus warehoused the defendant objected to give up, upon application, to their respective owners, alleging that he had a lien upon them in respect of advances paid, and liabilities sustained, on their account. Disputes, consequently, arose, and, ultimately several bills were filed against the defendant, and, in particular, one by the plaintiff, in respect of a box of sovereigns, amounting to 500*l.* retained by the defendant on the pretence of his alleged lien. Upon the same day as this bill was filed, but before the subpœna was served, the defendant opened the box, and took possession of the contents, in conformity with his notice to that effect served upon the plaintiff. The bill prayed that the defendant might be restrained from disposing of the box and its contents, and that the box might be placed in the custody of a receiver, and the contents paid by him into the court, the plaintiff offering to pay all the defendant's just claims, upon proof of them being established. An inquisition and order to this effect was made by the Court, and upon not being complied with by the defendant, he was committed for contempt.

H. Parker, Q.C. now moved to discharge the order, and the consequent contempt, on the ground that at the time such order was made the defendant actually had no box of sovereigns in his possession, and was, therefore, unable to comply therewith. His equity consisted in a denial of contempt, in that it was wholly out of his power to comply with the order. He had made repeated demands on the plaintiff for payment of his claims, and these not being complied with, he had given fifteen days' notice of his intention to dispose of the property. Accordingly he did so at the expiration of that time, and placed the amount found in the box on his books to the credit of the plaintiff, and debited him with the amount of his claims. Consequently, the subject-matter on which the injunction and order were granted did not exist at the time the application was made to the Court, or even at the period when the defendant was first informed of the bill being filed against him by the service of the subpœna; there could, therefore, be no contempt.

Romilly, Q. C. contrà, contended, that as the defendant did not say, by his answer, that the money found in the box was not in his possession, but only disposed of in the manner stated, the order could have been complied with by payment into court of a sum of money equivalent with the amount admitted to have been in the box. That amount must still be considered to be in his possession or power. Similiter as in Rothwell v. Rothwell (2 Simons & Stewart, 217); and Hind v. Blake (4 Bevan, 597).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In those cases the parties admit assets, but set up, as an excuse, what is really a breach of trust. There is no breach of trust here. Under the circumstances it was impossible for him to comply with the order as it was framed. His answer makes out a large sum to have been owing to him, and it is impossible for me to say he has no claim at all; and, therefore, I could not order the whole sum of money to be paid into court.

GASKELL v. HOLMES.
Will—Construction.

A bequest, after the decease of A, for the children then living of B, and the issue then living of such as shall be then dead, and A died in the lifetime of the testator. Held, that "then" must be taken to refer to the time the gift becomes capable of distribution.

The testator in this case bequeathed his property to his son absolutely, but in case of his son's decease during minority, he directed the trustees of his will to pay the rents, issues, and profits of such property to his wife during her widowhood, and after her death, or marrying again, the trustees were to hold the property upon trust for such person as his wife should appoint, and in default thereof, and subject thereto, and to certain legacies, upon trust, as to one moiety, for the daughters then living of his (testator's) sister, and the issue then living of such as shall be then dead; and as to the other moiety, for other nieces and their issue in like manner and form. The testator's wife and son both died during his lifetime, the son being under 21 years. Of the daughters of his sister, one died, leaving issue, before the testator had made his will; and one other died, also leaving issue, after the testator's wife, but before the testator. The question was, whether the word "then" so strictly applied to the testator's wife's death or re-marriage, as, in the events that happened, to fix the period when the classes capable of taking were to be determined, so that the issue of those daughters, who died in the testator's lifetime, were to be deprived, and their shares treated as lapsed, and revert to the testator's representatives.

H. Parker, Q. C. with Turner and Prendergast.

Koe, Q. C. with Heatley, Rolt, and Bacon, appeared on behalf of the several daughters, or the issue of such of them as were dead.—The argument was to the effect that the word "then," did not merely refer to the second marriage or the death of the wife, but more generally to the time of the distribution of the fund; or admitting it to so appy, yet the testator must have assumed his wife would survive him, and therefore could not intend that the class should be ascertained during his lifetime. (Vide Viner v. Frances, 2 Fox, 190.)

Walker, Q. C. for some of the next of kin.

Cooper, Q. C. and Sidebottom, for others of the next of kin and the heir-at-law, contrà, contended, that the classes were to be ascertained at a period designated in the will: the wife's death. That upon that event happening, the classes were so ascertained, and consequently that each individual composing the classes became thereupon a persona designata; so that upon death the share of such persona designata lapsed. The case is similar to this: suppose a testator says, "I give a legacy to those children of A B who shall be living at the death of A B," that is a gift to a class; and if there are five children living at the death of A B, such become persona designata, and then if any die between the death of A B and the death of the testator, the share of the child so dying lapses accordingly by law. (Archer v. Jegon, 8 Simons, 446; Eyre v. Marsden, 4 M. & C. 233; vide on these points, 1 vol. of Jarman on Wills, 297; 1 vol. of Roper, 221; 10 Bythewood, 1086.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR having gone through the facts of the case, and commented upon the various cases cited on either side, gave it as his judgment, that the true intention of the testator was to benefit such of his sister's children as should survive him, or such issue of any of them as should be living at his decease, having survived their parent, subject, and postponed, only to the interest given to his wife during her widowhood, in case of her surviving him. The classes would therefore not be ascertainable until the testator's death; and it followed that no such lapse as argued could have taken place from any antecedent circumstance.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Saturday, March 9.
The JAMES WATT.

Though the rule of navigation laid down by the Trinity House is, that when two steamers are approaching, they are to pass larboard to larboard: yet, where a steamer is going down the river, and descries a vessel coming up with an adverse wind, she is not to port her helm before she knows the course of the approaching vessel.

A steamer seeing a vessel two points on her larboard bow sailing close-hauled on the starboard tack ought to go astern of her, and is condemned in the damage for not having done so.

An action by the owners of the schooner Perseverance, of 76 tons, against the owners of the steamer James Watt, of 300 tons, for damage done to the former by collision.

It appeared that the schooner, laden with iron, on her way to London, had anchored, on the evening of the 30th of September, abreast the Black-tailed beacon, near the Nore, and when she re-commenced her voyage, on the turn of the tide, in tacking across the river towards the British coast, she came into collision with a steamer. That steamer turned out to be the James Watt, belonging to the Steam Navigation Company, on a voyage to Newcastle, with a cargo and 100 passengers on board.

The case set up by the schooner was, that the night was clear and light; that she was close-hauled on the starboard tack; and that the steamer had the wind, which was blowing from the N.W. by W.; that she kept her course till the collision became inevitable; and that she then ported her helm to lessen the force of the collision; that the steamer, which ought to have gone astern of the schooner, ported her helm, and hence the accident.

The case of the steamer was, that though the schooner could have seen, and did see, the steamer, which was carrying two lights, the latter, owing to the night, which was dark and hazy on the water, could not discern the course of the schooner until it was too late to go astern; that she then ported her helm, in obedience to the rule of the Trinity House; and afterwards put it hard a-port, and having eased the engines, ultimately stopped them; that the schooner ran into her lying dead on the water; and that she did so because she had not gone about, as, by her own shewing, she could have done.

Adams and Robinson, for the General Steam Navigation Company.

Dr. LUSHINGTON (addressing Captain Locke and Captain Back, of the Trinity House, who sat with him) summed up:—Some of the most material facts in this case admit of no doubt whatever—namely, that the Perseverance, a small vessel of 76 tons, was proceeding up the river Thames early on the morning of the 1st of October, with an adverse wind; and it appears to me of no importance whether the wind was blowing from the N.W. by W. as stated by the Perseverance, or W. N. W. as stated by those who conducted the case of the steamer. It is quite clear that at this time the Perseverance, in order to beat up the river, was upon the starboard tack towards the south shore, close-hauled, and sailing as near towards the wind as the state of the wind and weather would permit. She had the tide in her favour, for it was at that time flood tide. About a quarter past two A.M. she discovers the steamer coming down the river. I take it to be perfectly clear that she would discern the steamer before the steamer discerned her. Being then close-hauled on the starboard tack, and perceiving the steamer coming down the river, what was it her duty to do in the first instance, before she knew that any thing had been done by the steamer? It is admitted on all sides, that if it had been daylight the general rule would have been, that the steamer should have gone astern of the Perseverance; and I presume, though it was night, if the steamer could have discerned the Perseverance that would still have been her duty. The Perseverance keeps her course. I apprehend that she did perfectly right in so doing. If a good look-out had been kept there would have been time to have put about, provided that was the proper measure to be carried into execution; but the crew of the Perseverance perceive that the helm of the steamer has been put to port, and they immediately put their helm to port. According to the evidence of all persons on board the steamer, two minutes did not elapse between the time that they hailed the Perseverance to port the helm and the actual collision. Under these circumstances, I shall have to ask you whether you think that the Perseverance was to blame—candidly and openly stating that in my opinion she was not. The steamer, according to her case, perceiving, probably at the distance stated, about half a mile, that there was a vessel in sight, immediately ports her helm. Her master admits that he was in doubt which way the vessel was going. The general rule is admitted, that he ought to have gone astern of the Perseverance. His answer to that general rule is, "I did not comply with that general rule, because I did not know which way the vessel was going." If the vessel had been on the other tack, then I apprehend porting the helm would have been just the proper measure he should have taken. But being in doubt and ignorance, he ported his helm. I wish to know why he ported his helm? It is said he followed the rules of the Trinity-house. True it is that when two steamers are approaching, it has been ruled by you, over and over again, that they are to pass larboard to larboard; but I never yet heard that when a steamer is going down the river, and descries a vessel coming up, when the wind is adverse to every vessel coming up, that the steamer is to port her helm before she knows what course the vessel is on. I know of no such rule that calls for or justifies any such course. If the steamer had slackened or stopped her engines, she would have seen that the Perseverance was adopting measures to avoid all the difficulty. It is argued that it must be quite clear under the circumstances of this case, that the collision took place by the Perseverance running into the steamer, and not the steamer into the Perseverance, but this is of no importance. The true question is, which vessel is to blame in occasioning the collision that takes place? But, from the size and position of the two vessels, it is not probable that that was the true state of facts. You will have the kindness to tell me whether the collision was occasioned by the want of good seamanship on the part of those either on board the steamer or on board the Perseverance, or, in fact, whether they are equally to blame.

Captain Locke.—The Perseverance was not called to go about. If the steamer had acted properly, she would have gone under her stern, and no collision would have taken place.

The COURT.—I pronounce for the damage in this case.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Monday, April 1.
Ex parte COLLINS, re THOMAS.
Commissioner's jurisdiction—Order for the payment of money.

Where a commissioner had, at the instance of the official assignees, made an order upon the solicitor to the fiat to pay a sum of money alleged to have been received by him on account of the bankrupt's estate, and to shew cause why he should not pay the costs of the order, it was held that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to make an order, and the order was accordingly discharged.

This was a petition by Mr. Francis Collins, a solicitor, for the purpose of setting aside an order made by Mr. Commissioner Balguy, under the following circumstances:—On the 18th of March, 1842, a fiat was issued against Thomas Thomas, the bankrupt, upon the petition of William Thomas. In the issuing of this fiat the petitioner was engaged as solicitor, having received a guarantee for his costs from Wm. Thomas and John Thomas. The petitioner continued to act as solicitor to the fiat, and after the choice of assignee, his costs up to that time were taxed at 61*l.* 18*s.* Subsequently to the choice, the petitioner continued to act, and claimed the sum of 60*l.* and upwards for costs due, and the sum of 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for messenger's fees. William Thomas paid various sums on account of these costs, and the petitioner also received two small sums on account of the bankrupt's estate, which were applied by him in part payment of his costs. Taking these several payments into account, the petitioner claimed a balance of 35*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* to be due to him. The official assignee, however, insisted that all the moneys paid to the petitioner by Wm. Thomas were part of the bankrupt's estate, and as the portion of the petitioner's costs incurred subsequently to the choice of assignees had not been taxed, claimed a balance from the petitioner. For this balance the official assignee summoned the petitioner, and Mr. Commissioner Balguy, on the 16th Feb. last, made an order upon Mr. Collins to pay the sum of 57*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* on the 27th of Feb. to the official assignee, and that he should attend on that day to shew cause why the costs occasioned by the retention of that sum by the petitioner, and of and incident to the order, should not be paid by the petitioner. The present petition was accordingly presented for the purpose of having that order rescinded or varied as to the Court should seem meet.

Rolt, for the petitioner.

The CHIEF JUDGE considered that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to make such an order for the payment of money, although the party was a solicitor, or to make an order as to costs.

Bacon, for the official assignee, argued that the petitioner submitted to the jurisdiction by attending the court; and further, that if there was no jurisdiction, then the order, being a nullity, need not be rescinded.

Swanston, for the creditor's assignee.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—Though this order is a nul-

lity, it is now submitted to, and I must pronounce a decision upon it. I am not aware of the commissioner's authority to order the payment of this sum. I am called upon to pronounce a judgment upon the validity of this order, and must say that I think it has no validity. I am of opinion that it is altogether beyond the powers of the learned functionary, and must be discharged, and the petitioner's costs paid out of the estate.

Discharge the order of the 16th of February, 1814; all parties to have their costs out of the estate in the usual way: the petitioner to have all his costs of, and incident to, this petition; and the commissioner to have regard, in taxing the respondent's costs, to the fact of their appearing separately; this order to be without prejudice to any matter of debt or account between the parties, or any of them.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Thursday, March 14.

MERYWEATHER v. TURNER and OTHERS.

Though, as a general rule of law, neither the lapse of time, nor the receipt of a legacy, nor any similar acknowledgment of a will, preclude the next of kin from their right of subsequently opposing its validity, yet there are acts which will debar them of that right,—and a formal admission, upon condition of which a decree has been issued by a court of law, is of the number.

This was a petition praying the Court to enforce a decree which had been taken out, calling upon the executors named in the will of Mr. Wm Turner, to bring in the probate of it, and shew cause why it should not be pronounced null and void.

The deceased died on the 19th of September, 1829, leaving Mrs. Meryweather, his only child, heir-at-law. The will, of which the probate was now sought to be called in, was executed on the 16th of May, 1829, and a codicil to it was dated on the 11th of August. By the will, Mr. Turner and others were appointed executors and residuary legatees in trust. Mrs. Meryweather received a legacy of 500*l.* and an annuity of 500*l.* during the joint lives of herself and of her husband, and at the death of the latter, an additional annuity of 500*l.*; but the bulk of the property was given in trust for their children, the grandchildren of the deceased. A caveat against probate being issued to the executors was taken out on behalf of Mrs. Meryweather. An appearance was then given for the executors, and the proctor for Mrs. Meryweather declared that he opposed the will. He did not, however proceed in his opposition, and probate issued to the executors. At the same time—almost on the same day—a bill was filed by the infant children, against their father and mother, in the Court of Chancery, and the prayer of the bill was, that the will should be established, and the trust contained in it carried out. The bill was filed on the 6th of March, 1830, and in June the answers of the parents were given in. In those answers they admitted that the will and codicil had been duly executed, and in the same month applied to the executors for Mrs. Meryweather's legacy of 500*l.* In December 1830, the legacy was paid. A petition was then presented to the Lord Chancellor by Mr. Meryweather for the annuity of 500*l.* It was complied with, and the money was regularly received up to Christmas, 1842. In Hilary Term, 1832, Mrs Meryweather applied to the Master of the Rolls, for an order for an issue to try the validity of the will. An issue was directed to a court of common law, and it was ordered that the children should be defendants, and Mr. and Mrs. Meryweather the plaintiffs. The executors then applied and obtained permission to attend the trial and examine witnesses, though they were not the formal parties in the cause. The cause was set down in Hilary Term, 1832, but the plaintiffs withdrew the record, and there was consequently an end of the suit. In Trinity Term, 1833, the executors prayed that they might be made plaintiffs, and proceed to the trial of the issue. Notice of trial was given, and in Hilary Term, 1833, the cause was appointed to come on, when Mr. and Mrs. Meryweather prayed that the order might be discharged on their admitting the validity of the will. The validity of the will and codicil was admitted, and on that condition the Master of the Rolls ordered the discharge of the issue. In the same term an action of ejectment was tried, which depended upon the validity of the will, and Mr. and Mrs. Meryweather, who brought it, consented to a verdict against them, and paid the costs. No further steps were taken, until the recent extraction of the decree, which they now prayed the Court to enforce, calling upon the executors to bring in the probate, and to prove the validity of the will. The executors opposed the enforcement of the decree on the ground that the admissions of Mrs. Meryweather preclude her right of opposing the will.

The argument was heard on the first sitting of the Court during last Term (2 Law T. 336).

Addams and Harding, for the executors.

Haggard and Jenner, contrà.

Cases cited: Newell and King v. Weeks (2 Phil. 224); Bell v. Armstrong (1 Add. 365); Richardson v. Claney (n. to 2 Phil. 228); Core v. Spencer (1 Add. 374); Sheffield v. The Duchess of Buckinghamshire (1 Atk. 628); Brown v. Hayward (1 Hare, 433); Hoffman and White v. Norris (2 Phil. 230).

Judgment was now given by

Sir H. J. FUST, who (having stated the facts) said that nothing could be stronger to shew the inability of the parties to oppose the will, but they offered certain reasons why the admissions they had made of its validity ought not to debar them of their right now to oppose it. They said that the witnesses whom they relied upon to establish the invalidity of the paper were the servants of the deceased, who had been in the employment and under the control of the executors; that the will had been made under the eye of the executors, and had been fraudulently obtained from them. To make this any thing like a good reason, they ought to shew that they had been unable for 14 years to obtain the necessary information; but it did not appear that this was the case. With one exception, the servants of the deceased had only remained in the service of the executors for 12 or 15 months, and after that period Mrs. Meryweather was as well able to obtain the required information as she now was. It was said also that "the executors took several large sums for themselves and their families under the will," but that appeared on the face of the paper, and afforded no ground for the present decree. Again it was said "that the parties were placed under a great disadvantage by the interference of the executors on the trial of the issue." No doubt they had been;—or rather they would have been placed in a position of peculiar advantage, if their only opponents on the trial had been their own children; but it was, to prevent this that the interference of the executors had been ordered. Again they said that "before they consented to the discharge of the issue, they were informed by their solicitor that by so doing they would not be debarred from opposing the will at any future time," and they referred to the letter of the solicitor giving this advice. This letter was dated in 1829, but it only referred to the withdrawal of the caveat. No doubt, so far as the caveat was concerned, it was very sound advice, but the letter did not refer at all to the reiterated admissions of the validity of the will, which had been made by the parties both in Chancery and at common law. Another reason assigned was, that "it is only within the last four months that they have received information of the incapacity of the deceased;" but could they not have received such information before? Their principal witnesses, the deceased's servants, could have been got at, at the expiration of twelve or fifteen months. The next reason offered was, as to a point of law. It was said, that Mrs. Meryweather had not been examined, and her answers had not been taken separately and apart from her husband; and, consequently, that she was not debarred by them from opposing the will in the Court of Chancery." That was a question as to the practice of the Court of Chancery, and it could have no effect upon the court of probate. These were the grounds upon which the parties moved for the enforcement of this decree, and the Court certainly thought that, in law and in fact, they were insufficient to warrant it in agreeing to the motion. It was admitted that executors ought to prove a will in solemn form of law, and that under ordinary circumstances neither the acknowledgment of its validity nor the receipt of a legacy under it would preclude the next of kin from subsequently opposing it. The cases relied upon in argument were principally Newell and King v. Weeks (2 Phil. 224), and Hoffman and White v. Norris (2 Phil. 230). The first case was very different from the present. The question there was, whether the party was cognizant of proceedings to which he had not himself been a formal party, and in which he had not been cited to see proceedings. But the case of Hoffman and White v. Norris approached much nearer to this. The case was thus reported:—"George Hoffman made his will in May 1791, disposing of real and personal property between a brother and sister, and excluding his brother Lewis Hoffman, for reasons mentioned; he died in 1795. In March in that year, the will was proved by the two executors; doubts having arisen respecting the will, a suit in Chancery was brought against the executors and against Lewis Hoffman, praying an account, &c.; this was answered by all the parties. Lewis Hoffman, in his answer, on the 26th of January, 1796, stated, that he believed the deceased had made his will as set forth; that the will was duly proved, and he claimed all such right as he was entitled to as brother and next of kin, particularly claiming a lapsed legacy. On the 26th of June, 1796, the Master decided accordingly; and that by the death of William Hoffman, the legacy had lapsed, and consequently was distributable; and that one-third of one-half belonged to Lewis Hoffman. Pursuant to this, the money was laid out, and Lewis Hoffman received the interest of the one-third of the moiety proceeding under the will. In 1804 a decree was taken out in this court by Lewis Hoffman against the executor of his brother's executor, to bring on the probate, and prove the will; and Sir W. Wynne said that "there can be no doubt but that, as brother, he is entitled to controvert the will. I do not know that there is any specified time which limits a party. Here there has been a quiet possession for nine years. I think I know instances where the Court has allowed the probate to be called in after a longer period; that may be done with cause shewn; that it may be done under any circumstances I cannot admit. It would be contrary to reason and to every principle of justice;" and in that case Sir W. Wynne thought that the circumstances were not sufficient, and dismissed the suit. The case of Bell v. Armstrong (1 Add. 365) was not inconsistent with this view. There Sir John Nicholl held that the facts fairly entitled the next of kin to have the probate called in, but he did not in any way dispute or narrow the principle laid down in Hoffman v. White. In the recent case of Bell v. Mason, before the Judicial Committee, the right of the next of kin to oppose a will after a considerable lapse of time was upheld, but it did not go the length of deciding that no circumstances could deprive them of that right. What, then, were the circumstances here? The will was not only admitted to be well proved, but, by a decree of the Master of the Rolls, it was judicially pronounced to be valid. That decree was granted upon the condition that the validity of the will was admitted, and to allow the parties to withdraw that admission would be, in fact, to undo what had been done by that learned judge. It was upon their own express petition that the decree was issued, and the Court thought that the admission thus solemnly made precluded the parties from opposing the will. If it did not in the Court of Chancery, the parties might go there and obtain another order for the trial of an issue, or they might bring another action for ejectment in a court of common law. Then would be the time for them to come here. The Court did not mean at all to entrench upon the right of the next of kin to call upon the executors to prove the will, but upon the ground that the Court of Chancery, at the express petition of the parties, granted a decree on the condition of admitting the will's validity, it could not now allow them to oppose it, and must accordingly pronounce that the executors should be dismissed from the effect of the decree which had been taken out against them.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Kingston, Wednesday, March 27.

REG. v. ELSLEY.

Counsel have a right to open confessions to a jury.—Admissibility of former threats used by prisoner against the deceased on an indictment for murder.—A jury is not bound either to act on the whole confession, or reject it altogether.

The prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of one Edwards, and in different counts the death was alleged to have been caused by shooting, drowning, beating, &c. The deceased was game keeper to Lord Grantley, and was discovered early one morning lying dead in a canal which ran through his lordship's property. His head was much beaten and battered, as though with some heavy instrument, and the learned judge, in accordance with the evidence of the surgeons, left that count alone which contained such description of injury to the jury.

There was but little evidence against the prisoner, except what was furnished by a confession he made to a police-officer a day or two after the transaction. He therein admitted that on the evening before the finding of the body he had gone on the premises for the purpose of poaching, and that having shot two birds, he was about to leave, when he was met by the keeper Edwards. The latter struck at him with a hazel stick he had in his hand, at the same time saying he would kill him; the prisoner said, "Nay, don't do that," the keeper replied, "Yes, I will kill you," and the prisoner said, "then it shall be life for life." He then swung his gun round to ward off the blows of the keeper, and struck the latter on the temple with the butt-end of it. The deceased fell, but rose again, and was about to attack the prisoner a second time, when the latter struck him another blow on the head, and these were repeated until the keeper was unable to rise; the prisoner then pushed him with his foot down a declivity into the canal, where the body was found.

Clarkson (with whom was Locke), for the prosecution, was about, in his opening-speech, to detail the particulars of the confession, when he was stopped by Charnock, for the prisoner, who contended, that counsel for the prosecution had no right to open confessions to the jury. It was so laid down in several cases in 7 C. & P. viz. R. v. Hartel, p. 773; R. v. Orrell, 774; R. v. Davies, 785.

PARKE, B. held, that it was the duty of counsel to open conversations and declarations, to give the prisoner the benefit of any discrepancy that might exist between such statement and the subsequent proof; but that confessions should not be opened. In R. v.

Orrell, Mr. B. Bolland directed an adherence to this rule.

ALDERSON, B.—I hold it to be quite clear, that have no right to interfere with the discretion of counsel in making his opening address to the jury. There are, doubtless, cases in which confessions should not properly be opened; but it is a matter on which the counsel must exercise his own judgment. I have no power to control it.

Charnock subsequently objected to the admission of conversations held some time previously to the transaction, in which the prisoner had threatened "to do" for the deceased.

ALDERSON, B. held that they were clearly admissible; but it appearing that they had occurred as much as twelve months or two years ago, his lordship recommended the jury to dismiss them from their consideration.

Charnock, in his address to the jury, urged upon them that as there was no evidence against the prisoner except his own confession, they were bound to take it as it stood, or reject it altogether. And if they adopted the former alternative, the statement, upon the face of it, reduced the crime to that of manslaughter.

ALDERSON, B. in summing-up.—Undoubtedly you are bound to take the confession altogether as it stands, but you are not bound implicitly to believe every part of it. You may select such portions as you consider consistent with, or confirmed by, the other facts of the case, and may reject the rest. Now if the keeper merely sought to apprehend the prisoner, who was in the pursuit of an unlawful object, and the death of the former ensued, the crime would be one of murder. If the keeper resorted to any sort of violence or threats, or did any act beyond what he had authority to do, and the prisoner forcibly resisted, he would be justified in such resistance, even although death resulted, provided he used no more violence than was necessary to protect himself from the other's attack. If where the contest had thus commenced illegally on the part of the keeper, the prisoner resorted to more violence than was necessary to repel his assailant, his crime would be that of manslaughter. There is one other point of view in which the case may be laid before you, and it is this—If, in the course of a struggle which had commenced by some unauthorised act of the keeper, he became disabled, and the prisoner, taking advantage of his condition, deliberately, and when the struggle was at an end, gave him a deadly wound, the law infers it to be an act of murder.

The jury, after a short deliberation, found the prisoner guilty of manslaughter.

TIPPERARY (NORTH). NENAGH.

(Before BALL, J.)

Friday, March 22.

REG. v. LEARY and ANOTHER.

It has been resolved by the judges, that they are not warranted in discharging a jury merely because, after being locked up for a considerable time, they are unable to agree.

Prisoners were indicted for murder.

The jury, being unable to agree, were locked up.

At ten o'clock at night the jury again came out, and the foreman said there was not the least hope of their coming to an agreement, if they remained in for a month.

BALL, J.—It is not in my power to discharge you.

Foreman.—I am sure your lordship would not wish us to be coerced into finding a verdict.

BALL, J.—I do not wish any such thing, but the law coerces me.

Foreman.—At previous assizes I have known the judges to discharge a jury after they had been locked up for a night.

BALL, J.—Well, gentlemen, I am now obliged to tell you what I was not anxious to mention sooner, that just before the circuit the judges met, and came to the determination that whatever the practice may have been in particular instances hitherto, they were not warranted in discharging a jury, merely because that, after being in for a considerable time, they were not then enabled to agree. Upon looking more accurately into the law, they have come to the determination that it is not within the power of the judges, merely because for a considerable time there is no apparent prospect of a jury agreeing, that they may be discharged. That decision having been come to, and acting upon the rule so laid down, it is not within the compass of my power to transgress the law. I am sorry to subject you to any inconvenience, but I am bound to administer the law under the solemn sanction of an oath.

Mr. Young, one of the jurors, stated that he was very ill during the day, and further confinement would be dangerous.

BALL, J.—That is quite a different matter, and I shall send in a medical gentleman to examine you.

Dr. Quin then retired into the room with Mr. Young, and on his returning, having been sworn, deposed that to keep Mr. Young until Monday morning would be attended, most probably, with dangerous consequences to his health.

Saturday, March 23.

The jury were called out after Judge Ball had taken his seat, and his lordship inquired if they had agreed.

The foreman intimated that they had not, nor was there the least hope of their doing so.

BALL, J. observed, that very often those who were quite as clear as to their not being able to agree, after deliberation, were enabled to return a verdict.

The Foreman.—There is not the least hope here.

BALL, J.—Then I have only to request of you to return to your jury box.

The Foreman said he was treasurer of the savings bank, and the public would be very seriously inconvenienced if he had to remain in all day.

BALL, J.—I am very sorry for it; but you have here a more paramount duty to discharge, and I regret to say it is not in my power to discharge you.

The jury intimated that they had long since agreed as to the verdict to be given with respect to one of the prisoners.

BALL, J. said he did not see any objection to taking their finding in the case in which they had agreed, and discharging them as to the other.

Sausse remarked that there could be none.

Hassard, who was present, made no observation.

The jury gave no finding as to Jeremiah Leary, but returned a verdict of guilty against John Cooke.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

PARLIAMENT has been busy since last we recorded its proceedings; so busy, that it is astonishing how much it has contrived to do in four nights, after so many weeks of doing nothing. The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill has been hurried with unseemly haste through the House of Lords, as if its parents were ashamed of their offspring, as indeed well they may be, and already it has made its appearance in the Commons. The County Courts Bill has been introduced, whether to meet the same fate as so often it met before, it is impossible to predicate, but if it succeed, it will assuredly give birth to a brood of pettifoggers more noxious and more numerous than those of whom the Profession is now so zealously striving to rid itself. Bills have been brought in for assimilating the registration of electors in Ireland to that in England, and for extending the franchise by the truly Irish method of sweeping away four-fifths of the present leaseholders, and substituting for them about 30,000 tenants at will Mr. Gladstone has produced a measure for regulating Joint Stock Banks, and improving the law of partnership, so far as it respects companies composed of many partners. The provisions are stated at length in our Parliamentary report. Lord Campbell has laid upon the table a Bill to establish an appeal in criminal cases; a measure long demanded by justice, and the want of which has been one of the most grievous defects of our jurisprudence. Sir R. Peel has stated that he does not purpose to codify the criminal law, and the Duke of Wellington has announced that the Government will this session introduce a Bill for regulating the payment of the Clerks of the Peace, Magistrates' Clerks, and Clerks of Assize. It seems that Lord Brougham's Privy Council Bill, with its self-created judgeship, has not the open support of Ministers; but it is not opposed by them. One member stated his resolution to use all the forms of the House to oppose what he did not hesitate to term a flagrant job. Parliament has adjourned for the Easter recess.

LORD LINCOLN'S BUILDINGS REGULATION BILL.

The following are the 52nd and 53rd clauses of this Act. We publish them as they affect the interests of a very large number of persons, and an immense amount of capital:—

Clause 52.—"And now, for the purpose of making provision, concerning businesses dangerous in respect of fire or explosion, be it enacted, with regard to the following businesses (that is to say) the manufacture of gunpowder, or of detonating powder, or of matches ignitable by friction or otherwise, or other substances liable to sudden explosion, inflammation, or ignition, or capable of causing sudden explosion, inflammation, or ignition, or of vitriol, or of turpentine, or of naphtha, or of varnish, or of fireworks, or painted table covers, and any other business dangerous, on account of the liability of the materials employed therein, to cause fire or explosion on matters coming in contact therewith, so far as relates to the erection of buildings in the neighbourhood of the place where any such business is carried on, and so far as relates to the carrying on of any such business in the neighbourhood of public ways or buildings,

"That it shall not be lawful hereafter to erect any building, of any class, nearer than fifty feet to any building which shall be in use for any such dangerous business: and that it shall not be lawful for any person to establish or newly carry on any such business either in any building or vault or in the open air at a less distance than forty feet from any public way, or than fifty feet from any other building or any vacant ground belonging to any other person than his landlord. And that if any such business be now carried on in any situation within such distances, then, from the expiration of the period of thirty years next, of the passing of this Act, it shall not be lawful to continue to carry on such business in such situations. And that if any person erect any building in the neighbourhood of any such business, contrary to this Act, then, on conviction thereof, before two justices, he shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.*; or if any person establish anew any such business, or carry on any such business, contrary to this Act, then, on conviction thereof before two justices, such person shall be liable to forfeit for every day during which such building shall remain near to such dangerous business, or during which such business shall be so carried on, a sum, not exceeding 50*l.* as the said justices shall determine: and that it shall be lawful for the justices also to award to the prosecutor such costs as shall be deemed reasonable. And that if the offender either fail or refuse to pay such penalty and costs immediately after such conviction, then they may be levied by distress of the goods and chattels of the person convicted; or if there be no such distress, then such person shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding six months, at the discretion of such justice; and that by warrant under the hands and seals of two or more justices of the peace."

Clause 53.—"And now, for the purpose of making provision concerning businesses offensive or noxious, be it enacted with regard to the following trades or businesses, that is to say—blood-boiler, bone-boiler, fellmonger, soap-boiler, tallow-melter, tripe-boiler, slaughterer of cattle, sheep, or horses, and any other business offensive or noxious, so far as relates to the erection of buildings in the neighbourhood of any such businesses; and so far as relates to the carrying on of any such business, in the neighbourhood of any public way, or of other buildings of the first, or dwelling-house class,

"That it shall not be lawful hereafter to erect any buildings of the first or dwelling-house class nearer than fifty feet to any building which shall be in use for any such offensive or noxious business. And that it shall not be lawful for any person to establish or newly carry on any such business, either in any building or vault, or in the open air, at a less distance than forty feet from any public way, or than fifty feet from any other such buildings of the first or dwelling-house class. And that if any such business be now carried on in any situation within such distances, then from the expiration of the period of thirty years next after the passing of this Act, it shall cease to be lawful to continue to carry on such business in such situation. And that if any person erect any building in the neighbourhood of any such business contrary to this Act, then, on conviction thereof before two justices, he shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.*; or if any person establish anew any such business, or carry on any such business, contrary to this Act, then, on conviction thereof before two justices, such person is hereby made liable to forfeit for every day during which such building shall remain near to such dangerous business, or during which such business shall be carried on, a sum not exceeding 50*l.* as the said justices shall determine. And that it shall be lawful for the justices, also to award to the prosecutor such costs as shall be deemed reasonable. And that if the offender either fail or refuse to pay such penalty and costs immediately after such conviction, then they may be levied by distress of the goods and chattels of the person convicted; or, if there be no such distress, then such person shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, for any time not exceeding six months, at the discretion of such justices, and that by warrant under the hands and seals of two or more justices of the peace."

FACTORIES (NO. 2) BILL.

The new Factory Bill, brought into the House by Sir James Graham and Mr. H. Manners Sutton, M.P. (the Secretary and Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department), has just made its appearance in a printed shape. It is entitled "A Bill to Amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories," and contains as many as 73 clauses, with schedules, &c. The Act is to take effect on the 1st day of October next ensuing. The factory inspectors are authorized to appoint certifying surgeons, for the purposes of the Act, and to fix the amount of their fees. Full powers are conferred on inspectors of factories for the purposes of ascertaining the real age of children to be employed therein. Special provisions are enacted for the annual lime-washing of factories, the protection of the workers in wet-spinning flax-mills, the due guarding and boxing-off of machinery, and the general prevention of accidents, as well as for their cure, if any should unfortunately occur. The hours of working for children and young persons are to be observed with strict regularity. Respecting the peculiar clauses relative to the time of working, we may simply state, that children may be employed in factories at eight years of age; that no child is to be employed more than six hours and a-half per diem, except in certain cases (hereinafter specified); that no woman above eighteen years of age is to be employed in any factory, save for the same time and in the same manner as "young persons" may be employed in factories; and that work is to cease on Saturdays at half-past four o'clock p.m. &c. In any factory in which the labour of young persons is restricted to ten hours a day, it will be lawful to employ any "child" ten hours in any one day, on three alternate days of every week, provided that such child shall not be in any way employed in the same or in any other factory on two successive days, &c. Provision is made for recovering the time lost by partial stoppages, and additional regulations made with respect to meal times and holy-days, and the attendance of children at school. Silk mills are exempted from certain provisions of this Bill, it being enacted that any child above eleven years old employed solely in the winding and throwing of raw silk may work, without any proof of having attended a school, for ten hours a day, but not after half-past four o'clock on Saturday afternoons. The 73rd or "interpretation" clause enacts, that the Factory Act as amended by this Act, and this Act, shall be construed together as one Act; that the word "child" shall be taken to mean a child under 13 years of age, and the words "young person" a person aged 13 and under 18 years of age, &c. Thus it will be seen that the disputed question of "ten" or "twelve" hours, which has already been so strongly contested in the House of Commons, is, in the present or new Bill, tacitly consigned to the shelf. The Bill will not, of course, be read a second time until after the forthcoming Easter recess.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

CRIMINAL LAW.

FRIDAY, March 29.—Lord BROUGHAM said he begged to lay a very important document upon their lordships' table. He stood there merely as the organ of the Criminal Law Commission, from whom this document emanated; and he acted in such capacity the more readily, as he had the custody of the great seal at the time this commission was issued, which had led the way to this important and satisfactory result. The report of this commission contained a digest of the whole criminal law of the country, that was, of England and Wales; but not extending to Scotland or Ireland. It comprised a complete code of criminal law, excluding procedure, which he thought was a branch of the subject which might much more conveniently and perfectly be treated of in a distinct measure. This measure, so framed, he begged to lay before their lordships, asking of them the usual courtesy of a first reading for it; whereupon he should be happy to consign it to their lordships or to her Majesty's government, hoping that they would give it as much countenance and support as they might think it deserved; their lordships, of course, not being in any way pledged to the adoption of it by allowing it to be read a first time. With respect to the separation of the law of procedure from the pure law upon criminal matters, they had the example of Napoleon's code for such a mode of procedure, and he thought there was a manifest advantage in adopting it. Again expressing a hope that the bill would meet the support of her Majesty's government, he begged to move that the Bill be read a first time.—Lord CAMPBELL said he rejoiced to see a proposition made for establishing a criminal code; but he must say he had some apprehension as to the fate of this measure, from the irregular manner in which it had been introduced. His noble and learned friend said that he presented this Bill "as the organ." He (Lord Campbell) expected to hear him go on and say "of her Majesty's government;" and he should have been very much rejoiced if he had said so; because, feeling very great anxiety upon this subject, he felt that no measure of the kind could hope to be carried into effect, except with the cordial assent and co-operation of the Government. But his noble and learned friend did not say he stood here as the "organ of the Government," but as the "organ of the Criminal Law Commission." This was a position which he could not quite understand. The commissioners, having been appointed by the Crown, had reported the result of their inquiries to the Queen's Government, and, having done so, were, to all intents and purposes, functi officio. They had nothing more to do with the matter. It was for the Government, if they thought proper, to introduce a measure in accordance with their recommendations. It would seem, however, that her Majesty's Government had either not seen this report or had not thought proper to adopt its recommendations in the form of a Bill. This task they had abandoned to his noble and learned friend, who did not hold any office under Government at present. He (Lord Campbell), therefore, felt some alarm at the manner in which this Bill had been brought in; but still he hoped that it would meet with the support of her Majesty's Government, and that the country would not long be suffered to remain under the disgrace of having no criminal code.—Lord BROUGHAM denied that there was any irregularity in the mode in which this Bill had been brought before their lordships. His noble and learned friend ought to be aware that the report upon which it was framed was a public one, and one to which, for the last fifteen months, every member of either House of Parliament could have had access. He did not understand that there was any maxim of constitutional law which required that a Bill of this or any other nature should be introduced by the Government of the Crown. This might be the most effectual mode by which a measure could be carried through Parliament; but there was not the shadow of a charge of irregularity in his (Lord Brougham) or any other member of their lordships' house bringing in any Bill which he thought proper. He concurred with his noble and learned friend, in the hope that this Bill would be taken up with favour and consideration by her Majesty's Government; but he had only to add, that if they did not, he should continue to take care of it himself.—Lord CAMPBELL explained.—Lord BROUGHAM, after referring to the cover of the blue-book, said that this report was "presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty, on the 10th of March, 1843."

MONDAY, April 1.—The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill was read a third time and passed.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

TUESDAY, April 2.—Lord CAMPBELL rose to present to their lordships a Bill of some importance as connected with the administration of justice, which had been prepared, not by himself, but by an honourable friend in the other House of Parliament, where it was intended to have been brought in, but that, as it affected the judicial jurisdiction of their lordships, it was found that in the House of Lords only could it properly be introduced. The object of the Bill was to remove a great objection which, as the law now stood, might be taken against the administration of justice in this country respecting appeals and writs of error. Their lordships would be aware, that the right of appeal was given both in civil and criminal cases; respecting the decision in an appeal in one of the latter class of cases, he had that night presented a petition in which the appeal had been against a conviction for bigamy. In civil cases, the parties prosecuting the appeal entered into recognizances of double the amount in dispute, and the execution of the judgment was suspended until the decision on the writ of error was given. There was, consequently, in civil cases, no difficulty. But in criminal cases much doubt existed as to what should be done with the party convicted while the appeal was pending—that was, whether or not the sentence should be carried into effect pending the appeal. As an instance of the inconvenience and injustice which might be inflicted by carrying the sentence into effect, notwithstanding an appeal against the conviction, suppose the case of a man sentenced to transportation,—he might be sent abroad before the appeal was decided, though it might be ultimately found that the conviction was wrong, and the party undeserving of punishment; while, on the other hand, if the sentence were unconditionally suspended until the superior court had decided, every criminal would appeal, in the hope of delaying or escaping the punishment due to his offence. To remedy this, the Bill he was about to submit provided, that upon the defendant giving security to the satisfaction of the court, and in such sum as the court might direct, that any fine that might be imposed should be paid, and that the defandant should be forthcoming to undergo any sentence which might be pronounced upon him, that sentence should be suspended until the court of appeal should have decided upon the merits of the case. He did not propose that this alteration in the law should be retrospective, and therefore he had inserted a clause providing that the Bill should not come into operation until the 1st of August next. The Bill was laid upon the table, read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

FEES TO JUSTICES' CLERKS, &c.

The Marquess of LANSDOWNE, having presented petitions from the Presbytery of Paisley and Greenock, praying for the removal of the religious tests required from professors (not connected with theological departments) on entering the Scotch Universities, moved for a return from each of the clerks of the peace at the several assizes in England and Wales, of the amount of the fees received by him during each of the last three years ending the 31st of December, 1842, his object being to bring before their lordships a tabular statement of those fees in continuation of those returns which had been already ordered in respect to the fees taken by the clerks of the magistrates. He would take that opportunity, also, of stating, that having seen the partial returns which had been laid before the other House upon this subject, his opinion was confirmed that this was a case requiring legislative interference—and legislative interference under the authority and sanction of the Government. From all the information he had obtained he was persuaded that there existed two or three classes of poor persons on whom the system, as it prevailed in regard to these fees, pressed most severely and unjustly, and whose case called for redress. In the first place, there were those poor persons, who, though guilty of small offences, were, by the practical effect of that system, subjected to a punishment out of all proportion to the offence committed; then there were those persons who were charged with those small offences, but were acquitted; and then, though declared to be guilty of no crime, were nevertheless punished by being taxed with certain fees; then again, there were those persons, who, in the protection of their own property, found it necessary to prosecute, and then, though prosecuting justly, were yet subjected themselves to punishment in the shape of pecuniary demands made upon them, and which they were compelled to pay. In regard to the first class of persons, those who were convicted and sentenced to pay such fines, this was a matter which pressed most heavily upon them, because the costs which they were called upon to pay also amounted in many cases to twenty or thirty times the amount of the fine. For instance, in one case a man had been fined 1s. and the costs were 22s. 6d. Thus, as he had stated, there was no proportion between the crime and the punishment to which the unfortunate culprit was subjected. On the other hand, the charges to which the prosecutor was liable deterred him in many cases from prosecuting the offender. A clergyman had informed him that in one case, in which a farmer had prosecuted a party for stealing some trifling articles of garden produce, he had been mulcted in the sum of 18s. as fees; and the consequence had been, that in that parish no one would now prosecute, and a system of lawlness, resulting from the impunity with which these crimes could be committed, prevailed. He was sure this was a question in which all their lordships would feel a deep interest; and he thought, in addition to the motion he made, considering the subject had been noticed both in that and the other House of Parliament, and had attracted the attention of the right hon. the Home Secre ary, it was not too much to ask the noble duke (the Duke of Wellington) now to state whether the Government had any intention to do that which no private member of either House could do so effectually—viz. to introduce some measure of legislation to remedy the evil.—The Duke of WELLINGTON replied, that his attention having been called to the subject, he had consulted with his noble friend as to the course to be adopted, and his noble friend, admitting fully its importance, had turned his attention, to it, and had now under consideration measures for remedying the grievances complained of in regard to the fees paid to the clerks of the peace, clerks of assize, and clerks to the magistrates at petty sessions. It was intended to submit those measures to Parliament during the present session. (Hear, hear.) He could not now state at what time, but he assured their lordships that it should be at the earliest opportunity. (Hear, hear.)—Lord WHARNCLIFFE was informed upon good authority that the fees which had been referred to did not go wholly to the magistrates' clerks, but were generally appropriated to defraying the incidental expenses of the trial, such as paying witnesses and constables, so that very often only a very small amount of the fees reached the clerk of the peace.—Lord BEAUMONT said a few words to the same effect. It was a mistake to suppose that the whole of the fees went to the magistrates' clerks. They received a very small proportion of them, the rest going towards the necessary expenses.—Lord REDESDALE said there was another erroneous impression which he was anxious to correct. It was mentioned as the gist of the complaint that a small fine, as of one shilling, did carry large costs, the fact being that the magistrates in inflicting such a small fine upon a poor man did so in consideration of the amount of costs; whereas, if the defendant had been a public company or a richer party, the fine inflicted would have been much higher.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE observed that the magistrates could not always tell beforehand what the costs would be.—Lord COLCHESTER said that he considered it the duty of a magistrate to inquire what the costs would be; and that such was the practice at the sessions which he attended. Besides, in many cases the Act of Parliament provided that the fine and costs should not together exceed a certain amount.—Lord CAMPBELL said that as the subject was about to be taken into consideration by her Majesty's Government, there was one point upon which he hoped they would take care to make provision, namely, that the amount of fees should not depend upon the length of the proceedings. He knew that great extortion was practised at present by swelling out the proceedings, for the mere purpose of increasing the costs at so much per folio. —The motion was then put and agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

FRIDAY, March 29.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM said he rose for the purpose of introducing a Bill for the more easy recovery of small demands in the county courts, and, before moving for leave to introduce the Bill, he felt it necessary briefly to state to the House the nature of it, and the objects for which it was intended. The House was aware that amongst the most ancient of all the courts of the country were the county courts, and that from a very early period there was no limit to the amount of value which might, under a writ of justities, be tried in those courts. There had been one great defect in those courts, namely, that the defendant had a power of bringing a suit back to Westminster-hall without security for the costs under the writ of justities, but it had since been provided that if the defendant removed the suit to Westminster-hall he should enter into security for the costs of the removal, and the consequence of that provision had been, that actions for considerable sums were now tried in those courts. Another reason was the cumbrous machinery, which had been removed at various times in the superior courts, was retained in the county courts. The courts at Westminster were remodelled from time to time, and thus, much of that machinery was avoided which was retained in the county courts. A committee of that House sat in 1839, to inquire into the subject, and he (Sir James Graham) was a member of that committee, which made many recommendations with respect to those courts, which recommendations were not as yet embodied in any general Act; yet by an arrangement with the other House of Parliament, with respect to local Acts for the trial of small demands in courts of requests, most of those recommendations were embodied in those local Acts since 1839, no less than forty having been passed since that time. The effect of that arrangement, allowing the recommendations into the local Acts, had been, that the Government had the advantage in introducing this Bill, of having very considerable experience as to the operation of the recommendations. The experience which they had of those amendments convinced them that their general adoption would be attended with great benefit. There would be a great difficulty in the simultaneous introduction of a measure of so extensive a nature as the County Courts Bill into every county in England, not gradually, but at once, and it would be also attended with great expense. The Bill which he was about to bring in would, however, not involve the necessity of effecting the change at once in all the counties of England, for it proposed to give to her Majesty's Privy Council the power to bring the Act into operation at the discretion of the ministers of the Crown gradually, and as they had reason to believe it was necessary. It would assimilate the county courts to the courts of requests, which had been improved by local Acts since 1839, and which were presided over by judges who were competent to discharge the duties that devolved on them in that capacity, being all barristers of five years' standing. The judges in the county courts were to be paid salaries, but the clerks were to be paid by fees, with a proviso that in any courts hereafter to be constituted, the clerks might be paid by salaries, without any claim for compensation. In a former Bill, which he (Sir James Graham) introduced to the House, the sum to be recovered was limited to 10*l*.; but in the courts of requests, which were modelled on the recommendations of the committee of 1839, the jurisdiction was 15*l*. and he (Sir J. Graham) thought it would be expedient to have the jurisdiction co-extensive with the courts of requests, in consequence of which he proposed that the jurisdiction should extend to 15*l*. in the county courts. The jurisdiction was to extend to cases of simple contract, of damages for breach of the peace, of unlawful holding of property in certain cases, or, in other words, actions of trover in their simplest form, and amongst matters excluded, were to be all matters affecting title. In order to reduce the expenses in those courts, he proposed the simplest form of proceeding—the plaintiff was to serve a summons on the defendant seven days before the trial proceeded; and if the plaintiff and defendant resided in one district, it would be compulsory on the plaintiff to summon the defendant to the county court; but if the plaintiff resided out of the district, then the plaintiff might sue the defendant either in the county court or the superior courts. It made new provisions for enabling both parties to be examined in their own suit, and if they required a jury, the judge might grant it, but the jury should not consist of a larger number than five; the parties giving evidence might be examined on oath, and there was to be given a power to enforce the judgments of the Court by execution against the body or goods. With regard to removing the proceedings to the superior courts, they might be removed or a new trial obtained by parties dissatisfied with the judgment, on their giving security to abide the judgment of the superior court, and also security for the costs of the proceedings. It was also proposed in this Bill to transfer to the county courts the jurisdiction of two magistrates, with respect to the right of ejectment at present possessed, where tenants occupied houses of a rent not exceeding 20*l*. yearly. Those were the provisions of the Bill, and he (Sir James Graham) was not aware that he had omitted any important provision in the statement which he had made to the House. He should again remark, that it was no new experiment, for they had the experience of the way in which the recommendations of the committee of 1839 had worked where they were introduced into the courts of request; and he was confident, if the House should permit it to pass, it would be found to effect a great practical improvement in the jurisdiction which it would establish with respect to small sums. He was convinced that it would be of great public benefit to introduce gradually those alterations, of the operation of which they had now considerable experience; and this Bill would enable them to do that without great expense, and without any unconstitutional proceeding. The right honourable baronet concluded by moving for leave to bring in a Bill for the more easy recovery of small demands in the county courts of England.—Mr. HAWES directed the attention of the House to the oppressive effect of enormous fees accumulating upon small debts, and to the importance of enacting, that in all cases of debt under a certain amount, the execution hould only be against the goods of the party.—Mr. SHAW thought much advantage would result, in legislating upon this subject, from following the example of the civil bill courts in Ireland, than which he believed no system worked better. With regard to the proposed power of examining the parties to the suit, he apprehended it was open to some objection. In the civil bills courts the discretion was with the judge, and the practice worked admirably. If they compelled the parties to attend and give evidence, much inconvenience and injustice also would arise. He thought it a dangerous principle to adopt, and it would be a dangerous experiment to allow the parties to the suit to be examined in their own behalf. Again, in respect to the power of appeal, the practice as it existed in Ireland might be resorted with advantage; that practice was that the appeal should be to the next going judge of assize. If they allowed an appeal to the superior courts, they would be giving the rich man the power to oppress the poor man.—Mr. WARBURTON presumed there was to be but one appeal given under this Bill (hear); that was, that there was to be no appeal from the decisions of the courts of Westminster. ("No," from Sir J. Graham.) With regard to the vird voce examination of the parties to the suit, he hoped the Bill, in this respect, would remain unaltered. In bankruptcy, when the amount of property in question was often very considerable, both parties were examined; and he could not understand why a course of procedure which was held to be good in one court should be bad in another. As to the power of granting a jury, he hoped it would not be given until both parties had been examined, and it was ascertained whether they were prepared mutually to make any and what admissions, as by that course much unnecessary expense might be avoided.—Mr. CRIPPS said that the practice in the courts at Westminster Hall was not to grant a new trial in any case in which the damages found were under 20*l*.; and he did not think, in respect to the small sums which would be litigated under this Bill, that any danger need be apprehended if no appeal were given (hear, hear); though, perhaps, it might be a dangerous principle to lay down, that no appeal should lie. In reference to the proposal for examing the parties to the suit, it was somewhat difficult to offer any opinion. It was difficult to say that the parties should be examined in their small suits, when, in the Law of Evidence Bill of last year, they had excluded the parties in larger suits from giving evidence in their own cases. —Sir J. GRAHAM said, in respect to the suggestion of his right honourable friend (Mr. Shaw), that he had already stated the reason why he preferred the practice as it existed in England to that of the civil bill courts in Ireland. The House would be aware that there were no fewer than 120 local courts established by Acts of Parliament now existing in the country, forty of them having been established since 1839; and with regard to those forty, the limit was now 15*l*. This limit, which he found established in various and most important localities, comprising our largest cities and the largest populations, he adopted, and in those localities exclusively, since 1839, parties had been and were examined, in their own cases, not only without any bad effects, but with the most advantageous results, in the same way as he now proposed they should be examined in the county courts generally. With respect to the observations of the honourable gentleman the member for Lambeth, relative to the question of whether process should be directed against person or goods, the honourable gentleman would recollect that that question had been mooted in the committee. The opinion of the honourable gentleman was against any extension of power as against person, but, on the other hand, the feelings of the committee generally inclined against the honourable gentleman. In several Bills since introduced the principle had been sanctioned of instituting process against person, failing goods. It was a question of delicacy and importance, but he did believe that, if it were for the advantage of the poor that credit should be given, he feared that unless there were a remedy against the person, the credit system would be stopped. (Hear, hear.) He concluded by asking leave to bring in the Bill.—After a few words from Captain PECHELL, leave was given.

INFERIOR COURTS BAILIFFS BILL.

Sir J. GRAHAM (in an almost inaudible tone) then asked leave to bring in another Bill in reference to bailiffs in courts of requests and county courts. At the present moment parties taking a summons may employ any bailiff, and frequently did employ as such persons who were quite irresponsible; the consequence was, the existence of great abuses in the system. He proposed to limit the power of employing bailiffs. In suing for a debt on summons, such bailiffs should only be employed who were recognized officers of courts of requests, or county courts, to be created.—Leave was given to bring in the Bill.

JUSTICES' CLERKS' FEES.

MONDAY, April 1.—Lord DUNCAN said, that with reference to the motion of his noble friend the member for Lincolnshire, on the subject of the fees payable to magistrates' clerks, he was anxious to know whether the Bill to be introduced by Government on that subject was to be introduced before Easter or not, or if after the recess, at what time?—Mr. M. SUTTON said, in reference to what fell from him when he opposed the motion for a committee, that he had then stated that the subject was at that time under the consideration of his right hon. friend. The Bill was in preparation, and he hoped that no great time would elapse before it would be subjected to the consideration of the House, but he did not pledge himself or Government as to the course which they intended to pursue. It was impossible for him to give any direct assurance beyond this, that the matter was under the consideration of Government. He was able to state that it was not the intention of Government to bring in any Bill on the subject before the Easter recess.—Mr. HAWES said, that the motion of his noble friend (Lord Worsley) had been withdrawn on the understanding that the Bill was then under consideration, and would be before the House before the present time. He wished now to ask if the Bill was to be introduced during the present session?—Mr. M. SUTTON could not state to the House what would be the course pursued by Government.

IRISH REGISTRATION AND FRANCHISE BILL.

By the special permission of the House, Lord Eliot's motion, for leave to bring in Bills regulating the Parliamentary and municipal franchises in Ireland, was brought on before the orders of the day, which, on Mondays and Fridays, are regularly entitled to precede notices of motion. Lord ELIOT expressed his belief that the system of registration now established in England was a satisfactory one, and he proposed to establish a like system in Ireland, with only these material differences—that the polling-places should be appointed by the Lord-Lieutenant; that the anual revision should be by the assistant-barristers; and that the appeal from them should be to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, seven judges being made for this purpose a quorum. He proposed that the names on the present register should be transferred to the new one, there to remain undisturbed for the rest of the term for which they were then enrolled, unless when the tenant should have parted with some portion of his qualification. For the purpose of defining the qualification itself with respect to counties, the Bill would contain a clause giving effect to the construction which the majority of the judges had put upon the phrase "beneficial interest." He admitted that this definition, which was the adoption of the solvent tenant test, would displace a great proportion, perhaps nearly two-thirds, or about 25,000 of the 40,000 voters now registered for this kind of franchise; and in order to restore a sufficient constituency, he proposed to give the right of voting to every occupier rated to the poor on an amount of 30*l*. or upwards. When all deductions should have been made, this would give about 55,000 electors instead of the 25,000 struck off, making so far, on the balance, an addition of about 30,000 constituents. To these it was proposed to add, yet further, those who possessed a freehold of inheritance or a lease-hold, renewable for ever, of the value of 5*l*. a-year. These interests were intended to confer the franchise without actual occupation by the proprietor. With respect to the Parliamentary franchise of cities and boroughs, the proposal of Government was, that it should belong to every man paying poor-rate, borough-rate, and police-tax. He trusted that this plan would be regarded as a full redemption of the pledge contained in the Queen's speech, and that the new electors would consider the trust thus conferred upon them as given, not for the benefit of their own peculiar districts alone, but of the whole kingdom. The noble lord then proceeded to explain the object of the other Bill, relating to the Municipal Corporations. That object was to extend to the Irish corporations the principal of the English Municipal Bill, by giving a vote to every inhabitant who had paid certain town-rates for a residence of three years.

CODIFICATION OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.

TUESDAY, April 2.—Mr. EWART said, he would ask whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to propose any digest or code of criminal law founded upon the report of the Criminal Law Commissioners? He would also ask the hon. and learned gentleman the member for Lewes, whether he intended to press his motion respecting probates upon landed property?—Sir R. PEEL.—Am I expected to answer both the questions? (A laugh.) —Mr. EWART intimated, very seriously, that he only wished to press the first.—Sir R. PEEL.—Then I am not prepared to say that it is my intention to bring in a bill to embody all the criminal law of England in one code. (A laugh.) Indeed, at present I do not contemplate any measure upon the subject.—Mr. ELPHINSTONE intimated that he should postpone his motion.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

Mr. GLADSTONE, in a brief statement, moved that the House should go into a committee of the whole House; and this being done, he moved resolutions, on which several Bills are to founded, for the purpose of effecting the following objects:—

"For the registration of Joint Stock Companies, and for conferring on such companies certain privileges of corporate bodies, subject to the payment of certain fees, and on certain conditions and regulations, and for preventing the establishment of fraudulent companies.

"For the regulation of Joint Stock Companies.

"For facilitating and improving the remedies at law and equity, in reference to Joint Stock Companies, their members, directors, and other officers, whether inter se or in relation to persons not being members thereof, and for winding up the affairs of companies unable to meet their pecuniary engagements; and

"For enabling private partnerships to register the names of their partners, and to sue and be sued in the name of their firm."

Some discussion took place, and the resolutions were then agreed to, granting leave to bring in Bills to effect the foregoing objects.

CROWN OFFICE, April 2.—Members returned to serve in this present Parliament:—Borough of Christchurch—The Hon. Edward Alfred John Harris, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir George Henry Rose, who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Manor of Northstead. Town and Port of Hastings—Musgrave Briscoe, of Coghurst, in the county of Sussex, esq. in the room of the Right Hon. Joseph Planta, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE continue to receive a great number of letters on the subject of the fees to Magistrates' Clerks, some opposing, some cordially supporting the proposed plan of payment by salary instead of by fees. Provided the salary be sufficiently liberal, we presume that all would prefer that to the uncertain source arising from fees, which the generosity of a large portion of the magistrates' clerks so often leads them to forego in favour of the poor. But will the magistrates act liberally towards them in this respect? That is the question. We shall watch the forthcoming Government Bill with particular attention, and we recommend the clerks to be on the alert. Our columns are at their service for any fair purpose of self-protection.

It will be seen that another county, Yorkshire, has directed the notice of its Quarter Sessions to be advertised in the LAW TIMES for the future.

The following letter, on the subject of Magistrates' Clerks' fees, has appeared in the Morning Chronicle:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

"SIR,—I am obliged to you for publishing my letter to you of the 9th inst. It is not for me to say who committed the inaccuracy to which I called your attention, but simply to prove that it is one. I willingly undertake the latter, in order that a true statement of the facts, as they relate to the Collompton division, may appear.

"The return required by the Secretary of State, in 1843, from the clerk of each petty session in England and Wales, was, 'A return of the amount of fees received by him during each of the last three years, ending the 31st of December, 1842; also, a return for each of the same years of the number of convictions, specifying in each case, separately, the amount of the fine or penalty; and also the amount of the costs, and if paid, to what purpose the fine or penalty was applied; if not paid, the time of imprisonment awarded, and the expense of sending the offender to prison.'

"A return (exclusive of Tiverton and Bampton) was made by me, in answer to the first branch of these questions, namely, the amount of fees received by the clerk, 'stating that he had received, in 1840, 106*l*. 5s. 9d.; in 1841, 117*l*. 5s. 6d.; in 1842, 147*l*. 7s. 6d.'

"These sums formed the gross amount of clerks' fees in those years, including fees paid on convictions, amounting to 26*l*. 12s.

"A return of the number of convictions, specifying the particulars required by the Secretary of State, was also made by me at the same time, and for the same years.

"The amount of clerks' fees thereon was, in

1841 (44 convictions)	10	16	6
	£26	12	0

"The variance, as to the number of convictions, is to be explained by the supposition that, in the parliamentary return, which you, no doubt, quote correctly, the convictions throughout are reckoned singly, whilst, in several cases, there were more than one offender, sometimes as many as three, each of whom was convicted, each fined a penalty, and each charged with costs. The inaccuracy as to the larger sums I can only suppose to have arisen from their being considered to apply to convictions alone, whereas they were the entire proceeds from all the justice business in those years.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"FREDERICK LEIGH, Division Clerk.

"Cullompton, March 15, 1844."

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—The Presbyterian Chapel, otherwise called the Old Meeting-house, situate in the Horse-fair, Banbury, in the county of Oxford, in the district of the Banbury union. The Independent Chapel, situated at the Brickfields, Stratford, in the parish of West Ham, in the county of Essex, in the district of West Ham union. The Wesleyan Methodists' Centenary Chapel, situated in St. Saviourgate, in the parish of St. Saviour, in the city of York, in the district of York, in the city and county of York. Baptist Chapel, Usk, Monmouthshire. Wesleyan Centenary Chapel, Scarborough.

LAW LECTURE.

On Tuesday evening last, a paper on Conveyances was read by J. J. S. Wharton, esq. of Magdalen-hall, Oxford, &c. &c. at his chambers, 36, Lincoln's-inn-fields. In a former lecture (a notice of which appeared in the LAW TIMES), the theory of Uses was developed; the present lecture exhibited the practical working of such theory in Conveyances of real estates, treating of, at the same time, the assurances at the common law.

The lecturer first defined a conveyance, shewing the difference between indentures and deeds poll, and the reason a party is estopped by his own deed. He then sketched the requisites to be observed in the preparation of conveyances, remarked upon those persons who laboured under disability to contract, and wherein a good or voluntary consideration differed from a valuable or binding one, and the consequences resulting therefrom. The equity principle of decreeing specific performance of parol agreements, partly and substantially performed, although in contradiction to the positive Statute of Frauds, was proved to be founded upon pure morality. The formal parts of a deed were then given, the technical meaning of the word "premises," the classification of the parties according to their several interests; the effect of a party not named in the premises being named in the habendum; the general rules relating to covenants; the time from which deeds take effect; the efficacy of the date; the formalities of the execution, and the difference between absolute and conditional delivery, were, in their order, succinctly treated of.

The learned gentleman then went through the several circumstances rendering a deed void ab initio, and also those which would set it aside by matter ex post facto. After which he addressed himself to the conveyances deriving their effect from the common law, and to the particular purposes to which each is adapted in actual practice. The original or primary deeds were first defined, as Feoffments, the ceremony to be observed in completing them, and the consequences of the two different species of livery of seisin; grants and gifts, and the meaning of things "lying in livery" and "lying in grant;" leases; exchanges, and their dangers; and partitions. Then followed the secondary or derivative deeds, as releases, and the several modes of their operation; confirmations, and the distinction between void and voidable instruments; surrender, the exception to the general rule that the surrenderee must have the larger estate, and surrenders in fact and in law, assignments, and the liability of assignees; and defeazances and their requisites.

The conveyances deriving their effect from the Statute of Uses were then considered in the following order:—1st. A bargain and sale, its origin, and equitable construction before the statute, and its operation since; and the enactment of the Statute of Enrolments. 2nd. Lease and release, how it supplies the place of livery of seisin, its material difference from a feoffment, and the particular mode of operation 3rd. Appointments and declaration of Uses, and their distinction. 4th. A covenant to stand seized, how distinguished from a bargain and sale, when it operates as a bargain and sale, and the converse.

"There are two purposes," observed the lecturer, "which should be the objects of a student's attainment in his application to master the knowledge of conveyance—the one, the principles of the science, and their operation upon a formal and practical proceeding; the other, the adaptation of such practical proceeding to the individual necessities of society. This teaches him how to consider his future clients' interests, and the best course to adopt in sustaining and protecting their rights; that gives him a knowledge and facility to carry the advice he has given into actual practice. It is not enough to know the mechanism of a certain kind of conveyance—the student must learn something beyond this; he must learn the particular susceptibilities of such instrument, and the various purposes to which it can be applied. The combination of these two purposes is positively necessary to be attained to qualify a student in this important and interesting branch of legal science."

After drawing attention to the scheme of the lecture, which was laid upon the table, the lecturer thus continued:—"One caution in studying the practical working of conveyancing I cannot refrain from giving to you, and it is this—while acquiring the forms prescribed by law, by which its authority is administered, do not lose sight of the real and dignified spirit of our laws—those principles which promote private justice and the public good—which regulate our commerce, governing the actions and relieving the necessities of mankind. Always remember the connection between the technicality of our laws, and the purpose to which it conduces. Assign to forms their proper place; but if you become 'mere men of forms,' and pride yourselves in the technical intricacies and obscurity of the science, you then quibble, which is not only dishonourable, but positively contrary to the equitable comprehension of our jurisprudence. Stoop not to such low cunning, which is the wisdom of the vulgar, whose very essence is a composition of concealment and fraud. Cultivate that inward sense of justice, that, soaring above misrepresentation, and scorning those mean advantages which are the choicest food of the crafty spirit, kindles self-respect, and thus forbids the legal adviser to engage in a case of notorious wrong."

The lecturer concluded amidst the applause of a very attentive and highly respectable auditory. A vote of thanks for the delivery of this able lecture was duly presented and accepted, and a paper on Trusts promised at no distant period.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE MARRIAGE LAW.

The following is an extract from an opinion of G. S. Holroyd on the validity of a marriage at Gibraltar, where the ceremony was performed by a person not in orders (the document has just been presented to Parliament):—

"I have not been able, notwithstanding a diligent search, to find any case, except the case of Haydon v. Gould (1 Salk. 119), where it has been directly decided that the marriage ceremony performed between a man and a woman by a person not in orders was or was not valid, unless the decisions that a contract per verba de præsenti is the marriage itself are so considered. The question was argued in a settlement case before Lord Chief Justice Lee, and the other judges of the Court of King's Bench, and was thought by them to be a question of great moment, but they did not decide it. (See Burr. Settlement Cases, p. 232.)

"But, upon the best consideration I can give the case, it appears to me that by the law of England previously to or independently of the Marriage Act, which does not affect this case, the present marriage, unless so far as the law of Gibraltar, where it was celebrated, and which law must prevail in this case, may differ from the law of England, and invalidate it, would be deemed a valid marriage.

"A contract of marriage per verba de præsenti has been frequently said to be, and was, I think, law previous to the Marriage Act, and is so now in places where the Marriage Act is not in force; but where the rest of the law of England relating to marriage does in general prevail, it was so much the marriage itself if followed by cohabitation and consummation, that it avoided any subsequent marriage, however solemnly performed in facie ecclesiæ, between another person and either of the parties, living the other, and was so, until the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 8, even without such cohabitation and consummation. (See 2 Salk. 437, 438; Swinburne, of Espousals, 74; 6 Mod. 155; 1 T. R. 99; Peake's Cases at Nisi Prius, 232.) It is true that in Perkins, in the place above cited, it is said that if a man seized in fee make a contract with I. S. and he die before the marriage solemnized between them, she shall not have dower, for she never was his wife. That is perfectly correct, if he is understood as speaking of a mere contract of marriage—that is, a contract per verba de futuro, to marry at a subsequent time; and I think he must be considered as so speaking, for in that case, until solemnization, it is no marriage, and she is not his wife. He is not to be considered as speaking there of a contract of marriage per verba de præsenti, and such a contract per verba de præsenti is contained in the marriage ceremony of the Church of England, whether that ceremony be performed by or be repeated by the parties after a person who is a minister of that Church or not. Such a contract is not merely a contract of marriage, but is more—namely, ipsum matrimonium. It may be true, as Lord Holt says, in 6 Mod. 155, that if the parties cohabited together after a contract per verba de præsenti, and before the regular celebration of it in facie ecclesiæ, they were punishable by ecclesiastical censures; but that was not because the marriage was invalid, but because, in the celebration of it, they had, contrary to the canons, neglected to perform the ceremonials required to be performed by the Church. In Wigmore's case (2 Salk. 438), in the 5th year of Queen Anne, Lord Holt appears to have held a marriage, where the husband was an Anabaptist, solemnized according to the forms of the own religion, a good marriage. It is not stated whether the person performing the marriage ceremony was a priest in holy orders; probably he was not.

"In this case it does not distinctly appear that they held the marriage void, for they held that the wife and the issue of the marriage, who were in no fault (though the wife appears to me to have been in that respect in the same situation with the husband), might entitle themselves by such marriage to a temporal right. The report of the decision is not very clear or intelligible, but it seems to me most probable that, without declaring the marriage void, it went entirely upon this, that as the administration was a right due to him as husband by the ecclesiastical law, they would not grant the administration to him, as he had not complied with the forms of that law which the Church prescribed in the solemnization of his marriage. I think that this cannot be taken as contrary to the other cases as a decision further than this; notwithstanding the observation at the end of the case, that the constant form of pleading marriage is, that it was per Presbyterium sacris ordinibus constitutum, which, on reference to the books of entries, I find not to have been the form of pleading in our law (Haydon v. Gould, 1 Salk. 119). Marriages, too, in England, by priests of the Church of Rome, have been held good, even when such priests were not tolerated in England. (See 1 East's Crown Law, 469, 470; 2 Burn's Eccles. Law, 473.)

"G. S. HOLROYD."

"Gray's-inn, Dec. 11, 1804."

ALARMING ILLNESS OF LORD ABINGER.—We regret to state that the latest accounts received of this noble and learned judge's illness give not the slightest hope of his recovery. His lordship having sat throughout Monday in the Crown Court at Bury, entertained the magistrates, as is customary, in the evening. Immediately after dinner he was attacked by the alarming fit in which he now lies; he appears occasionally to be sensible of what passes around him, but is totally deprived of the faculty of speech. This sudden and severe affliction is participated in, not merely by the members of his lordship's own family, but by the bar and the entire public, who held in the highest respect his profound acquirements as a judge and his character as a citizen.

WHITEHALL, March 14.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Bennett Freeland, of Steyning, in the county of Sussex, gent.; William Way Buckell, of Newport, in the Isle of Wight, gent.; John Nansom, of the city of Carlisle, gent.; and James Nathaniel Cartwright, of Dunstable, in the county of Bedford, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE, March 29.—The Lord Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household has appointed George Dodd, of Grosvenor-place, in the county of Middlesex, esq. M.P. to be one of the Gentlemen of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Chamber in Ordinary.

DOWNING-STREET, April 1.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Legh Master, esq. to be Registrar of the Supreme Court and Clerk of the Arraigns, at Gibraltar.

It is reported that Mr. Serjeant Stephen, one of the Commissioners in the Bristol Court of Bankruptcy, has recently received a large accession of fortune by the death of a relative.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT.—Copies of the Order in Council issued in consequence of the Act of last session, intituled "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act," and of the instructions given to Her Majesty's consuls and diplomatic agents in foreign countries, on the subject of criminal jurisdiction over British subjects in those countries, have just been printed on the motion of Mr. R. Monckton Milnes, M. P. for Pontefract. Only one Order in Council has been issued (dated October 2, 1843), and two despatches transmitted from the Foreign-office.

DIVORCE OF AN ENGLISH MARRIAGE IN FRANCE.—The Civil Tribunal of Paris on Wednesday pronounced a sentence of separation between an English married couple named Langley. The suit was instituted by the wife on the ground of adultery on the part of the husband, who, it should seem, was equally desirous of getting rid of his partner, for he did not, as he might have done, being a foreigner and married according to the laws of his own country, plead against the jurisdiction of the court. The wife demanded a division of their property; but the court, feeling itself bound by the laws and customs of England, refused this claim, and decreed the husband to make her an annual allowance of 1,200f. It also ordered that the children of the marriage should, in consequence of the conduct of the husband, be delivered into the care of their mother. The separation will of course hold good only in France, and would not be admitted in England as a mensâ et thoro.—Galignani's Messenger.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

"LOOK TO YOURSELVES."

SIR,—In reference to an article which appeared under the above title, in your last number, I beg to observe, that for some years past and up to the present time, Mr. M'Ghee, the Vestry Clerk of Saint Pancras parish, has been in the habit of conducting appeals in settlement cases, and in prosecutions connected with parochial affairs, the briefs to counsel being indorsed the "Overseers of St. Pancras."—As Mr. M'Ghee is not a member of the Profession, there can be no question he is now (whatever doubt formerly might have prevailed, but which I never could entertain) acting illegally, and liable to a prosecution for so doing. Mr. M'Ghee not being the only Vestry Clerk of several of the metropolitan parishes so acting, it behoves the Profession to put down any such illegal assumption of its rights, and surely the Incorporated Law Society ought to be the organ for asserting and maintaining such rights.

Trusting that some notice of this information (the truth of which I can verify) may be taken by the Society, or by some other of the numerous and respectable Law Societies now flourishing, I beg to subscribe myself,

Sir, your obedient servant,

A SUBSCRIBER.

P.S. I inclose my name and address.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A valued correspondent transmits the following on the now interesting subject of Justices' Clerks' Fees :—

In reading the LAW TIMES of the 30th March, I observe a letter signed "A Justice's Clerk," upon the subject of Justices' Clerks' Fees; and I should feel obliged by your inserting this letter, as a corroboration of his statements, in your next publication. So many statements have been circulated by means of the papers, both as regards the fees taken by justices' clerks and also as regards the conduct of these gentlemen themselves—and, as to the latter, most derogatory to them as gentlemen—that I think it is high time such statements should be contradicted, and the public mind disabused in the matter. I am clerk to the justices of a large county division, and I can safely echo the statement of "A Justice's Clerk" that there are a vast number of cases which come before the justices in which the clerk never gets a farthing from either complainant or defendant; and as to enforcing the payment of fees from such complainants when the defendants go to gaol, the idea alone is preposterous and ridiculous in the extreme, unless some justices' clerks, better informed in such matters than myself, are skilled in the art of "getting blood out of a post;" and in many of these cases where the clerk receives no fees, he is actually at the expense of from one to two shillings for the forms used by him. But, presuming in all cases where the defendant went to gaol the complainant did actually pay the costs, what worse is he off than the plaintiff in an action at common law, where the defendant renders to prison, and in which case the cost of the action would fall on the plaintiff? And although the fine is in some cases only sixpence, and the costs from 8s. to 12s. is it not so in an action for debt, where the debt is 5*l.* or 6*l.* and the costs 25*l.* or 30*l.*? And though there are now and then cases so petty and trifling that the justices (were there no costs to be paid by the defendant) might only inflict a penalty of 6d. yet, generally speaking, the costs are virtually, though not in fact, a portion of the penalty, inasmuch as it is the invariable custom for justices to inform themselves of the amount of costs, before inflicting the fine, and according to the amount of costs, so they set a smaller or greater penalty to meet the justice of the case. With regard to the lower order of persons (and who are the most frequent complainants for a common assault), not once in ten times are the costs paid by the complainant, where the defendant goes to gaol. But the costs are generally paid by the higher class of complainants in cases of convictions for fence breaking, damaging trees, malicious trespasses, and game; and here is where the shoe pinches. The Act will be of no benefit to the poor man, because at this moment he rarely ever pays any fees, but it will be of advantage to the rich. But why, I would ask, should I be called on to contribute, (in the shape of my mite towards the justice's clerk's salary) to maintain the rich man's property or preserve his game?

With regard to the poor man, so far from being beneficial to him, it will be the greatest possible bane —even now, at times, petty cases among this class are with ill feeling brought before the justices; but with salaried clerk what will be the inevitable consequence? Why, that in every justice's division, complainants of this class, knowing that, under any circumstances, they will be called upon to pay no expenses, will bring before the justices the most petty, trifling, frivolous complaints (which I humbly opine it ought to be the policy of the law to prevent), and it will matter little to the complainant whether the case is dismissed or not, as he will have partly satisfied his animosity and revenge by the inconvenience he has put the defendant to by compelling him, at the loss of his time, to attend before the justices. But even worse than this, it will have also the sad effect of setting the poor man against his neighbour poor man, and of creating in every parish lasting contentions, animosity, and strife among the poor, for this reason, that every petty offence (which before never came before the justices, but was cooled over and forgotten, and the parties again returned to neighbourly terms) will now, in the heat of the moment, be brought before the bench, and the spark which (from the wholesome damp created by the complainant's knowledge that he might be possibly called on to pay the costs if the case should be dismissed) would have quietly gone out of itself in a few hours or days, will, by the knowledge that no costs can attach to the complainant, be fanned into a lasting, undying flame, by the case being carried before the justices; and thus, from a petty offence in the first instance, or even only a supposed offence, a lasting difference between neighbours of the poorer class may be created, and they may even be led to commit higher crimes against each other.

With regard to the fees received by justices' clerks, it is proverbial that they are so small, that but for the number of cases, it could not be worth any gentleman's attention. And considering how intricate the magisterial law of this country has now become, the great length of time necessarily employed in preparing informations, convictions, and warrants of distress, orders of maintenance, &c. &c. justices' clerks are, without any exception, the worst paid body of men in England. The responsibility attached to the office as regards the preparing the necessary forms so as to preclude any possibility of action against the justices, or expenses to parishes in orders of removal, &c. &c. is very great; and yet 3s. 6d. is the utmost a justice's clerk is paid for any one of those most difficult forms to prepare, and upon which depends whether a justice shall have to pay considerable damages and costs, or a parish pay some fifty or a hundred pounds, and be obliged to maintain a family of paupers, who do not belong to them, for the rest of their lives. For what I have received 3s. I have more than once paid counsel one guinea to prepare, and even then it has been invalid and upset. Indeed, so badly are they paid by fees, taking into consideration the number of cases in which they get no fees at all, and the expense they are at for proper forms, &c. &c. that but for what I have before stated, viz. that it would be an injury rather than a benefit to the poor man, and that it would be unjust to call upon the public to contribute (by salaried justice's clerk) to the maintenance of the property of the more wealthy, or the preservation of their game, the justice's clerk would, in my opinion, be far better off were he to be properly paid by a salary, which, of course, must be considerably more than what he, up to this time, would have annually received had all his fees been paid, inasmuch as there can be no doubt that his duties will be considerably increased; but with regard to the amount of salary, I perfectly agree with "A Justice's Clerk," that it should not be left to the justices, but I would suggest that her Majesty's Principal Secretary for the Home Department should fix the amount of salary, and that it should be paid out of the consolidated fund, rather than out of the county or other rates, and I think the justices themselves would prefer this course.

With regard to the length of time occupied in my magisterial office, independent of the day of the Bench meeting, I can safely affirm that the time of one clerk is almost daily taken up, and that I am myself occupied, independent of the before-mentioned day, upon an average one day and a half in every week upon cases brought before the justices in the course of the week, upon which I am obliged to attend, frequently at the greatest possible inconvenience to myself in my profession as a solicitor; and rather than be then called away, I would frequently have given treble the amount of fees received upon the case, which perhaps has occupied me some two, three, or four hours. I have been called upon to attend a case which has lasted from eleven till half-past five, and upon which I have never received one farthing, the complainant being a poor person, and the defendants being committed to gaol.

I fear I have already been much too lengthy to claim space for the insertion of this letter in your truly valuable publication; but I would, before conclusion, make one observation with regard to the justices themselves, which is this—that, considering the present intricacy of magisterial law, the unjust, though considerable liability every justice is subject to for actions for damages in the event of any informality in the technicalities of their processes, which have now become so special that it is frequently necessary to have them prepared by counsel or special pleader; and considering, also, that should any enactment be passed for the payment of salaries to justices' clerks, the duties of justices, and therefore their liabilities, will be very considerably increased;—considering all these, some clause should be embodied in the same Act saving harmless justices from actions for any of their proceedings, unless malice be shewn; and that the justice should be at liberty to put in, as a defence to any action upon any of his proceedings, the examinations taken before him, and that, in the event of those examinations proving that the plaintiff in the action had been properly convicted, a verdict should be taken for the defendant; in fact, that no informality whatever in any process bonâ fide issued should subject a magistrate to an action for damages, or to pay the costs of removing same, or the prisoner committed under it, to the Court of Queen's Bench for discharge, where he has been properly convicted, though the conviction or commitment has been improperly drawn up. Every defendant must necessarily know of what he has been convicted, and for what he has been committed; and it therefore appears preposterous to say he has a right to be told the cause in certain set words in a commitment, and that unless he is so told, the commitment must be considered bad and the prisoner discharged.

TESTIMONIAL TO ROWLAND HILL.

We are so anxious to forward the object of the following letter, that we readily publish any suggestion that may aid the design.

Allow me to suggest to your numerous readers a plan for promoting the subscription to this very desirable object, which I have myself adopted.

Take a small box, perforate the lid so as to admit a penny, tack one side of a small card or piece of parchment inside the lid over the orifice, and secure and paste over the whole box, so that it cannot, without detection, be subjected to idle or fraudulent curiosity, and place it in the parlour, or in any more public situation. The box may be made more or less ornamental according to the taste of the collector, or the situation in which it is to be placed. After a few months it may be opened before you or some public functionary, and its contents publicly acknowledged and remitted to the national fund. Any persons contributing gold, or more than a trifle, may wrap their offerings in small pieces of paper, containing their names or any designations they may choose, so as to be individually recognized and acknowledged.

A respected correspondent puts the following query:—

SIR,—In the LAW TIMES of the 30th March, I find the report of a case tried before Mr. Justice Cresswell (Reg. v. Whale), in which his lordship decided that upon the production of a certificate of the previous conviction of a prisoner it was necessary to prove the hand-writing of the Clerk of the Peace who gave such certificate.

Upon referring to the Act of Parliament relating to this point (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 11, it is provided that a certificate "is, upon proof of identity, sufficient evidence of the first conviction without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same."

I am not aware of any subsequent Act in any manner altering the above Act of Parliament. Unless, therefore, there is some such Act, his lordship would appear to have given a wrong decision.

Can any of your correspondents enlighten the Profession upon the point?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1844.

ADDRESS.

WITH the present number commences the second year of the existence of the LAW TIMES, and we should be guilty of gross ingratitude were we not to acknowledge the generous and confiding support it has received from the Profession, who have adopted it as their organ, and to whom it is indebted for the proud position whereto, in so short a period, it has been elevated.

We frankly confess, that, twelve months ago, when amid mingled hopes and fears and in the fever of uncertainty we plunged into this huge undertaking, we should not have dared the adventure had we calculated rightly the risk, the toil, the cost. Fortunately, these were not, and, indeed, could not be, estimated, till actual experience had shewn what was demanded to carry out the design; so the plunge was made in happy ignorance of the danger.

Being in, the only chance of safety lay in brave combatting with the difficulties that encompassed us. Retreat would have been vain, and there was promise of prosperity before, if life could be sustained long enough to reach that point in the existence of all periodical publications at which confidence is secured by lapse of time, and the prestige of success commands a support which the utmost merit will not secure without it.

That anxious moment in the life of the LAW TIMES arrived at an earlier period than was ever before known in the history of periodicals. Six months had not elapsed before its success was not only assured but acknowledged; and it exhibited the appearance of an established journal. Every day brought new subscribers, and every week some new and important class of regular advertisers resorted to its columns—those invaluable friends of an influential periodical, who are the last to come and the last to quit, but whose proverbial caution and clear-sightedness is an assurance that where they appear others may safely resort. Accordingly, they who may have watched the successive numbers of the LAW TIMES will have marked the steady growth of advertisements of the best class, almost every week introducing some new connection. Recently, it has been extensively adopted for sales of property, and already it boasts as its regular advertisers the most eminent names among the auctioneers of London.

But the most gratifying proof of the high standing of the LAW TIMES in public estimation has been exhibited in the orders which have been made by the uthorities in many boroughs, by the magistracy of Lancashire and Yorkshire, and promised by other counties, to employ the columns of the LAW TIMES for the purpose of announcing to the Profession the periods for holding their Quarter Sessions. This mark of confidence is the most gratifying of the many pleasing ones the LAW TIMES has received, because, when it shall thus concentrate, as it were, every species of intelligence useful to the Profession and the magistracy (and nothing can be more necessary to them than a knowledge of the days for holding the Quarter Sessions in distant places), the entire Profession must become subscribers for the sake of the advertisements, and other advertisers will resort to it on account of the subscribers.

Such are the auspicious circumstances under which the LAW TIMES enters upon the second year of its existence, and they are mainly due to the unwavering confidence, the generous forbearance, of the friends who trusted in the first place to promises, and then endured with patience the manifold backslidings in performance consequent upon inexperience. Their kindness imparted the courage necessary to bear up against the unavoidable difficulties of an undertaking as gigantic as it was novel, and the still more formidable hostilities and rivalries with which it was encountered by those who had been accustomed to look upon a work entirely independent of the booksellers, and in the hands of the Profession, as an innovation not to be tolerated.

Having thus successfully overcome the difficulties of youth and inexperience, the obstacles thrown in its path by the efforts of envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, secured a position among the foremost of the Journals of the time, with 2,500 subscribers, to which every post brings accessions, and a great and fast-growing advertising connection, recognized within and without as the public organ of the Legal Profession, with experience to guide and abundant means of accomplishing its plans, the LAW TIMES enters upon the second year of its existence, the era at which a periodical is held by the public to be established, and usually recognized accordingly. We refer to the past as the best pledge of our intentions for the future. As we have hitherto done, so shall we continue to do, adopting every suggested improvement, and sparing neither cost nor labour to perfect the design of the LAW TIMES. We recognize no limit to progress, and so long as there is any part of it that might be better done, we shall not deem the duty of advancement ended.

We ask of our readers a continuance of the same support and confidence, and the same exertions by personal recommendation to friends to swell the list of subscribers, and invite new advertisers. If this be done, the lapse of another year will see the LAW TIMES occupying still a loftier place than now, and its power to serve the Legal Profession increased in proportion to the extension of its circulation. One word of recommendation from a subscriber will more prevail upon those who have not yet done so to join their brethren in support of the Legal Journal than any number of applications by circular, and there is not one of our readers who might not, if he would take the trouble, procure, by his persuasions, two additions to the list of subscribers.

There is a wide field for exertion open to the Profession, and only union will enable it to resist the many threatened attacks, and secure its interests from invasion

The LAW TIMES will be the centre of that union.

CENTRALIZATION.

IT is with great pleasure that we direct the attention of the Profession to the resolutions of the Manchester Law Society, which will be found among our advertisements, announcing a vigorous movement towards the carrying out of that union of the provincial Law Societies which has been so strenuously advocated by the LAW TIMES. It will be observed that the immediate purpose of the projected association is "to resist the various attempts constantly being made to centralize the business of the Legal Profession in the metropolis," an object of urgent importance to the Solicitors practising in the country, and especially to those in the populous North, where the distance from town renders any change in the direction of centralization extremely inconvenient to the practitioner, and very costly to the client. Therefore it is that we have ever expressed hostility to schemes whose tendency, if not their intent, was to promote that principle of centralization which now too much pervades our legislation, unless it was very clearly established that some great public benefit would be the result of the change. We are glad to find that at length the country attorneys are roused to the necessity for looking after their own interests, and adopting measures for self-protection which can only be successful when backed by such a combination as it is proposed by those resolutions to establish. The interests that favour centralization are so powerful, from the advantages of position, the facilities for union, the weight of wealth and numbers, with opportunities for whispering into the ears of ministers and legislators, that the utmost harmony of exertion on the part of the country attorneys will be needed to defeat them. Nothing less than such a combination as is proposed in the advertised resolutions will afford any security against the repeated endeavours that are being made to centre every thing in the monopolizing metropolis, and therefore does it deserve the zealous support of the Profession; nor could any spot be found better fitted for such a union than Manchester, which boasts the most numerous, the most influential, and the most energetic Law Society in the kingdom.

And there is no need for jealousy among the Profession in London. They have ample sources of business without depriving their professional brethren of their fair proportion. Nay, it is not the interest of the London practitioners that all business should be carried to the metropolis; the consequence would not be that all the members of the Profession in London would share increased advantages; a few large firms would monopolize the business thus brought, and the rest of the Profession less favoured would lose the advantages they now share from the diffusion of business throughout the country, which of necessity distributes it among a greater number that if it were gathered in one locality where the leviathans would swallow up all of it that was worth the having.

For the ultimate advantage, then, of the Profession generally, and of the great mass of the London equally with that of all the country practitioners, we rejoice to note the movement at Manchester; heartily do we bid it "God speed!" and gladly shall we aid it by any means its projectors may suggest.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

HERE is a rich specimen of this class. It is a copy of a letter addressed to "Mr. James Foreman, innkeeper, Wickham Market," and the original is in our possession. We give it verbatim.

"Berners-street, Ipswich, 28th Feb. 1844.

"SIR,—When I called on you last Thursday in going through to Saxmundham, I expected to have got settled with Beecroft for the 1*l*. 19s. 6d. he owes you, but could not succeed. I go to Saxmundham every Thursday fortnight, returning to Ipswich the day after; therefore on 7th March I shall come through and give you a call. I enclose my card. I stay at the White Hart, Wickham, to breakfast every time I come through, and should any one want any writings, such as Conveyances, Mortgages, Bonds, Wills, Indentures, Apprenticeship, or any thing else, I will attend to them, though I am a regular lawyer, for ONE-HALF of the legal and authorized fees for such sort of employ. I am, Sir, yours, obediently,

"CHAS. BURTON,

"Attorney and Solicitor.

"I have an office at Saxmundham, adjoining the Queen's Head Inn."

A large pink-coloured card, bearing the name, and looking exacting like a mercer's, with embossed border, and printed in large black letters, informs the public of the existence of

MR. BURTON,
ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR,
In Queen's Bench and Bankruptcy Courts, Master Extraordinary in Chancery, and Commissioner for Affidavits, Berners-street, Ipswich.

And on the back is written, in good round lawyer's writing,

"Attends at the White Hart Inn, Wickham Market, every Thursday fortnight, from 9 to 11 o'clock. Next attendance 7th March."

If these exposures cannot shame the doers of such things, they will at least serve the purpose of a warning to those who have not yet lapsed from the strict rule of professional propriety, and they will be a sort of index to the rest of the Profession whom to shun.

New Books.

The New Practice of Attorneys in the Courts of Law at Westminster, with Forms, &c. In 2 vols. By JOHN FREDERICK ARCHBOLD, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London, 1844. Shaw and Sons. Pp. 1052.

WE cannot better introduce this very valuable publication to the profession than in the author's language, as extracted from his Preface:—

"Many years since, I wrote a work upon the Practice of the Court of Common Pleas, which was published in the year 1829. That work had the advantage of being revised by Mr. Griffith, lately a secondary of the Court of Common Pleas, a gentleman whose perfect knowledge of the practice of that court was well known to, and highly appreciated by, the Profession. Afterwards, the practice of all the courts of common law at Westminster was assimilated, and much altered, by the statutes and new rules upon the subject, promulgated from time to time, from the year 1831 to the year 1834; and it was so much altered, that I found it impossible, with fairness to the Profession or satisfaction to myself, to give a new edition of that work, without re-writing nearly the whole of it. And as any new edition I could give of it must have treated, not merely of the practice of the Common Pleas, but of the practice of all the Courts, I thought it best, at once, to write a new work, upon the practice of all the Courts, founded upon the new rules and statutes, without reference to my former work, or embodying any part of it in the new one. Before I would tax the Profession, however, with a new work upon the subject, I was desirous of waiting until the new practice, thus introduced, should settle down, and become fixed and well defined by decisions, so that I should be enabled to treat of the several parts of it with certainty and precision; and it was not, therefore, until the year 1838, that my new work was published. Mr. Cancellor, then a prothonotary and now a Master of the Court of Common Pleas, and Messieurs Walker and Dax, Masters of the Court of Exchequer, did me the favour to revise the whole of it, as it passed through the press; and to them I am indebted, in a great measure, for the character for accuracy which was afterwards bestowed upon the work. A new edition of it is now required; and I have undertaken it with pleasure, having obtained the promise of my friend Mr. Bunce, one of the Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench, that he would revise it for me. He has done this, and done it most ably; so that I think I may now offer it to the Profession, with a confidence in its accuracy, that I never could have felt, if I had not been favoured with such able advice and assistance."

Such being the origin of these volumes, and such their claims to be recognized as an authority, let us proceed to describe the plan adopted by the author for the accomplishment of his design.

The arrangement of the work is simple, natural, and therefore convenient both for reference and for the memory. The first book treats of the Courts of Common Law at Westminster, and the judges and officers thereof, subdivided into chapters, which describe successively the courts and their jurisdictions, sittings, holidays; of the judges and their authority; of the immediate officers of these courts; of sheriffs, and their duties and powers; of attorneys. This last chapter is extremely useful, and written with great care; it comprehends the law of attorneys as settled by the recent statute, and the decisions thereupon. From this we take the portion that relates to the PUNISHMENT OF ATTORNIES FOR MISCONDUCT.

"For very serious offences by an attorney, rendering him unfit any longer to be a member of the profession, the Court will strike him off the roll, and will not restore him; and this, whether the offence have reference to his profession or not. If an attorney, in his character of attorney, knowingly do wrong, the Court, in very gross cases, will also strike him off the roll, not in all cases permanently, but they may, and often do, restore him, after he has been off the roll for a period proportioned to his offence. Or in minor cases, if his wrongful act affect his client or a third party, the Court often make him undo that which he has done, if that be practicable, and make him pay costs, &c.; and if he do not obey their rule in this respect, they will award an attachment against him. Or if his wrongful act have not affected another party, the Court are generally satisfied in making him pay the costs of any application against him. But if his misconduct consist in wilfully not doing that which he ought to do, with respect to his client, the Court will order him to do it, and in most cases will make him pay the costs; and if he do not obey their rule in this respect, they will award an attachment against him. These different degrees of misconduct, we shall now consider more at large, under the following heads; merely premising that if the party were an attorney of the Court at the time of the act or negligence complained of, it is little matter whether he remain on the rolls of the Court, or not, at the time of the complaint. (Simes v. Gibbs, 6 Dowl. 310.) In all these cases, the affidavits to found the application may be intituled in the action in which the misconduct arose. Id.

"Indictable offences.]—The Court will not call upon an attorney to answer the matters of an affidavit, where the misconduct imputed to him amounts to an indictable offence; as his affidavit, in answer, might prejudice him, supposing an indictment to be afterwards preferred against him for the offence; besides, it is much better that such matters should be decided by a jury. (Re ——, gent. 5 B. & Ad. 1088; Re Knight and Hall, 1 Bing. 142; Short v. Pratt, 1 Bing. 103; Robertson v. Mills, 1 Dowl. N. C. 772; Anon. 12 Law J. 331 qb.; but see 1 Wils. 221) But the Court of Exchequer have entertained an application to strike an attorney off the rolls of the Court, and have struck him off the rolls, for conduct in the course of a cause in that court, which amounted to an indictable offence; although they held that they could not call upon him to answer the matters of an affidavit in such a case, nor would they interfere in this way, before conviction, where the offence had no reference to a proceeding in court. (Stephens v. Hill, 10 Mees. & W. 28.) But after he has been convicted, before the ordinary tribunal, the Court may, if they think fit, order him to be struck off the roll, whether the offence have reference to a proceeding in court, or not. Also by stat. 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, if any person convicted of forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, or common barratry, shall practise as an attorney, solicitor, or agent, in any suit or action in any court of law or equity in England, the judge may transport the offender for seven years, by such ways and under such penalties as felons. An attorney, who had been convicted of, and punished for, felony, was in five years afterwards struck off the roll, although no misconduct in the intermediate time was imputed to him. (Ex parte Brounsall, Cowp. 829.) So, an attorney has been struck off the roll, after being convicted of a conspiracy. (Anon. 1 Chit. 557.) But in a recent case, where an application was made to strike an attorney off the roll, on the ground of his having been convicted of a conspiracy, Parke, J. discharged the rule, as there did not appear to be any thing aggravated in the circumstances of the case; he said there was no instance of an attorney being struck off the roll, merely on the ground of his having been convicted of a conspiracy, without reference to the circumstances of the case; as it might in some instances be an offence of great enormity, and in others of very slight culpability. (Anon. 1 Dowl. 174.) Nor will the Court grant such an application, upon the ground of a verdict being obtained against an attorney in an action for a libel, however gross the libel may have been. (Anon. 2 Dowl. 110.)

"Culpable malfeasance, as an attorney.]—An attorney has been struck off the roll for signing a fictitious name to a demurrer, as and for the name of a barrister. (Smith v. Matham, 4 D. & R. 738.) Where an attorney, although without any corrupt or unworthy motive, prepared a special case, in order to take the opinion of the Court upon a will, and therein made suggestions which had no foundation in fact: the Court held that he was guilty of a contempt, and fined him 30*l.* for his offence. (Re Elsam, 3 B. & C. 597; but see now stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 45) Where an aged lady had obtained a judgment against the casual ejector, in ejectment for certain premises, and the attorney for the landlord afterwards called upon her, and, in the absence of her attorney, obtained her signature to a paper, whereby she agreed to abandon her judgment, and to allow the title to be fairly tried between her and the landlord: the Court, upon application, ordered the attorney to give up the instrument to the old lady, and obliged him to pay the costs. (Re Oliver, 4 Nev. & M. 471, 1 Har. & W. 79.) Where a promissory note for 200*l.* was given to an attorney, by the father of an articled clerk, as a premium, the attorney undertaking not to negotiate it for five years; at the end of eighteen months, however, the attorney and the articled clerk separated, it being found that, from the articles not being stamped at the beginning of the clerkship, the time thus served would not be reckoned in the five years; the attorney then negotiated the note, and the father was arrested upon it: upon application, Taunton, J. granted a rule requiring the attorney to take up the note, and ordered him to pay the costs of the application. (Ex parte Gardner, 2 Dowl. 520.) Where an attorney executed a bond from himself to a client, upon a wrong stamp, the Court, upon motion, compelled him to have a proper stamp put upon it. (Gwilliam v. Barnet, 2 Smith, 155.) Where an attorney acted on both sides, deluding the parties, and preventing them from having an interview, the Court set aside the proceedings, and made the attorney pay the costs. (Berry v. Jenkins, 3 Bing. 423.) Where an attorney, employed by his client to raise money upon mortgage, disclosed a defect in his client's title to the intended lender, whereby the client sustained an injury: the Court held that the client might maintain an action against him for the damage sustained from this breach of professional confidence, although the lender happened to be a client of his also. (Taylor v. Blacklan, 3 Bing. N. C. 235.) Where a defendant had been removed by habeas from Lincoln Castle to the King's Bench prison, and the plaintiff had been put to the expense of inquiring after six sets of bail, as to one of whom a false description had been given the Court ordered the defendant's attorney to pay the costs incurred by the plaintiff, although he swore that he had no personal knowledge of the misdescription or insufficiency of the bail. (Blundell v. Blundell, 5 B. & A. 533. 1 D. & R. 142.) Where an application was made to strike an attorney off the roll, for having hired sham bail in error, and it was referred to the prothonotary, who reported that the attorney did not actually hire the bail, but that enough appeared to shew that he was aware that the bail put in were hired bail: the Court said that, as the offence, of which he appeared to be guilty, was of a lighter character than that originally charged, they thought the justice of the case would be answered by making him pay all the costs occasioned by the proceedings. (Dicas v. Warne, 2 Dowl. 812; see Clifford v. Parker, 5 Dowl. 226.) Where the attorney of a plaintiff, upon being applied to for the address of his client, and not knowing it himself except from two letters he had received from him, the one dated from Bridport, the other from Lynn, incautiously gave the address 'Bridport,' and that being found to be wrong, he then gave the address 'Lynn,' which was also found erroneous; and because he had done thus, without first making proper inquiries as to the real address of the client, the Court, upon application, made him pay all the costs occasioned by his conduct. (See Neal v. Holden, 3 Dowl. 193.) Where, in putting in bail, a mistake was made in the christian name of one of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiff's attorney thereupon swore that there was no bail in that action, and moved that the defendant's attorney should pay the debt and costs in the action, for having caused the defendant to be superseded: the Court discharged the rule, with costs to be paid by the attorney who had so sworn. (Clarke v. Gorman, 3 Taunt. 492.) But the Court have refused to make an attorney answer the matters of an affidavit, where the charge against him was, that he had brought several qui tam actions against a party, evidently from vindictive motives. (Smith v. Gillett, 3 Dowl. 364; S. C. nom. Ex parte Warren, 1 Har. & W. 113.) So, the Court refused a similar rule, where the only charge against the attorney was, that the client, having petitioned the Insolvent Court, handed over money to him by his advice, and upon his assurance that there was nothing wrong in doing so, and the client was afterwards remanded for having done so. (Smith v. Tower, 2 Dowl. 673.) So the Court have refused to require a defendant's attorney to disclose by what authority he pleaded a sham plea. (Merrington v. A'Beckett, 2 B. & C. 81.)

"Gross negligence or ignorance, &c.]—Where the business done by an attorney turns out to be wholly useless to the client, whether arising from gross ignorance or gross negligence on the part of the attorney, or from inadvertence or inexperience only, this will be a good defence to an action by the attorney for the amount of his costs. (Hill v. Featherstonhaugh, 7 Bing. 569.) And where an attorney, being instructed by an administratrix to bring an action against a tenant for rent, brought assumpsit for use and occupation, without previously inquiring whether the holding was or was not by deed; and upon its afterwards appearing to have been by deed, he was obliged to discontinue the action of assumpsit, and commence another action; and in taxing his bill as between him and his client, the Master allowed him the costs in both actions; the court ordered the Master to review his taxation, leaving the attorney to bring his action for the other costs, if he would. (Cliffe v. Prosser, 2 Dowl. 21; and see Montriou v. Jefferys, 1 Ry. & M. 317.) And where a fine was left imperfect, through the negligence of an attorney, the Court of Common Pleas ordered a new one to be levied at his expense. (Stone v. Stone, 4 Taunt. 601.)

"And not only will the attorney be deprived of costs, for proceedings thus rendered useless by his negligence, &c. but in all cases where the client has sustained damage, through the gross negligence or gross ignorance of his attorney, he may maintain an action against the attorney for his damages (see Jones v. Lewis, 9 Dowl. 143); or if the negligence or ignorance can be plainly and clearly made out, but not otherwise (per Tindal, C. J. in Meggs v. Binns, infra), the Court, upon summary application, will oblige the attorney to indemnify the client. Where a cause, which was meant to be defended, was called on and tried as an undefended cause, in consequence of the defendant's attorney neglecting to deliver his briefs, the Court, upon application, granted a new trial, but compelled the defendant's attorney to pay the costs as between attorney and client, out of his own pocket. (De Roufigny v. Peale, 3 Taunt. 484, and see White v. Sandell, 3 Dowl. 798.) But where it did not appear clearly from the affidavits that the attorney was guilty of negligence, the Court refused to interfere thus in a summary way, although the client had sustained damage. (Meggs v. Binns, 2 Bing. N.C. 625, 2 Hodg. 10.) And where the injury to the client arises from a mere mistake of the attorney, upon a point of law on which a reasonable doubt may be entertained, the client cannot maintain any action for it (Kemp v. Burt, 1 Nev. and M. 262), nor will the Court interfere in a summary way upon motion (Barker v. Butler, 2 W. Bl. 780), nor will it prevent the attorney recovering the amount of his costs against his client. (Bulmer, et. al. v. Gilman, et al. 11 Law J. 174, cp. Elkington v. Holland, 1 Dowl N. C. 643.) Where a client applied for a rule against his attorney to deliver up certain letters which he had written to him, to enable him to maintain an action against him for negligence, the Court refused it, saying there was no precedent for such an application. (Lewis v. Briggs, 2 Hodg. 4.)

"Culpable nonfeazance.] When an attorney has received money for his client, and refuses or neglects to pay it over, the client may either maintain an action against him for it (see Sibley v. Leicester, 2 Dowl. 231), or the Court, upon application, will compel him to pay it over (subject, of course, to his lien), provided he be an attorney of the Court. (Sharp v. Hawker, 3 Bing. N.C. 66.) But they will not require him to pay interest upon it. (Fenn v. Wild, 1 Dowl. 498; ex parte Corpus Christi College, 6 Taunt. 105; but see Ex parte Burgin, 1 Dowl. N.C. 292.) And where an attorney, employed by both the vendor and purchaser of certain property, received the purchase money, and neglected to pay it over; and he afterwards became a bankrupt and obtained his certificate: the Court held that as no fraud upon his part part had been stated, they would not interfere; if fraud, indeed, had been stated, they might have punished him for it, by making him pay over the money. (Re Bonner, 1 Nev. & M. 555.) And where the attorney of a trustee induced him and the cestui que trust to allow him to sell out the trust money, which was in the funds, saying that he could obtain a higher interest by investing it upon mortgage; but instead of obtaining a mortgage, he applied it to his own purposes: after upwards of a year had passed without his investing the money, the Court, upon application, ordered him to re-invest the money in the funds on or before a certain day, and to pay the costs; but a fiat in bankruptcy issued against him on the day next after that so appointed, upon which he obtained his certificate: upon an application to the Court for an attachment, it was urged for the attorney, that as the claim was clearly barred by his certificate, the Court would not interfere; but the Court held that as the party was in contempt before the bankruptcy, and as fraud appeared clearly upon the face of the whole transaction, they would defeat the fraud by issuing the attachment. (Re Newbury, 5 Nev. & M. 419, 1 Har. & W. 575.) But the Court will not interfere, if the client's right depend upon an alleged agreement between him and his attorney, and the right be contested by the attorney (Hodson v. Terrall, 9 Dowl. 264); nor will they interfere, except upon the application of the client (Re Fenton, 5 Nev. & M. 239; 1 Har. & W. 310); nor will they interfere, unless the attorney's engagement or liability arise from his employment as as an attorney. (Re Chitty, 2 Dowl. 421, 533; Ex parte Faith, 9 Id. 973; Ex parte Cowie, 3 Dowl. 600; Cocks v. Harman, 6 East, 404; Re Lord Cardross, 7 Dowl. 861.) Where, indeed, an attorney was employed by A, an administrator, to get in the debts, &c. due to the deceased, the Court, after A's death, ordered the attorney to account to his executors, although he had never been employed by A or his executors, to conduct any suit in law or in equity on his or their behalf; but the Court held that the employment in this case was so connected with the attorney's professional character, as to afford a fair presumption that his employment was in consequence of that character, and that they would therefore interfere in a summary way, to compel him faithfully to execute the trust reposed in him. (Re Aitkin, 4 B. & A. 47; Ex parte Knight, 1 Bing. 91; Ex parte Corpus Christi College, 6 Taunt. 105; Ex parte Hall. 7 Moore, 437.) But the Courts at present seem rather disinclined to interfere to the extent of this case of Re Aitkin, and at all events, it may be deemed the very utmost extent to which they will go. And it is quite clear that where the transaction has no reference to the professional character of the attorney, the Court will not interfere in this summary way; and therefore where an attorney advanced 10*l*. upon a deposit of bills of exchange to the amount of 25*l*. and he afterwards received the amount of the bills, Patteson, J. refused a rule to make him pay over the balance. (Ex parte Schwalbanker, [illegible] Dowl. 182.) Where a rule called upon an attorney to furnish an account of moneys received by him, and he furnished one, it was holden to be no ground for moving for an attachment against him, that he had omitted in the account sums which the party alleged that he had received. (Ex parte Laurence, 2 Dowl. 230.)

"The motion, &c.] A motion against an attorney, to shew cause why he should not be struck off the roll, or for a rule calling upon him to answer the matters of an affidavit, must be made by counsel; the Court will not allow any other person to address them upon the subject. (Ex parte Pitt, 5 B. & Ad. 1077, 2 Dowl. 439, 3 Nev. & M. 566.) This application is always made to the Court, and never to a judge at chambers; so is the motion for an attachment. But an application that an attorney pay over money or the like, if it be made in a cause, is usually made to a judge at chambers; but if there be no cause in court, the application must be made to the Court. (Ex parte Hugos, 1 Dowl. 495.) It must be made to that court of which the party is an attorney (see Evans v. P——, 2 Wils. 282); and the affidavit must state that he is an attorney of that court. (Re Becke, 1 Har. & W. 117; Ex parte Lord, 1 Hodg. 195, but see Ex parte King, 3 Dowl. 41; Ex parte Hore, Id. 600; Sharp v. Hawker, 5 Dowl. 186; and see Re Williams, Id. 236.)

"The motion must be made within a reasonable time after the commission of the offence or other misconduct complained of: and therefore where the application was not made until three years and a half after the attorney was admitted, and the misconduct complained of occurred before his admission, the Court refused the rule (Re , gent. 2 B. & Ad. 766); and even where only three Terms had elapsed, the application was holden to be too late. (Garry v. Wilks, 2 Dowl. 649.) Also, we have seen (ante, p. 45, n. (k), that any application to strike an attorney off the roll, for any defect in his articles of clerkship, or in the registry thereof, or in his service under such articles, or in his admission and enrolment, must be made within twelve months from the time of his admission and enrolment. (6 & 7 Vict. c 73, s. 29.) It may be necessary to mention that a rule nisi that an attorney shall answer the matters of an affidavit, cannot be moved for on the last day of term (Re Turner, 1 Har. & W. 217, 3 Dowl. 557; Baily v Jones, 1 Chit. 744), and in the Exchequer, the Court require it to be made so early in the Term, that the attorney may have time to shew cause against it during the same Term. (Ex parte ——, 2 Dowl. 227.)

"The form of the motion may readily be collected, from what has been already stated (ante, p. 91, &c.), where we have considered in what cases, and how, the Courts will punish an attorney for misconduct. Where the misconduct arises from not doing something which the attorney was required to do by a rule of court, or a judge's order made a rule of court, the application must be for an attachment, and not that the attorney shall answer the matters of the affidavit. (Ex parte Townley, 3 Dowl. 39; Ex parte Grant, Id. 320.) And you cannot move for the rule nisi in the alternative, that he do a certain act, or that an attachment shall issue against him; but you must first move that he do the act, and make that rule absolute; and if the attorney afterwards disobey the rule, move for an attachment. (Roscoe v. Hardman, 5 Dowl. 157, 2 Har. & W. 118.) But where a rule was made absolute, that an attorney should do a certain act, and that if he did not do so, an attachment should issue against him: it was holden that, upon the usual affidavit of his having disobeyed the rule, the attachment might issue in the first instance. (Ex parte Grant, 3 Dowl. 320.)

"The affidavit in support of the application may be intituled in the cause in which the misconduct arose, if in fact it arose in any cause (Symes v Gibbs, 6 Dowl. 310); if it did not, it may or may not be in tituled in the matter of the attorney. If it do not state the misconduct directly and positively, it must state, not merely facts from which it may be inferred, but also the information and belief of the party that the attorney is guilty of the misconduct the deponent imputes to him. (Re King, 3 Nev. & M. 716.) As to the affidavit in answer, where the party swore to an incredible story, the Court made the rule absolute for an attachment, although he positively denied the malpractices imputed to him. (Re Crossley, 6 T. R. 701.)

"If the rule be made absolute against the attorney he will be obliged to pay the costs as a matter of course. If, on the other hand, there appear to be no ground for the application, the rule will be discharged with costs. But if there appear to be reasonable and probable cause for applying to the Court against the attorney, although it eventually turn out that there is no actual ground for imputing misconduct to him, the court will not give him the costs of the application. (Doe dem. Thwaites v. Roe, 3 D. & R. 226.)

"If the matter be referred to the Master, he is not confined to the affidavits made use of in court, but may receive any other affidavits the parties may choose to make, on either side. (Dicas v. Warne, 2 Dowl. 812.)

"If the attorney be struck off the rolls of one court, the other courts, upon application, and upon merely reading the rule in that case, will also make the same order, without further investigating the circumstances of the case (Ex parte Yates, 1 Dowl. 724, C. P. R. M. 1654, but see Re Smith, 1 Brod. & B. 522; Ex parte Hague, 3 Brod. & B. 257, Dax, 29); and if afterwards re-admitted by the Court which first struck him off, the other Courts, upon application, and upon reading the rule for his re-admission, will also order him to be re-admitted. (Ex parte Yates, supra. See Ex parte Parry, 5 Dowl. 81.)

"Striking an attorney off the roll, at his own request.]—If an attorney wish to be struck off the roll, for the purpose of being called to the bar, or the like, the Court, upon application, will make an order accordingly, upon his stating by affidavit that no proceedings are pending against him as attorney, and that he expects none. (See Ex parte Gray, 9 Dowl. 336.)

"AGENTS TO ATTORNEYS.

"Their duties, &c.]—Country attorneys usually have agents to transact such parts of their business as must be done in London. Both, of course, must be attorneys, regularly admitted, and duly certificated. The agent for the plaintiff's attorney sues out the writ, and his indorsement upon it, makes him known to the opposite party; the agent for the defendant's attorney enters a common appearance, and thereby becomes known to the plaintiff's agent; after which, all the proceedings in the cause, to issue and notice of trial inclusive, are transacted between the agents, precisely as if they were the only attorneys in the cause. The plaintiff's agent makes up the nisi prius record, sues out jury process, and transmits them to the country attorney, if the cause is to be tried in the country. Notice of trial or inquiry, and of continuance of inquiry, shall be given in town; but countermand of notice of trial or inquiry may be given in either town or country, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge. (R. G. H. 2 W. 4, s. 57, and see Cheslyn v. Pearce, 1 Mees. & W. 56.) And after the cause is tried, the agent in town obtains the postea from the associate, procures the costs to be taxed, sues out execution, and transmits it to the country attorney, or to the under-sheriff of the county where it is to be executed, or delivers it to the under-sheriff's agent in London.

"If the trial be in London or Westminster, the country attorney seldom attends it, unless it be a cause of considerable importance, or that his presence be necessary as a witness, or the like: and it is accordingly holden to be a matter of discretion with the Master, whether he will allow for such attendance in costs or not. (Parsloe v. Foy, 2 Dowl. 181.) So, if the trial be in the country, the London agent seldom attends it, unless it be a cause of great magnitude; in which case, the attendance of such agent, intimately acquainted, as he must be, with all the proceedings in the cause, may be of serious importance to the client.

"But although the London agents have thus the management of the cause until trial, and afterwards until execution, there is no privity whatever between them and the clients. If an agent be guilty of negligence, and the attorney's client thereby sustain an injury, the client cannot sue him, nor will the Court entertain any application against him, upon the part of the client, for there is no privity between them; the client's remedy in such a case is against his own attorney. (Ex parte Jones, 2 Dowl. 161, and see Gray v. Kirby, id. 601.) So, the agent cannot sue the client, for the amount of his costs, in any particular cause. Nor has he a general lien on the money or papers of the client in his hands for any balance due to him by the country attorney; he can claim merely to the extent of his agency costs in the client's suit. (White v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 1 Bing. 21, and see Moody v. Spencer, 2 D. & R. 6; Bray v. Hine, 5 Price, 203.) But he has the ordinary lien of an attorney for his general balance, upon the papers or money of his own client, the country attorney, which may at any time come into his hands. (Taunton v. Goforth, 6 D. & R. 384, and see Gray v. Kirby, 2 Dowl. 601.)

"Their bills may now be referred to the Master for taxation, in precisely the same manner as the bills of any other attorneys.

"Where, in a country cause, notice of trial was given, but no further proceedings were taken for seven years, when the defendant obtained a rule nisi for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, and served it upon the agent in town; the agent knew nothing of the plaintiff; he had been agent to his attorney, but had ceased to be so; and the country attorney had left his place of residence, and the agent did not know where he was to be found: this being stated to the Court, by affidavit, on the part of the agent, the Court enlarged the rule, so as to give time to the defendant to serve it upon some other person. (Curtis v. Tabram, 1 Har. & W. 523.)"

THE MONEY MARKET.

The Consol Market has been buoyant during the past week, and prices at present seem inclined to advance. On Thursday, at one time, Consols touched 99⅞; they now shew 99⅝ to ¾ for money and the account. The other stocks are the New Three-and-a-Half per Cents. 103¼, the last price being 103⅛ to ¼; Exchequer Bills, 71s. to 73s. premium; Bank Stock for Account, 201.

In foreign securities the chief feature is a decline of 1 per cent. in Spanish Bonds. Prices appear to have re-acted slightly in Madrid, but the immediate cause here of the decline is a continued series of sales of the Three per Cents. which are last quoted 36¼ to ⅜, being a further fall of nearly 1½ per cent. The Active Bonds have also suffered considerably, their last quotation being 26¼ to ⅜. The other foreign bonds may be generally written flat, having been in some degree affected by the state of the Spanish Market. Spanish Active Bonds, 26¼ to ½; the Three per Cents. 36¼ to ½; Deferred, 15¾ to ⅞; Passive, 6⅜ to 7; Peruvian, 30½ to 1½; Portuguese Converted, 46 to 7; Mexican, 36⅞ to 7; Deferred, 16⅝ to ⅞; Danish, 86½ to 7½ ex div.; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. 61 to ½; Dutch Fives, 100 to ½; Belgian, 104 to 5; Brazilian, 80 to 81; Buenos Ayres, 37 to 8; Chilian, 102 to 4; Colombian, ex Venezuela, 14 to ½.

There has been no particular change in the Share Market since our last report. There is little animation in the dealings, and prices shew no decided tendency for change, whether for advance or decline. The following quotations are the latest.—London and Birmingham, 234 to 6; New Quarter Shares, 28 to 9; New Thirds, 39½ to 40½; South Western, 83 to 4; Eighths, 3⅞ to 4⅛ prem.; London and Brighton, 43⅞ to 4⅛ per share; New, 11⅜ to ½; Blackwall, 6⅛ to ⅜; Greenwich, 5 to ½; Croydon, 16⅝ to ⅞; Manchester and Leeds, 111 to 113; New, 47½ to 8½; Quarter Shares, 2¼ to ¾; Manchester and Birmingham, 48½ to 49½; Birmingham and Derby, 61 to 3; Thirds, 20 to 1; Eighths, 4¼ to ½; Midland Counties, 90 to 2; North Midland, 91 to 3; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 65 to 6; New, 16 to ½; Great Western, 109 to 10; Half Shares, 69 to 70; Fifth, 18¾ to 19; South Eastern, 35 to ½; Northern and Eastern, 57 to 8; Eastern Counties, 11⅞ to 12⅛; New Registered, 13⅝ to ⅞; Perpetual Five per Cents. 1 to ½ prem.; Birmingham and Gloucester, 94 to 6 per share; Hull and Selby, 59½ to 60½; Bristol and Exeter, 71 to 2; Paris and Orleans, 36 to ¼; Paris and Rouen, 36⅞ to 7; Rouen and Havre, 7½ to 8 prem.; Caledonian, 7½ per share; Dublin and Cashel, 5⅞ to ⅞; Lancaster and Carlisle, 7¼; Norwich and Brandon, 7¼ to ⅜.

EXTENSIVE PURCHASE BY A SHROPSHIRE COMPANY.—The vast property belonging to the bankrupt estate of Messrs. Harford, Davies, and Co. consisting of the Ebbw Vale and Sirhowy Iron Works, were on Monday last purchased by certain partners in the Colebrook Dale Company, who come into possession in the week ensuing. The purchase money is 216,000*l.* Upon the property upwards of 6,000 persons are located, and the total extent of land is upwards of 2,800 acres. In consequence of this fortunate arrangement, the creditors of Messrs. Harford, Davies, and Co. anticipate that a dividend of 14s. or 15s. in the pound will be immediately paid them.—Shrewsbury News.

Ex parte Holland.

Act 56 Geo. 3, c. 60—Unclaimed dividends—Costs of recovering stock transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt.

In this matter a petition had been presented under the Act 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, to confirm the Master's report that a sum of 1,400l. stock, which had been transferred to the Commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, belonged to the petitioner. There were twenty years' dividends unclaimed, and the fund belonged to a lunatic, which accounted, in some degree, for the non-claim. The petitioner had traced his title, and Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce had made the order for re-transferring the stock, with the dividends received thereon, but without the dividends upon the dividends which had been accumulated by the commissioners. A question then arose as to the costs of the Attorney-General and the commissioners upon the petition, and the Vice-Chancellor thought that it was unjust to charge the petitioner's fund with those costs, as he would only receive simple interest, the Government retaining the accumulations. The petition, however, prayed that all costs might be paid out of the fund. The matter now came before the Lord Chancellor.

Lloyd*, for the petitioner.

The Lord Chancellor.—You say that as the Government has received an advantage from the possession of this fund of the petitioner, he ought not now to pay out of his own fund the costs of the public officers upon this petition. The Government certainly gets a great benefit from the transaction, and it is only reasonable that the costs should fall on the general fund. The public has no right, ever,* through the Act of Parliament under which the fund is transferred. The party has only simple interest, while the accumulations go to the public. That is a great benefit, and it is reasonable that the Government should pay costs, which is only a deduction from its profits.

Wray, for the Attorney-General, cited a MS. case, Ex parte Laferte, in which the Vice-Chancellor, on the 22nd April, 1837, ordered the transfer of fund to petitioner on payment of the Attorney-General's and the commissioners' costs; and in Ex parte Ram (3 Mylne & Cr. Reports, 25) and MS. an order was made by the Vice-Chancellor on the 11th April, 1837, by which such a fund was directed to be transferred to the administratrix of the survivor of two persons in whose names the stock had been standing. Upon appeal, Lord Cottenham, C. reversed the order, upon the ground that those parties were merely trustees of the fund, and an inquiry was directed before the Master, when the person beneficially entitled was discovered, and the fund subsequently ordered to be paid to the administratrix as a trustee for such person. Lord Cottenham then caused an inquiry to be made as to the Attorney-General's costs, and he found that it had been the general practice to pay such costs out of the fund. The order was accordingly so made.

The Lord Chancellor.—I am informed the practice has only lately grown up; but it appears that, though Lord Cottenham was struck with the justice of the petitioner's claim, he decided against him after a deliberate inquiry into the practice. If the Bank of England, which but for the Act of Parliament would have retained the dividends, had refused to transfer the stock, and the petitioner had been compelled to come here he would not have had to pay costs. The Government is an enormously paid trustee. I will, however, see whether the practice, as stated by Mr. Wray, has been universal, and how Lord Cottenham acted in Ex parte Ram.

Wednesday, March 20.—The Lord Chancellor.—I have made inquiry into the practice, and I find that the rule has been, without an exception, to direct the costs to be paid out of the fund of the party. The transfer has arisen from his own laches, and it is, after all, only a part of the costs he has to pay. I do not think myself justified in departing from the course which has been universal, and which was always followed by Lord Eldon. The costs of the Attorney General and the commissioners, as between party and party, must be paid out of the fund.

Lord Harborough v. Wartnaby and Others.

Practice—Production of papers before Master, and on trial at bar—Four-day order—Irregularity—Seal-day.

The plaintiff had, on the 22nd of March, instant, obtained an order that one of the defendants, Douglas, should produce on oath before the Master, certain documents in his possession, within four days after personal service of the order, or stand committed.

Wakefield now moved that such order might be discharged for irregularity, because it was not made upon the seal-day. He cited Saxby v. Saxby (7 Simon's Reports, 140); Sharpe v. Ashton (2 Vesey and Beames' Reports, 412; 2 Smith's Chancery Practice, 128); Anonymous (2 Maddock's Reports, 213, 3 Daniell's Chancery Practice, 250); Ferrers v. Fisher (May 1836, 1 Keen, 144 n.).

Anderdon and Malins, in support of the order, produced the Master's certificate of the defendant's default, and asked that the order might be delivered out to the serjeant-at-arms. (2 Daniell's Chancery Practice, 811, 813; Parsons v. Parsons, in Seton on Decrees, 421.)

Wakefield, in reply.

The Lord Chancellor.—The plaintiff might always have obtained the order at the Rolls.

Wakefield.—The warrant must be signed by the Lord Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor.—The fees on obtaining the order here are larger than at the Rolls, but the practice has always been to disallow the larger fees on taxation.

Wakefield.—The secretary at the Rolls will not draw up the order; the serjeant-at-arms draws up the order. (Brierley v. Walmesly 1 Keen's Reports, 144; Earl of Chesterfield v. Bond, 2 Beavan's Reports, 266; 10th order in Chancery of December 1833.)

The Lord Chancellor.—If it is the established practice not to make the order, except on a seal-day, I cannot depart from it in this particular case. I will consult the other branches of the Court.

Friday, March 29.—The Lord Chancellor said, Sharp v. Ashton is an authority so far, that a motion required to be made on the seal-day cannot be made on any continuation of the seal-day, unless the party was prepared to make it on the seal-day. No reliance can be placed on the case said to have been decided by Lord Hardwicke; the decision was made many years ago, and the point was never fully brought before the Court. The practice has since been laid down in Sharp v. Ashton. The question is, whether this rule has been departed from. The cases referred to in the argument were all decided under peculiar circumstances. The question has been agitated on motions for the common injunction and there is a close analogy between such cases and the present. How have those cases been decided, and on what grounds? There it was held that a motion of course could be made any day out of Term, not a seal day. This decision was made on the ground that it was within the principle of one of the new orders. In 1836, the same question was before Lord Cottenham in Ferrers v. Fisher, but it was not necessary to decide it in that case, because the party had, by his own conduct, precluded himself from taking advantage of any irregularity. It again came under the consideration of the Master of the Rolls, in Lord Chesterfield v. Bond, and it is necessary to consider the grounds of that decision. That case did not proceed upon any general order, but on an analogy to a common injunction, and on the ground of public convenience. The Master of the Rolls was of opinion that the principle might be extended to the case then before him, and such a motion made on any day out of Term. This departure from the general rule, I think, warrants me in saying that both by analogy and on the ground of public convenience, the rule may be extended to this case. The practice, then, in future, will be, that a motion of course may be made on any day out of Term, though not a seal-day. The question, then, is, how to dispose of the present case? I must refuse the motion, but not with costs, as there is no decided case. It is to be considered that the order, when obtained, was mentioned to Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, who thought the motion ought to be acceded to, but that it would be better to apply to me. This application was made, and I certainly was of the same opinion.

Saturday, March 30.—The Lord Chancellor again said the rule had been so far broken in upon, that he thought it better to put an end to it.

Malins.—The defendant has now produced some papers, but the plaintiff's advisers had not had an opportunity of inspecting them; the order, therefore, should be suspended, not discharged.

The Lord Chancellor.—The order shall not be discharged till you have ascertained that all the necessary documents are produced.

Wakefield asked that the order should be discharged.

Malins.—The decree is for taking the accounts, &c. and the parties were directed "to produce before the Master, upon oath, all deeds, documents, court rolls, &c. in their custody or power, relating to the matters in the cause." The affidavit of the defendant states, that he has "produced all the copies of court roll papers, &c. relating to the manors of Market Harborough and Great Bowden, mentioned in the pleadings of this cause." The Master, by his summons, dated the 12th of March, had directed the defendant to produce all the documents, &c. mentioned in the second schedule to his answer, and all other documents, &c. in his custody or power relating to the matters in question in the cause.

The Lord Chancellor.—The affidavit is not sufficient. If doubtful, I must either refer it to the Master or decide upon it. I do not think the affidavit sufficient. I will suspend the order. The object is to have the documents produced on the coming trial at law, and I will take care that object shall be effected. Notice must be given of a motion either to discharge the order or to remove the suspension.

Malins afterwards, in a later part of the day, stated that the defendant had left a box in the Master's office, the key of which had been delivered to the Master, with a direction not to permit it to be opened. Application had been made to the defendant's London agents, who had also refused to permit the box to be opened.

The Lord Chancellor.—Then the Master the box should be opened, and the plaintiff must have an opportunity of inspecting its contents; the Master is to be at liberty to direct his clerk to attend at the trial and produce such of the documents as the plaintiff may require to have produced.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Monday, March 11.

Griffiths v. Gale.

New Wills Act—Construction of—Testamentary appointment.

The 33rd section of the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, called the New Wills Act, provides, "that where any person, being a child or other issue of the testator, to whom any real or personal estate shall be devised or bequeathed, for any estate or interest not determinable at or before the death of such person, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue; and any such issue of such person shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise or bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear."

Held, that this does not extend to a testamentary appointment.

By a certain instrument, power was given to a female to appoint a fund by deed or will unto and amongst all and every, or one or more, of her children; the deed creating the power also directed that the fund, or so much thereof as should not be appointed, should be given, in default of appointment, to all the children as tenants in common. The donee of the power, by her will, appointed a share of the fund to one of her children, who died in her lifetime, leaving several children, who survived the testatrix. A petition was therefore presented by the representative of the deceased child. The question for consideration on behalf of the petitioner was, whether, taking the 1st section of the above Act with the 33rd section, the appointment made by the lady under her will was not a good appointment in favour of her grandchildren, notwithstanding the appointee died in her lifetime. The first section declares "that the word 'will' shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will, or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power:" and by the 33rd section it is enacted, "that in case such person shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue who shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such demise or bequest shall not lapse, &c."

Bethel, for the petitioner.

Symons, for the other parties.

His Honour the VICE-CHANCELLOR observed that the words made use of in the 33rd section are "devised and bequeathed," and that, strictly speaking, although the exercise of a power is directed to be made by will, yet the property subject to the power is neither devised nor bequeathed, and that the word "lapse" is, properly speaking, only applicable to a gift by will, and the clause in the section was not, therefore, intended to refer to a testamentary appointment. His Honour, moreover, thought that it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to interfere with the rights of parties whom the donor of the power had pointed out to be beneficially interested in default of appointment.

Petition dismissed.

Feb. 17 and March 14.

CURSON v. BELWORTHY.

Inadequacy of consideration - Fraud - Notwithstanding an estate may have been purchased for a sum of money far inferior to its full value, and in order to sustain a bill to set aside the conveyance a n[illegible] ber of allegations of fraud are brought forward on the plaintiff's behalf, the Court has no jurisdiction, unless the facts contained in those allegations are fully proved, to interfere to set aside such conveyance when once complete.

Bethel and Wilcock, for the plaintiff.

Stewart and Shapter, for the defendant.

This was a bill filed for setting aside the conveyance of an estate alleged to have been obtained by the defendant through fraud from the plaintiff, a poor man, and of weak intellect and perfectly illiterate; the defendant being represented as a farmer in tolerable circumstances.

It appeared that the estate in question, situate in South Tawton, in the county of Devon, was devised by the grandfather of plaintiff to his father in tail male, and was subject to a mortgage thereon of 120*l.* and interest to one Sanders, of North Tawton, in the same county; and that the plaintiff's father died on 19th Sept. 1840, leaving the plaintiff, his eldest son and heir male, him surviving.

On the plaintiff's part it was stated that, during his father's life, in May 1838, he (plaintiff), believing that he had a contingent interest in the above-mentioned estate, and being in great distress and ignorant of its value, the fee-simple whereof in the last-mentioned year being worth between 500*l.* and 600*l.*, entered into a negotiation with the defendant for the purpose of selling him his contingent interest for the sum of 40*l.*, whereupon they went together to Messrs. Medland and Francis, defendant's solicitors, living at Crediton, in order that there might be an agreement for the sale thereof prepared by Mr. Medland: that at different times afterwards the defendant advanced plaintiff several small sums of money, amounting in the whole to about 13*l.*, as on account of the proposed purchase, and after having made such advances, the defendant induced plaintiff to accompany him to the office of Messrs. Medland and Francis, for the purpose, as he believed, of executing a transfer or contract for the sale of plaintiff's interest, and he then set his mark to a paper writing which had been prepared by Mr. Francis by the direction of defendant, which paper he believed to be some agreement for the sale of his contingent interest in his estate. Other small sums were afterwards advanced to him by defendant, amounting to about 20*l.*, on account, as plaintiff supposed, of the above-mentioned purchase-money of 40*l.* the defendant, at the same time, promising to pay the remaining 20*l.* on the death of plaintiff's father: that after the funeral of his father, one John Vanstone met the defendant, and told him that he was going to hire the farm of the plaintiff, whereupon the defendant remarked that the estate was his, the defendant's, and that he had bought it more than three years previous. On the 24th Sept. 1840 plaintiff accompanied defendant to the office of Messrs. Medland and Francis, when the latter wrote out an instrument, to which he afterwards set his mark, and, upon so doing, the paper was read to both defendant and plaintiff, the same being a contract for sale by plaintiff of the said estate for 40*l.*; to which he, believing it to be in pursuance of the paper which he had formerly signed by the direction of Mr. Medland, set his mark, and it was then finally arranged that the plaintiff should call again to convey the estate to defendant on the 3rd of October then next after. This meeting, however, did not take place till the 10th, when the mortgage, with interest thereon, amounting to 126*l.* was paid by defendant to Sanders, the mortgagee, and the sum of 15*l.* 10s. was handed over to plaintiff, whereupon he executed the deed of conveyance of the estate in fee-simple to defendant, by setting his mark thereunto, and the defendant shortly after entered into possession.

It was, moreover, stated that since the execution of the conveyance the plaintiff discovered that the paper signed by him in 1838, which he then believed to be a contract to sell his then contingent interest, was in reality a bond to secure the repayment of the 20*l.* which he had borrowed; and that under such impression the plaintiff was induced by the defendant to execute the contract of the 24th of September, 1840, also the conveyance of the 10th of October following; and, in order to prevent the plaintiff being aware of the true nature of the instrument, the defendant never called upon him to pay any interest that might be due thereon; also, that the execution of the bond was procured, not only for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to believe that he had entered into a contract for the sale of his interest in the said estate, but also for the purpose of recovering from him the 20*l.* in case the plaintiff should further sell or dispose of his estate; and that the real contract which was made for the sale of the estate was the contract so fraudulently procured by the defendant, after the estate had become absolutely vested in the plaintiff as tenant in tail in possession, and when he was labouring under an impression that he was bound by a supposed contract entered into when his interest was merely contingent.

For the defendant, it was argued that the contract was bonâ fide, and that the estate when he so purchased it was in a ruinous condition, and greatly out of repair; and that, after the execution of the deed of conveyance, and deducting from the purchase-money of 160*l.* the sum of 126*l.* principal and interest, due to Sanders, and the sum of 18*l.* 10s. due from plaintiff to defendant, the balance of 15*l.* 10s. was handed over to plaintiff, and the bond in question was cancelled and retained in Mr. Medland's possession by the desire of the plaintiff himself, and that he was well aware of the nature thereof when he executed it in 1838. It was also contended that the sum of 160*l.* was the full value of the estate, and that the sum of 34*l.* was the full value of the equity of redemption, considering that he (the defendant) had to pay the costs of preparing the abstract of title, and the charges of his own attorney for barring the estate tail, and for copies of documents to accompany the title, and taking the chances of the plaintiff's mother's title to dower in the estate. Moreover, that the deed of conveyance was read over and explained to plaintiff, and he fully understood the nature and purport thereof; and that, at the request of plaintiff's wife, the defendant gave up all interest upon the bond.

JUDGMENT.

March 14.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The case on this bill is fraud. It is true, the estate was not sold for its value; and it is admitted that inadequacy of consideration is not in itself sufficient to set aside a conveyance when once completed; therefore allegations of fraud have been brought forward on behalf of the plaintiff, for the purpose of sustaining the bill; and the question is, whether these charges have been sufficiently made out by the evidence. The proof of the plaintiff being a weak-minded man is not sustained by sufficient evidence on his part. It is then alleged, for the purpose of shewing fraud, that the defendant induced the plaintiff to believe that he had entered into a contract to sell the estate before he really came into possession of it, when he executed the bond. I am of opinion that this is not at all made out by the testimony of witnesses. As to the evidence of the conversation, especially that part of it which relates to the defendant's having said, respecting the purchase, "I have done a good trick," considering the station in life of the parties, this might merely mean that he had made a good bargain. The gist of the case is, that the conversation occurred on the morning after the funeral. Vanstone says, that on coming from the funeral defendant told him that he had bought the property, and yet it appears that Vanstone went to the plaintiff the next morning for the purpose of renting the estate of him. Samuel Curson, the brother of plaintiff, in his evidence, says, he considered that the bond was produced in order that it might be mistaken for an agreement; but he does not venture to say that the defendant so represented it, or that any one considered it. There is no evidence of the defendant having misled the plaintiff; on the contrary, there exists distinct evidence that the parties knew well what they were doing. Both parties consulted Mr. Medland, and he rightly informed them of the state of the case. So far, therefore, from its being a matter of fraud, there appears, in the interview with Medland and Francis, to have been the greatest fairness. As to the conversation on coming from the funeral, Belworthy the younger, and Cann, two of the witnesses, say none such occurred. But suppose there had been; the parties went to Medland, their rights were fully explained and understood, and afterwards the conveyance was deliberately executed; and so far from plaintiff being deceived into a supposition that he was settling for full value, he and his wife, upon the occasion of completing the purchase, admitted that the defendant had made a good bargain, and got some allowance made on the strength of it. Upon the whole, I rather consider this as a case, not of Curson v. Belworthy, but of Wreford (plaintiff's attorney) v. Medland and Francis; and since the allegations of fraud have not been sustained by the evidence, I dismiss the bill with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Thursday, March 28.

NICHOLLS v. MARTINEZ.

Bills of exchange —Injunction—Floating balance.

A trading firm being indebted to A B, draws a bill on C D, who accepts it, payable to A B: the bill coming to maturity, is renewed at the request of C D, and a mortgage security is also given some time after, with a power of sale, business transactions continuing all the time between the firm and A B, and C D asking for no account, nor referring to any particular sum as covered by the securities successively given. Held, that C D has no equity to obtain an injunction to stay proceedings at law on the bills and the exercise of the power of sale, on the ground that the securities were only intended to cover the original debt, and did not extend to the floating balance.

This was a motion for an injunction to restrain the defendants from exercising a power of sale contained in a mortgage deed, and from bringing actions at law against the plaintiff, Frank Nicholls, in respect of a mortgage security and upon certain bills of exchange, and from negotiating or otherwise parting with such bills. It appeared that Claridge and Co. being indebted to Martinez and Co. the latter required to be furnished with security for the due payment of the debt; and Claridge and Co. having applied to the plaintiff, he consented to accommodate them with his acceptance. Accordingly, a bill was drawn upon and accepted by the plaintiff payable to Martinez and Co. which, being delivered by the plaintiff to Claridge and Co. they deposited with the defendants as security for their debt. The bill was drawn on the 30th Sept. 1841, for 2,000*l.* payable at twelve months; and on its becoming due was, at the request of the defendant, renewed in October 1842 by another bill of the same amount, which became due in June 1843. In April 1843 another bill for a like sum was accepted by the plaintiff, and in June following, Claridge and Co. not being prepared to take up either of the two bills, the plaintiff mortgaged certain lands in Oxfordshire for the amount to the defendants, with a power of sale in case of non-payment on the 9th of April, 1844. Claridge and Co.'s affairs becoming much embarrassed, a deed of conveyance of their estate and effects to a trustee for the creditors was prepared, and the defendants were requested by the plaintiffs to sign it, which they did. It appeared that at the time they did so, they endeavoured to prevail upon the plaintiff to execute a memorandum on the mortgage-deed, to the effect that it should stand as a security for all monies which should be due from Claridge and Co. not exceeding 4,000*l.* and that the plaintiff stipulated that all the defendants' rights as to him should remain, though they should sign the composition deed. Under these circumstances the defendants insisted they had a right to recover from the estate of Claridge and Co. all they could, and come upon the plaintiff for the remainder, to the extent of 4,000*l.* the debt to defendants from Claridge and Co. being 7,500*l.* The plaintiff, on the other hand, maintained that he was surety only for the sum due at the time the original bill was given, or at most only for such sum as might be due at the time the last of the securities was given; and that he was entitled to set off a proportionate part of whatever sum was recovered by the defendants against the 4,000*l.* No account was ever asked during the course of the transactions, nor was there any evidence of any understanding between the parties as to the extent of liability. It was after the last of the securities was given, and after the execution of the trust deed, that the question of the floating balance on the one hand and a fixed sum on the other arose. It was suggested that in the subsequent transactions payments might have been made to the extent of 4,000*l.* and that the plaintiff's liability was therefore discharged, on the principle of appropriating the first payments to the first debts, but there was no evidence that such was the fact, or that there was any payment at all. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff now moved for an injunction.

Tinney, Kindersley, and Forster, for the plaintiff.—The securities were given to secure a particular balance due from Claridge and Co. in September, 1841, or at most the sum due when the last of them was given; and in the course of dealings the whole may have been paid off. Besides, a surety who has had no consideration is favoured, and the necessity for an account is a sufficient ground of equity to enable us to obtain a footing here. We never proposed to do more than secure a particular sum, and did not at all contemplate a floating balance. The mortgage-deed itself shews that; for it is expressly in consideration of the two bills for 2,000*l.* each, and has no reference to a continuing security. The irreparable mischief which will ensue from the sale of the estate by those who have no interest in making the most of it is another ground for an injunction. We are willing to pay the money or the rents of the estate into court, but that is quite useless, the object of such a step being as a security, and the estate being here an abundant security itself.

Teed and Rolt, contrà.—There was no account ever sought by the plaintiff, nor any understanding come to between the parties during the transactions. At the time of the trust-deed being signed by the defendants, there was an express stipulation that their rights as against the plaintiff should continue; so that this was more than a mere acceptance. After the execution of the deed, a question then, for the first time, arose, as to the liability of the plaintiff, who insisted that he was entitled to the dividends on 4,000*l.* of the 7,500*l.* in which Claridge and Co. were indebted to the defendants. As to the security being itself sufficient, that is not so; for, to commercial men the use of the money is much more advantageous than any interest, however well secured. Besides, they ask by their motion not merely to restrain the exercise of the power of sale in the mortgage-deed, but for the common injunction not to proceed at law, and not to negotiate the bills. (Pease v. Hirst, 10 Bar. and Cr. 122.)

Tinney, in reply.

The Master of the Rolls.—The plaintiff has offered to pay the money into court, and is willing that a receiver may be appointed; and if that offer were embraced, I should be glad to accede to it; but, if not, I must make an order. The bill states two equities: first, that the bills of exchange were only given to secure the sums due at the date of those bills; and, secondly, that in respect of so much of the debt of 7,500*l.* as is paid by the plaintiff as surety, he has a right to receive dividends from the estate of Claridge and Co. to a proportionate extent. The facts as to the several securities are not disputed; but the plaintiff insists that they were given only to secure the sums then due, and that all subsequent payments were to be set off in reduction of that debt. After the securities were given there were many subsequent transactions; and the argument is that a total or partial payment is to be inferred, though it is not alleged by the bill now proved: I asked this particularly to prevent discussion, having for its object to induce me to infer what the party himself has not shewn or alleged. It is not material now, however, to examine that point, though, if it were, I should do so before disposing of the matter. At the renewal of the bill of Sept. 1841, does the plaintiff say any thing of intermediate transactions, or of the reduction of the balance as he now suggests; or does he do so again when he gave the mortgage security? No such thing! No account is taken; no balance ascertained, but the acceptance and security are still for the original sums, not the reduced amounts. We must look at the facts, not the representations as to what was the understanding. The motion must be refused, with costs.

Ridgway v. Woodhouse.

Will—Construction—Vested interest subject to be divested—Void condition.

A testator, by his will, gave an estate for life or during widowhood, to his wife, in the rents, issues, and profits of certain real estates, and by a codicil to his will, declared that "in case the sister of his wife should, during the lifetime or widowhood of his wife, reside with, or dwell in the house or place of residence of his wife, or become part of her family, then, for each and every day" she should so reside, the trustees were to retain out of the rents, &c. 100l. and pay the same to a dispensary, for its own use:—Held, that the life estate is not liable to be divested by non-compliance with the terms of the codicil, and that the condition is void.

Quære, would it make any difference if the gift over were such as the law would permit to take effect?

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff, Mrs. Ridgway, widow of the late Joseph Ridgway, of Ridgmont, Lancashire, against W. Woodhouse and J. Maugnall, the trustees and executors of his will, for the administration of his estate. The bill prayed that the will and codicil thereto might be established, the accounts taken, &c. &c., the trustees (Woodhouse and Maugnall) restrained from acting under the trusts of the will, and that a receiver should be appointed.

The testator, by his will, dated February 13, 1841, devised and bequeathed his freehold, copyhold, and personal estate to his trustees, on the trusts therein mentioned, and directed (inter alia) that they should pay certain legacies which he gave to charitable institutions out of his personal estate, and he expressly exempted the assets liable thereto from payment of his debts. He then gave to his wife the use of all the wine and the like articles of consumption which should be found in his house at his death, with a power, if unmarried, to dispose of them by will. He also gave her the use of all diamonds, china, plate, &c. during her widowhood; but if she should marry, then these were to fall into his residuary estate, and were at all events to do so at her death. The testator then gave an annuity of 400*l.* a year to a Mrs. Harrison, with a condition attached to the gift exactly such as that in the codicil to his will respecting his wife; and he devised his real estate in aid of his personal estate. The testator then directed that the residue of his personal estate, after payment of his debts and legacies, &c. should be laid out in real estate, and then devised all his real estate (including that directed to be purchased) to his trustees and their heirs, during the life of his wife or until she should marry again, upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and pay the charges of keeping the estates, &c. in repair, and of effecting insurances, and then to pay the residue of the rents, issues, and profits to his wife if she should so long continue his widow, and after her decease or marriage, then to the use of his nephew, John Ridgway. By a codicil, dated November 22, 1841, the testator reciting that he had made provision for his wife, declared that, "in case the sister of his wife should, during the lifetime and widowhood of his wife, reside with or dwell in the house or place of residence of his wife, or become part of her family, then for each and every day she should so reside with or dwell in the house or place of residence of his wife or become part of her family," he (the testator) directed his trustees to retain from the rents, &c. given to her, the sum of 100*l.*, and when so retained, to pay the same to the Bolton Dispensary in aid of the funds of that institution.

The testator died on the 26th of February, 1842, and immediately on that event happening, and before the contents of the will were known, Mrs. Ridgway's sister came to her house and has remained there ever since. The executors undertook the trusts of the will, and notice was duly served on the Bolton Dispensary of the penalty having been incurred; but they put forward no claim, nor ever took any step in the matter. Under these circumstances, this suit became necessary, to determine Mrs. Ridgway's interest in the wine, &c. and also in the diamonds, &c.: but the principal question, and the only one discussed, was that regarding the 100*l.* penalty.

Kindersley, Turner, and Chandless, for the plaintiff, Mrs. Ridgway. The principal question to be decided at present is that respecting the penalty in the event of the plaintiff's sister coming to reside with her. The sister did, in fact, go to Mrs. Ridgway immediately on the death of her husband and before the condition in the will was known, and she has remained there ever since, awaiting the issue of this suit. There is no ground suggested as regards the character of the lady for the exclusion; it was mere caprice, and is contrary to the policy of the law. There is no case precisely like this, but on principle the condition is unlawful. Besides, the gift over to the charity cannot take effect, for the testator has directed the residue of his personal estate, if any, after payment of debts and legacies, to be invested in real estate; and though he has directed in a previous clause that the assets should be marshalled so as to throw the charitable legacies entirely on the personal estate, he has by his direction to invest in realty prevented the same course from being followed here. If, then, the plaintiff be visited with the penalty the heir-at-law of the testator will take, contrary to the intention of the testator, for it was taken away from the plaintiff only to be given to the charity. A conditional limitation and a condition are very different; and the latter is to be construed very strictly, and must fail if it cannot take effect as the testator intended. Besides, the codicil is void for uncertainty; it is impossible to define what is meant by "residing" with the plaintiff; and although there are several words used, they do not accurately define what is meant. They referred to Jarman on Wills, as to conditions in terrorem and gifts over; and cited Fillingham v. Bromley (1 Turner & Russel, 530); Lloyd v. Branton (3 Mer. 108).

Lowndes and Elmsley, for the executors and trustees, submitted to be guided as the Court under all the circumstances should direct.

Rolt, for the heir-at-law of the testator.

The Master of the Rolls having asked whether the Attorney-General had been made a party, and whether the Bolton Dispensary had disclaimed, was informed that the Attorney-General was not a party, and that the treasurer of the charity had refused to take any steps; his lordship then observed, that it was not clear that the treasurer was competent to disclaim. He considered the case a very singular one; there was nothing to prevent Mrs. Ridgway from visiting or being visited by her sister; nothing to prevent that intercourse and sisterly affection which should subsist between them; but the testator simply said, I do not choose to have such a person in my house or place. As to the charity taking the penalty, that was incidental; it was not for the benefit of the charity. The cases, as to conditions in restraint of marriage and the like, do not at all approach this;—and as no cases exactly in point had been cited, his lordship took time to consider.

Tuesday, April 2.—This day his lordship stated, that having considered, his opinion was in favour of the plaintiff; the acts were such as could not be done without the consent of the wife, and upon her the penalty was to fall. This penalty was a condition, which, after the wife's interest in the land had vested, rendered it liable to be divested, and as such deserved to be strictly construed. All the purposes intended by the testator would not take effect, nor could the circumstances in which the penalty was to take effect concur, and therefore it appeared to him that the condition was void. It was in the nature of a condition subsequent, and it was intended to divest an interest previously vested.

Nicol v. Fletcher.

Motion for leave to amend—Motion to dismiss for want of prosecution—13th order.

A motion by the plaintiff to amend the bill by adding parties, and a motion by the defendants to dismiss for want of prosecution, coming on together, the former granted, but the plaintiff to pay the costs of both motions, though the defendant had notice of his motion.

This was a motion by the plaintiffs for leave to amend their bill by making John Howell a defendant thereto; and it was met by a counter motion on the part of the defendants to dismiss for want of prosecution. The suit had been originally instituted by the owners of the York against the charterers; and Howell claimed to be interested in the freight. The bill was filed on the 24th Sept. 1842, and was afterwards twice amended. On the 29th April, 1843, the answer of these defendants (or of the person whom they represent, they being assignees of a bankrupt) was complete. On the 8th Nov. 1843, an answer was put in by Ellis and Everington two of the defendants; and it then turned out that Howell was their partner, and ought therefore to be made a party. The illness of another defendant, however, preventing his answer from being put in, nothing was done as to Howell at that time. On the 2nd March, 1844, this last answer was put in, and even then the plaintiffs did nothing till the 15th March, when a warrant was taken out for leave to amend, and on the 16th the Master, refusing to make an order, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, and that a special application should, under the circumstances, be made to the Court, notice for that purpose was served on the defendants, and they were informed that they would be served with the amended bill, but not required to answer. In the meantime, however, on the 29th February, 1844, the defendants served notice on the plaintiffs that it was their intention to proceed with rigour, and to move to dismiss at the very earliest time they were permitted to do so by the practice of the Court. Accordingly, the two motions now came on together.

Stuart (with him Walpole) contended that the defendants' motion was strictly correct, that the administration of the bankrupt's estate was stopped by the bill, and that if amendment after amendment was allowed in this manner, the 13th order would be a dead letter. All that is said in the affidavit on the other side is, that Howell is a partner, but that can hardly be sufficient to deprive the defendants of their right to move to dismiss. Besides, the delay since November is quite enough to prevent the success of this motion. The plaintiff also has parted with his interest, having become bankrupt. [Here the counsel on the other side intimated that a supplemental bill was prepared, and would be filed next day.] He cited Bartolacci v. Johnstone (2 Hare, 632); Lloyd v. Wait (1 Myl. & Cr. 257).

Turner (with him Calvert) insisted that it was quite wrong for the defendants to give notice of motion, when they (the plaintiffs) had a right to amend. Besides, they could have effected the same thing on the application of the plaintiffs for leave to amend, as they could by their own motion. They have, therefore, caused a large addition to the costs. The plaintiffs first became acquainted with the fact of Howell being a partner in November, and the delay in making him a party arose from a wish to save expense, &c. having reason to expect some useful information from the answer of the defendant, whose illness prevented its being put in.

The Master of the Rolls stated the facts, and observed that he did not like the delay on the part of the plaintiffs after November, but it was accounted for from its being probably necessary, after getting in the answer of the other defendant, to add parties. This reason has not quite satisfied me; the delay is not justifiable, but it is excusable. As to the costs, the motion to dismiss was undoubtedly not necessary for opposing the other motion, but I cannot conclude that defendants were to act as if leave to amend would be given, or that they must have certainly known that it would be given. The motion was not necessary, but they had a right to make it. The plaintiff must pay the costs of both motions.

ADMIRALTY COURT

Tuesday, March 12.

THE CHRISTINA.

In a case of collision, where it is alleged that the two vessels are steering in directly opposite courses, and are both close-hauled (which, on each tack, is impossible), the Trinity Masters, amidst the conflicting evidence, infer that one was not quite close to the wind, from the circumstance of her having a square sail set, and that the other was close hauled from her having reefed sails, and the former is condemned in the damage for not having given way, and likewise in the costs of the suit. The vessel causing the damage must always, except under very peculiar circumstances, be condemned in costs.

This was a suit by the owners of the schooner Draper (80 tons) against the owners of the schooner Christina (100 tons) to recover compensation for the damage sustained by their vessel in a collision between the two.

The collision occurred on the night of the 29th of November between Dungeness and the North Foreland. The Christina, laden with coals, was on her voyage to Rouen, and the Draper, with a cargo of general merchandize, was bound to Portsmouth from Exmouth. The facts connected with the accident are sufficiently set forth in the summing up. The evidence on every point was most contradictory. The Draper suffered so considerably that she sunk in a quarter of an hour, and the Christina was compelled to put into Ramsgate for repairs.

Addams and Pratt, for the owners of the Draper.

Dodson, Sir J. (Q. A.) and Bayford, for the Christina.

Dr. LUSHINGTON (addressing Capt. Wellbank and Capt. Farquharson, of the Trinity House).—Such was the state of the weather at the period of this collision, that we must inevitably come to the conclusion that it could not have been the effect of accident, but that great and serious blame must attach on the one side or on the other. The statement on behalf of each vessel just makes the wind to suit her own story. For instance, it being admitted that the Draper's course was E.N.E. she makes the wind N. and then she becomes close hauled. So on the other hand, the course of the Christina was W.S.W. and she makes the wind N.W. so she also is close-hauled. It is, however, an undoubted point in this case, that the Christina was sailing on the starboard tack, and the Draper on the larboard tack. If the Christina was close hauled, and the Draper was free, the Draper should have given way; if the Draper were close-hauled, and the Christina were free, then, on the contrary, the Christina should have given way. But there might be a third case possible, not according to the statements, but possible according to the circumstances, viz. supposing both the vessels were to blame, that the one was sailing a course W.S.W and the other E.N.E. and the wind instead of being, as it is said on the one side N.W. and on the other N. it was just two points between, then both would be sailing free; and if both were sailing free, then I conceive, according to your rules, they ought to pass to port of each other. The statement made on the part of the Draper is this—that she was sailing E.N.E. with afresh breeze. She saw a schooner two points on her lee bow, steering W.S.W.; that believing she would pass 100 fathoms to leeward, she kept her course; that the schooner Christina drew further to the W. and, finally, after having drawn further to the W. she held to the wind, and steered W.N.W. altering her course four points—altering her course, therefore, to the utmost extent that it was possible to do. According to this statement she came within six points of the wind, as stated by the Draper herself. For what possible reason could she have adopted this measure? When these two vessels came within sight of each other, the Christina saw the Draper as soon as the Draper saw her; and, indeed, if I were to trust to the statements made here, I should say that the Draper saw the Christina at first. On the part of the Draper, it is stated that she immediately hailed; that the hailing was in vain, and that they put the helm of the Draper hard a lee—that is, they starboarded her helm, not doing what they would have done if the two vessels had met each other free. It seems that the Christina struck the Draper in the midships. Now, the statement on the part of the Christina is, that having passed Dungeness about half-past eleven o'clock at night, and the wind having veered about eleven a little more to the W. standing on her course W.S.W. upon the starboard tack, the wind then blowing from the N.W. the master and some of the men keeping a good look-out, he saw a vessel on her lee bow two points, and the vessel was steering N.E. and by E.; that he kept his luff, expecting that the vessel would pass to larboard, by putting her helm to port. If the statement be true, he did perfectly right. He states that he hailed the vessel; that no notice being taken, he then put the Christina's helm a-port; that the helm of the other vessel was starboarded, and then he put his helm to starboard, in the hope of alleviating the effect of the collision, which then became inevitable. It has been said that the Draper had a square-sail set, and that this is a proof that the wind was free, and that if there had been a good look-out, this might have prevented her seeing the Christina so soon as she ought.

Captain Wellbank.—Is it denied, Sir, on the part of the Draper, that she had that sail set?

The COURT.—It is a fact not denied, and you will tell me what will be its effect. A second point noticed and much insisted upon is, that the Christina was sailing single reefed. Lastly, they state that, after the collision had taken place, and damage had occurred to the Christina, as well as destruction to the other vessel, the Christina, being unable to pursue her course, went to Ramsgate, and this is a proof that the wind could not have blown from the N. but in all probability somewhat to the W.

Captain Wellbank.—The statements in this case are so conflicting, that previously to our coming here we required the deputy-master to be with us, so that our judgment should be confirmed by his. We came to this determination—namely, that it was very difficult to reconcile the statements. Both vessels say they saw each other on the lee bow, steering in opposite directions, and that they were close-hauled. Now, in steering in two directly opposite courses, vessels cannot be close-hauled on each tack; they must be two points free, bringing the vessel within six points of the wind. But supposing that each had rather hauled in nearer the land—supposing they have not been precisely in E.N.E. and W.N.W. courses, then, with a very small angle, deviating a point only, the statements may be reconciled, the vessels may have been brought to bear on each other's lee bow. These vessels acknowledge that they saw each other—the one half a mile, the other a quarter of a mile distant. The Draper was on the larboard tack; she acknowledges that she had a square-sail set. That would shew that the wind was rather free for her; she would not be quite close to the wind. The Christina was on the starboard tack with reefed sails; that would imply that she was close-hauled. Therefore our opinion is, that the Christina's statement is borne out, and that no blame is to be attached to her.

The COURT.—I pronounce against the claim.

Sir John Dodson.—And give costs?

Addams.—3,500*l*. worth of property has gone to the bottom.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—The question of costs has been present to my mind on many of these occasions, and I have sometimes felt the difficulty in determining the course I ought to pursue, not on account of any doubt I entertain in my own mind, but because I have reason to think that there has not been an uniform course of proceedings in these courts on the subject. It is evident that if there had been a cross action on this occasion, and the party proceeded against in this case had succeeded, according to the rule I have always followed, and which seems an inevitable rule under the circumstances, the present action would have been dismissed with costs, and the other vessel would have succeeded. It does seem to me a great anomaly, that where the party has not proceeded, though he may have received damage, but is merely proceeded against, that he should not have his costs. But it is a still greater anomaly, if one considers the subject a little more deeply, because what is the decision to which the Court must now come, and what is the opinion of the Trinity Masters? That the collision entirely arose from the neglect or mismanagement of those on board the vessel that has been lost. If this be so, upon what possible principle is it that the party proceeded against is not to have his costs? Can it be contended that where a party commences a suit, in order to compel another individual to indemnify him for that loss which he has occasioned by his own neglect or his own want of good seamanship, that that individual is to bear the burthen of the litigation conducted against him unsuccessfully? Again, upon another ground, I am inclined to come to the same opinion. The principle acted upon by Lord Cottenham, when Lord Chancellor, and adopted by the present Master of the Rolls, and other judges, who have given the greatest consideration to the subject of costs, is, that the party who fails in any suit or action, except under very peculiar circumstances indeed, calling for a departure from a general rule, should, not as a punishment, but as a matter of justice, indemnify the party whom he has sued, without sufficient ground in law and fact, for the expenses to which he has been put. These are the rules which, I confess, are entirely satisfactory to my mind, and though I exceedingly regret that I have to add to the loss of the owners and the burthen of the underwriters, yet as a matter of justice to the other party, to which I dare not shut my eyes, I am bound to give them their costs.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, April 3.

Ex parte TURNER and HENSMAN, re MARTIN.

Contempt—Costs—Notice of Motion.

In consequence of the order made by Sir George Rose in this bankruptcy against Mr. Van Sandau for contempt of Court (reported antè, vol. 2, p. 375), Mr. Van Sandau, on the 10th of February last, applied to the Court for a delay in the execution, which application was complied with. On the 14th of Feb. Mr. Van Sandau presented a petition for the discharge of the order, but the petition, which was heard on the 17th, was dismissed with costs. The order was accordingly executed, and on the 19th of Feb. Mr. Van Sandau being in custody under the order, presented a petition to be released, and he was accordingly released upon his submission and depositing the sum of 200*l*. on account of costs. Since his discharge, Mr. Van Sandau had commenced an action against Messrs. Turner and Hensman for this amount. This petition was accordingly presented for the purpose of restraining the respondent from the further prosecution of the action.

Swanston and Simon, for petitioners, cited Ex parte Clarke (1 R. & M. 563); Aiton v. Heron (2 M. & K. 390); Re Weaver (2 M. & C. 441); and Blundell v. Gladstone (9 Sim. 455).

Bagshawe and Rolt, for the respondent.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—It appears to me that the petition should stand over without prejudice until the issues of fact are joined.

Bagshawe and Rolt submitted that the petition should be immediately dismissed; but

The CHIEF JUDGE directed that the petition should stand over, without prejudice to any question, until after such issue or issues of fact, if any, which shall be joined in the action shall have been joined, or until further order, with liberty to apply.

Costs reserved.

Ex parte VAN SANDAU, re MARTIN.

This was a motion for the purpose of setting aside the certificates of taxation, by Mr. Vizard, of the costs to Messrs. Turner and Hensman, payable by Mr. Van Sandau under Sir George Rose's order; but as the notice of motion did not state the items which were objected to, the motion was directed to stand over, with liberty to amend or to present a petition.

Costs reserved.

Ex parte TURNER and HENSMAN, re MARTIN.

This was an application for the payment out of court to the petitioner of the sum of 200*l*., deposited by Mr. Van Sandau as security for the costs directed by Sir George Rose to be paid by him.

Swanston, Russell, and Simon, for the applicants, consented to limit the application to the sum of 150*l*.

Bagshawe and Rolt, for the respondents, objected to any portion of the sum being paid, until the retaxation of the costs, according to their previous application, and enumerated several of the objectionable items claimed by Messrs. Turner and Hensman.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—A person committed and in custody for a contempt, not for disobedience to an order, but on a question of a more general and serious nature, and also for the payment of the costs incurred, applies to be discharged from custody upon making what is usually called an apology. The Court makes the order, upon the party depositing with the officer of the Court the sum of 200*l*., to answer what upon taxation might appear to be the amount of costs. The applicant, according to these terms, obtains his discharge and deposits the money. No attempt is made to question any part of this order by appeal or otherwise. The costs, charges, and expenses on account of which this 200*l*. was deposited, have been taxed. The certificates are issued, and the party liable has made a motion upon them, but no irregularity is said to exist in the certificates, and it is not at all questioned that something is due. In this situation the party under this liability, himself a professional man, applies for a review of the taxation. No application is made to retax; but an application is made which no person acquainted with the forms of the Court could consider as one involving the retaxation, but as one supposing some vice or irregularity to exist in the certificates. Upon opening it, however, it appears to be an application for mere taxation. Perhaps the strictly right course for the Court to pursue would have been to refuse this application. However, it is allowed to stand over, with liberty to amend. There is, on the other hand, a regular motion to have this 200*l*. paid out of court. I then thought it reasonable to ask whether the party liable to pay would consent to the payment of some portion, as he must know the quantum for which he has a case for complaint. That offer, however, is declined, and it being admitted that something is due, and a refusal being given to state the sum alleged to be erroneous, the only course, in my opinion, but for the consent of the party moving, would have been to direct the whole sum to be paid, the party receiving the money undertaking to restore what might be considered erroneously allowed on taxation; but upon the consent of the parties, that sum is reduced to 150*l*. The counsel for the party liable have thought proper to enter into particulars, and I must say that I heard that part of the case, considering from whence it came, with some degree of surprise. Upon the consent, then, of Messrs. Turner and Hensman, let the sum of 150*l*. be paid to them on account, without prejudice to any question of taxation.

Costs reserved.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Thursday, March 14.

SYMONS v. TOZER.

Where a will, opposed to the constant declarations, and to the previous act of the deceased, is disputed on the ground of fraud and forgery, and those charges are not substantiated by evidence, the Court will be satisfied with the unshaken testimony of the two attesting witnesses as to the execution, and, upon their testimony alone, pronounce for the validity of the paper.

This is a matter of propounding in solemn form of law the last will of Mr. Jeremiah Symons, late of St. Mary Church, near Torquay, Devon, who died on the 7th of June, 1842, leaving personal property amounting to between 1,200*l*. and 1,500*l*.

The will now in dispute is propounded by the widow of the deceased, who is appointed sole executrix (and is almost universal legatee) under it. It bears date May 17, 1842.

The will is opposed on behalf of the minor children of Mrs. Tozer, niece and only next of kin of the deceased (who is benefited by a prior paper of September, 1837), on the alleged grounds of fraud and forgery.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The argument was heard several terms back, and Judgment was now pronounced by Sir H. J. FUST.—From the history of the deceased, it appears that he married his present widow in 1827, she being at the time a widow, with five children. That union was not attended with very great happiness to the parties; for it seems that in January of the following year they separated and lived apart until September, when a reconciliation took place, and cohabitation was resumed. The deceased appears to have been an excitable, irritable man, and was in the habit of using very violent language against his wife. Indeed, he often charged her with very grave offences; accused her of robbing him, of breaking open his boxes, and of mutilating a bond for 150*l*., which he had advanced to her before their marriage in 1825, by erasing the name of her brother, who was one of the sureties, whereby the bond was rendered invalid. On the other hand, very different seem to have been the feelings of the testator with regard to the other party in the cause. There is a great body of evidence brought forward to shew that he entertained a very great regard for Mrs. Tozer, his niece, and her family, to whom he had often declared that he should leave the bulk of his property; and he continued to manifest these sentiments up to May 1842, the very month in which the will was executed, for there is a letter from the deceased to Mrs. Tozer, bearing date the 6th of May of that same year. In the prior will of September 1837, he testified his regard to that family, and his intentions towards them, in a very unequivocal manner, by bequeathing the bulk of his property to trustees for the benefit of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Tozer, bequeathing to his wife only an annuity of 10*l*. during her life or widowhood; and he assigned in this will his reasons for the disposition, that he had advanced to his wife before marriage 150*l*. on a bond from herself and surety, which bond some evil-disposed person had cancelled, and upon which he had received neither principal nor interest; that he had in 1829 advanced to her family 100*l*. on a promissory note, of which he had received nothing; and as all his wife's property had been settled upon herself, he felt justified in bequeathing to her so limited a sum. Nothing can shew in a more decisive manner the intentions of the deceased, and the grounds upon which the first disposition of the testator's property was founded. This paper remained in the deceased's possession until the 19th of June, 1839, when he deposited it with one of the executors and trustees for safe custody, at the time of his removal from Plymouth to St. Mary Church; and this continued to be his will—at any rate, until the 17th of May, 1842. Up to that time there is no evidence of any change of intention; and the letters to Mrs. Tozer during that year, and even in the month of May, evince no diminution of regard. So far, therefore, as the feelings of the testator are concerned towards the opposing parties in the suit, the will now propounded receives no sort of support. The probability, therefore, is against it; and now the question is, whether that probability is rebutted by the evidence of the attesting witnesses in support of the paper, or is strengthened and confirmed by the testimony brought forward against it? The case set up in opposition to the paper is a very strong one, and very grave charges of fraud and of forgery are brought against the widow of the deceased. The witnesses in support of the plea containing them depose to a very minute detail of circumstances, which, if supported, can have very little doubt of the truth of the charge. But are they so supported? All these witnesses speak to "the desperate and horrid terms" on which the deceased lived with his wife, and say that he always used to characterize her as a "crafty and designing woman, up to every trick, and one who would deceive the very elect." With this description of her character, what charges do they proceed to bring against her? Charges so improbable that they cannot be credited without the strongest testimony. Can the Court believe that any woman, especially a very "cunning woman," would inform the intimate friends of Mr. Symons of her desire to break open his trunk and to abstract his papers? or that she would go to two attorneys, one after the other, who were perfect strangers to her, and propose the concoction of a will without the knowledge of the testator? No woman could be so foolish or so ignorant. Then as to the charge brought against Mrs. Symons, of her introducing the two attesting witnesses into her husband's house by stratagem, the evidence altogether fails to support it. There is a letter before the Court, written by the deceased, inviting Mrs. Susannah Symons, one of the subscribed witnesses, and the tone of the letter entirely overthrows the supposition that it was obtained from him, as is alleged, by the importunity of his wife. Indeed, there are several letters written by the deceased to Mrs. Susannah Symons, and they all evince very considerable regard for that lady. With regard to the other attesting witness, Leath, the accusation of stratagem is equally unsupported. Mrs. Susannah Symons, who is quite worthy of credit, proves that, at the dictation of the deceased himself, she wrote to him requesting his presence; and that it was he, and he alone, who wished Leath to come. The evidence on this charge, as on the others, is slight indeed, in comparison with the serious charges brought against Mrs. Symons. We now come to the execution of the paper itself; and, though the disposition contained in it may seem improbable, and inconsistent with the supposed feelings and previous acts of the deceased, yet, if it is a paper duly executed, and supported by adequate evidence, it is entitled to probate; and, certainly, the evidence is quite satisfactory. The two attesting witnesses give a clear and credible account of the transaction, and there is no ground on which their testimony can be impugned. The charges set up in opposition to the execution of the paper do not at all shake it. First, there is the story told by Mr. Cockerell, of Mrs. Symons having gone to him on the 19th of May, two days after the pretended execution of the paper, and having proposed to him the making of a will without the testator's knowledge; and certainly it this were true, the time at which it occurred would throw the greatest possible suspicion on the whole transaction. If a real will had been executed in Mrs. Symons's favour on the 17th, she would not want a false one on the 19th; but the Court cannot believe that account. It is another of those abominable stories to which allusion has already been made - so unnatural and improbable in themselves, that they demand the most conclusive testimony; and the character of Mr. Cockerell is not described as such as to remove the doubt which the very great improbability of the story excites. Secondly, there is a circumstance which naturally arouses suspicion with regard to the execution of this paper. In the instructions, the date is the 17th of June, 1842—quite an impossible date, for before that time the testator was dead, and in the will the execution appears to have taken place on the 17th of May. But does this circumstance render the evidence of the attesting witnesses quite unworthy of credit? I think not. It is difficult to conceive how this mistake can have originated, and it remains unexplained, but the credibility, at least, of one of the attesting witnesses is quite unaffected by it, who was no party to the paper of instructions. Then Mr. Pridham, a solicitor, who was employed by the deceased in preparing the will of 1837, has had interviews with the attesting witnesses since the deceased's death, and he speaks of their giving different accounts of the transaction. But Mr. Pridham has been employed by the solicitor of Mr. Tozer, and there is evidently much ill-will between the parties, and he does not desire to speak frankly. I do not think that his evidence materially shakes the credit due to the attesting witnesses. Again, it is suggested that the signature is not in the handwriting of the deceased: but the witnesses who expressed their belief that it is not the testator's writing enter into no particulars, merely state the bare fact, and give evidence, very weak indeed, in opposition to the testimony of those who swear that they saw him write it. Another, and a very serious charge, is, that the will produced to the mourners at the deceased's house, immediately after the funeral, is a very different will from that now before the Court; that these parties having forged one paper, have forged another; and in one case have committed two forgeries of one instrument. On this most grave charge, Mr. Appleton, the medical attendant of the deceased, has been produced, and he certainly expresses a very decided belief that the paper which he saw on the day of the deceased's funeral is not the paper now propounded—but he is the only witness (and a great part of his evidence is extra articulate) on a point on which other testimony might have been had—he speaks from one inspection of the will twelve months before, and though he may depose sincerely, his evidence is not convincing on so grave a charge. Besides, other facts shew how improbable—almost impossible it was. From the proceedings which have taken place in relation to this suit, the fraud must have been committed between the 1st and the 12th of June, 1843, and during that period the two attesting witnesses, Susannah Symons and Leath, are proved to have been—one at Devonport, and the other at Torquay. The Court cannot but think that this is the identical paper produced at the deceased's death, and there is nothing in the cause to overturn the strong and satisfactory evidence which supports the valid execution of the paper. There is no ground for imputing to Mrs. Symons the improper practices charged against her, and though the deceased previously entertained no great affection for her, it is not improbable that at the latter part of his life he should determine to atone for his previous injustice, and bequeath to her the bulk of his property. The evidence establishes that he has done so, and to Mrs. Symons, as executrix, the Court now decrees probate of the paper.

Harding applied for costs. The very grave charges brought against Mrs. Symons had been disproved and the parties making them ought to be condemned into costs.

The COURT, however, thought that the case was one which required investigation, and ordered the costs to be paid out of the estate.

TUCKWELL v. CORNICK.

Where a will is obtained from an old and infirm testatrix largely benefiting the drawer (an attorney), the Court requires strong evidence either as to instructions or execution; and in this case, where there is no proof of instructions from the deceased, or even of a knowledge of contents, and only weak evidence as to a bare act of execution, probate is refused.

Mrs. Sarah Cornick, widow, who died on the 17th of June, 1842, leaving personal property to the amount of about 500*l*. was the deceased in this cause.

A will, bearing date the 31st day of May, with a codicil dated 13th of June, 1842, within four days of the death of the deceased, is now propounded by Mr. Joseph Samuel Tuckwell, an attorney in London, as sole executor. The will bequeaths 20*l*. each to two grand-children of the testatrix (her next of kin), as an apprenticeship fee, and 20*l*. more when they shall attain the age of twenty-one years. Mr. Tuckwell has under it 5*l*. for mourning, 10*l*. for his trouble in the execution of the will, and the residue; and amongst the legatees are five brothers and sisters of Mr Tuckwell, who have 70*l*. between them. Besides the contingency of the children's death, Mr. Tuckwell would have about 100*l*. out of the 500*l*. The bequests to the grand-children were increased by the codicil which had been made in consequence of the interference of Mr. Wainwright, the nephew of the gentleman with whom the testatrix had lived as housekeeper. The deceased, at the time of the execution of the papers, was surrounded by Tuckwell, his sister, and family (the sister having formerly been her fellow-servant).

The will and codicil are opposed on behalf of the minor grand-children, on the ground that they were obtained from an old, imbecile woman, by undue influence exercised over her mind on the part of the drawer and his sister, who are largely benefited under them.

Phillimore, in favour of the will (Jan. 22).

White, contrà. (2 Law T. R. 336.)

Judgment was now pronounced by

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—The benefit which Tuckwell, the drawer, took under this will was a startling circumstance to begin with. It excited a suspicion against the paper. Was that suspicion removed by the other circumstances? No. The evidence of Mr. Wainwright proved that the will did not contain the intentions of the deceased; and the codicil was a mere attempt to prop up a will which could not stand by itself. As to the will, there was no proof that there were instructions for it from the deceased; and the evidence as to execution was very bare and unsatisfactory, and carried with it nothing to shew that the deceased had a knowledge of the contents of the will, or that she was perfectly conscious of the act she was doing. Then, as to the codicil, which had been made solely in consequence of the very proper interference of Mr. Wainwright in defence of the grand-children, the instructions were obtained by constant interrogatories and leading questions put into the ear of the deceased by parties interested. The fact was, that the testatrix had no power of individual action; she would do or say almost any thing demanded of her. The medical attendant deposed, that during the last month of her life she was in a state, if not comatose, lethargic and insensible. The will and codicil were not the testamentary acts of the deceased, but of the party about her. Mr. Tuckwell seemed to be much respected by his employers, and, apart from this transaction, there was nothing reflecting upon his general character; but he had obtained a will in his own favour from a woman of advanced age, whose bodily and mental faculties were impaired, and had behaved in a very improper manner to Mr. Wainwright, when he communicated with the deceased and ascertained from her that the will did not contain her intentions. He had then induced the deceased to make a codicil a little more in unison with her own feelings; but neither paper had proceeded from her deliberate, uncontrolled will, and therefore neither were entitled to probate. Probate refused.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

SOMERSET LENT ASSIZES, 1844.

Taunton, Monday, April 1.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. MANLEY.

Prisoner induced a child, of the age of nine years, to rob his father's till, and give him the money. On an indictment as principal, for this offence, it is a question for the jury whether the child was an innocent agent, or particeps criminis, and, if the latter, the prisoner must be acquitted.

Indictment for larceny.

The facts, as proved by the prosecution, were, that the prisoner was an apprentice of the prosecutor: that he had induced the son of the prosecutor, a child of the age of nine years, to take money from his father's till, and give to him. On cross-examination it further appeared, that the child had done the like for other boys.

Cox, for the prisoner, submitted that the evidence did not sustain the indictment. The prisoner was charged with stealing money as principal,—the evidence shewed him to be either an accessory or a receiver. If an offence be committed through the medium of an innocent agent, the employer, though absent when the act was done, is answerable as a principal. (R. v. Giles, 1 Moody. C. C. 166; Reg. v. Michael, 2 Moody, C. C. 120; 9 C. & P. 356.) But if the instrument be aware of the consequences of his act, he is the principal in the first degree; and the employer, if he be absent when the fact is committed, is an accessory before the fact. (R. v. Stewart, R. & R. 363.) In this case, the evidence had shewn, beyond doubt, that the child was of the age of discretion, and fully aware of the consequences of his act.

WIGHTMAN, J.—What do you mean by an innocent agent if this child be not one?

Cox.—An agent who, from age, defect of understanding, ignorance of the fact, or other cause, cannot be particeps criminis.

WIGHTMAN, J.—But though an act done through the medium of an innocent agent makes the prisoner a principal, how do you shew that he is not a principal where the act is done through the medium of a responsible agent?

Cox.—Because, if the agent be responsible, he becomes the principal; and to constitute a principal, he must be the actor or actual perpetrator of the fact, or cognizant of the crime, and near enough to render assistance. Though there be a previous concerted plan, those not present or near enough to aid at the time when the offence is committed are not principals, but accessaries before the fact. (See cases cited Arch. 9th ed. p. 4.)

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is a question for the jury if the child was an innocent agent.

WIGHTMAN, J. (to the jury).—Apart from consideration of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner generally, if you believe the story told by the child, you will have to determine whether that child was an innocent agent in this transaction; that is, whether he knew that he was doing wrong, or was acting altogether unconsciously of guilt, and entirely at the dictation of the prisoner; for if you should be of opinion that he was not an innocent agent, you cannot find the prisoner guilty as a principal under this indictment. Verdict, not guilty.

Carrow, for the prosecution.

Cox, for the prisoner,

Rossiter, prisoner's attorney.

REG. v. WM. BARTLETT and JOHN ANDERSON.

Evidence.

The wife of one of two prisoners jointly indicted for a joint larceny is admissible, under the circumstances, as a witness for the other prisoner.

Prisoners were jointly indicted for stealing potatoes.

It appeared upon the evidence, that some of the potatoes were found in the apartment of one of the prisoners, and others in that of the other.

One of the prisoners called the wife of the other to prove that the potatoes found in his apartment were not the property of the prosecutor.

H. T. Cole, for the prosecution, objected, upon the authority of Smith's case (1 Moody, C. C. 289); Hood's case (Ad. 281); Frederic's case (2 Str. 1095), that the wife of one of two prisoners jointly indicted for a joint offence cannot be examined in favour of the other prisoner, because her evidence would go to shew that the witnesses for the prosecution were mistaken as to some part of the evidence, and thus the husband would be benefited.

WIGHTMAN, J. was inclined to admit the evidence, but would consult his brother Cresswell.

Their Lordships having consulted,

WIGHTMAN, J.—The point is a very nice one, but I am inclined, though with considerable doubt, to admit the evidence, and upon these grounds; that although the prisoners are jointly indicted, the offence is distinct and severable. It differs in its circumstances from Smith's case, for here, evidence that one prisoner did honestly obtain the potatoes found in his apartments does not necessarily benefit the other prisoner, the husband of the witness. The defence of each is distinct, and it would be hard to say that one should be precluded from his defence because it might, by some remote possibility, benefit the other. I shall receive the evidence, but with considerable doubt.

SOUTH WALES CIRCUIT.

Presteign, March 30.

(Before MAULE, J.)

REG. v. JONES.

An averment in an indictment of the value of a bank note is material.

Where a prisoner was indicted for stealing a bank note, alleged to be of the value of 10l. and it was proved to be of the value of 5l. only, held, that it was a material variance.

The prisoner was charged with larceny in a dwelling house.

The indictment alleged that the prisoner, in the dwelling-house of one William Price, feloniously stole, &c "one bank note, for the payment of 10*l. and of the value of* 10*l.*" and three sovereigns, of the monies, &c. of the prosecutor, William Morris, concluding contra formam statuti and contra pacem.

The prosecutor deposed to having lodged in the same room as the prisoner on the night of the 2nd October, and to having lost during the night a 5*l.* note and three sovereigns.

E. V. Williams, for the prisoner, submitted that there was a variance between the value of the note as alleged in the indictment and that proved by the prosecutor; and that inasmuch as the note was stated in the indictment to be of the value of 10*l.* the variance was material.

Wilson, for the Crown, contended that the averment of value was not a material averment.

MAULE, J.—Does the indictment aver that the note was of the value of 10*l*?

Clerk of Assize.—Yes, my lord.

MAULE, J.—Then the averment is material, and we can hear nothing further about the note.

W. Knighten, attorney for the Crown.

W. Stephens, for the prisoner.

REG. v. HARRIS.

Where a prisoner about to be committed on a charge of felony was told that he was at liberty to make any statement, but that whatever he said would be taken down and used against him, and the prisoner thereupon made a statement, which was reduced into writing, and sought to be given in evidence against him on his trial, held, that it could not be given in evidence against him.

The prisoner was charged with stealing oats.

The justice's clerk was called to prove a statement made by the prisoner when he was committed. He stated that previously to the prisoner making the statement, he told him that he was at liberty to make any statement, but "that whatever he said would be taken down and used against him."

MAULE, J.—That will not do.

E. V. Williams.—I submit, my lord, that it is perfectly regular; it is not like the case of The King v. Drew, where the prisoner was told that whatever he said would be used for or against him; here the prisoner was expressly told that whatever he said would be used against him.

MAULE, J.—The prisoner was told that whatever he said would be taken down and used against him. I cannot say that that did not induce him to say something which he thought might be favourable to him. I shall reject the statement.

P. Hay, attorney for the prosecution.

STEDMAN v. BYWATER.

Where a principal directs his agent to pay a sum of money to a third party upon certain terms, and suffers the agent to make himself personally responsible for it, he cannot afterwards retract the authority and maintain an action against the agent for the money, if the terms upon which he was to pay it were complied with.

This was an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use.

Plaintiff employed defendant, an auctioneer, to sell his effects. On the day of sale C appeared and threatened to distrain on the effects if the sum of 12*l.* 10s. claimed for arrears of rent, were not paid him. Plaintiff (whose ancestor had many years ago cribbed the property in respect of which the claim was made from the waste) disputed the title of C, but directed the defendant to pay C, upon certain conditions. The defendant thereupon undertook by parol to pay C the 12*l.* 10s. upon the condition being fulfilled. C was satisfied with defendant's undertaking, and did not distrain. After the sale, but before the money was paid over by the defendant to C, plaintiff countermanded the authority to defendant, and demanded the money from him. The defendant refused, and paid the 12*l.* 10s. to C.

Chilton, Q. C. contended that it was competent for the plaintiff to retract the authority to the defendant at any time before the money was paid over to C.

E. V. Williams, contrà.—The plaintiff having allowed defendant to pledge himself to C for payment of the money, could not afterwards retract his authority if the conditions upon which the money was to be paid were complied with.

MAULE, J.—That is so, no doubt.

It afterwards turned out that the terms upon which C was to be paid had not been complied with, and the plaintiff had a verdict.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

APRIL SESSIONS.

Tuesday, April 9.

REG. v. STEVENS.

Sufficiency of the pretence proved in an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences.

The prisoner was indicted, at the March Sessions, for obtaining money under false pretences, and the substance of the evidence was this:—He had been in the habit of pledging ingots of silver with the prosecutor, and receiving a certain advance per ounce upon them. These had been generally tested at the time, and found to be genuine; and had been frequently redeemed, and pledged again for the same sums. On the several days named in the indictment, the prisoner brought certain ingots, similar in appearance to the former ones, and, laying them on the counter, said, "Eight ounces each, at four shillings an ounce, the same as before." The money was then advanced upon them, and it was afterwards found that they were composed of a metal utterly worthless. All the genuine ingots had been redeemed, but at the period of the trial the prosecutor had seventy or eighty of the spurious ones in his possession.

He stated on his examination, that on the days in question he did not test the metal, it being the same in appearance, and similarly wrapped up, as the former, and that he trusted to the representations of the prisoner. Had a stranger come into the shop with such articles, he should unquestionably have tested them before he made any advance.

Prendergast, for the prisoner, contended that this could not be considered a false pretence within the statute. It must be made with regard to some fact, and not merely as to the value or quality of the goods. A tradesman is bound to use prudence and discretion in the conduct of his business, and if his judgment fails him in a matter where, if fairly exercised, it would have protected him, he has no right to complain.

The COMMON SERJEANT.—Surely, if a man represents an article to be one thing and it turns out to be another, he is indictable.

Prendergast.—Here the ingots are all metal. The only difference is in their quality. If a man buys a coat on the representation of its being of the best Saxony cloth, and it is of an inferior description, there is no false pretence for which the seller is criminally liable. It may be a breach of warranty, but can be nothing more. He cited R. v. Codrington (1 C. & P. 661); R. v. Reed (7 C. & P. 848); R. v. Barnard (7 C. & P. 784), and pressed that the point should be reserved.

The COMMON SERJEANT.—I hold the gist of this case to be the difference in the nature of the articles themselves. They were represented to be silver, and they turn out to be pewter. If the jury believe the facts that have been stated, there was a deliberate intention on the part of the prisoner falsely to pretend that they were the same as had been previously pledged, whereas, not in mere quality, but in substance, they are totally different. I will not reserve the point for the fifteen judges, but should the prisoner be convicted, I will respite the sentence and consult some of them before the next session. A verdict of guilty was returned, and now the COMMON SERJEANT stated that, having mentioned the point to some of their lordships, they were of opinion that the false pretence was sufficiently made out.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

LIMERICK COUNTY SUMMER ASSIZES.

(Before JACKSON, J.)

March 7 and 8.

REG. v. JOHN LYNCH, PATRICK LYNCH, and EDWARD CONWAY.

A county juror, even in a capital case, and after the judge has commenced his charge, may be brought in the custody of the sheriff into the adjoining city Court as a witness, without vitiating the trial.

The names of the witnesses on the back of an indictment need not be in the hand-writing of the Clerk of the Crown or his deputy.

Where, without any fatality occurring to any of them, and without the consent of the prisoners, a jury are discharged without giving a verdict, Quære, Can the prisoners be tried again for the same offence?

The prisoners were indicted for murder. John Lynch was now for the first time put on his trial, but the other prisoners had been no less than three times tried for the same offence. On the first occasion, the jury not being able to agree, were discharged; on the second occasion (at the adjourned Summer Assizes, in 1843), after the case had been gone through, one of the jurors was taken so seriously ill, that the jury were obliged to be discharged. A third jury was then, at the same assizes, sworn to try the case, and this jury, like the first, being unable to agree to a verdict, were discharged at a late hour on a Saturday night by Mr. Justice Jackson, who then, as now, presided in the County Court; under these circumstances,

Coppinger (with whom were J. Waller and Sir Coleman O'Loughlin), on behalf of Patrick Lynch and Edward Conway, tendered a plea setting out the facts of the prisoners having been tried before, and the jury being discharged without the occurrence of any fatality or accident, they not having agreed to a verdict, and that their discharge was without the consent of the prisoners. To this plea

Bennett, Q. C. on behalf of the Crown, replied.

JACKSON, J.—The point having been raised before (a), as it was a new one, I took every pains to have the matter investigated, and I wrote to Mr. Justice Cresswell on the subject, who informed me that a similar case was not known to have occurred except once before Lord Denman, and that on that occasion the feeling in Westminster Hall on the subject was in favour of the point that a jury might be discharged under such circumstances, and the prisoner legally tried again. I endeavoured to obtain the opinion of the twelve judges upon the point, but unfortunately some of them were ill; however, the majority of them attended, but they had an objection to go into any case à priori, and declined coming to any resolution on the subject until the question is brought before them regularly upon some case in which the point is raised. The course, therefore, which I shall now adopt is to reserve the question, and allow it to go before the judges, and proceed with the trial. It is a point of too great importance for me to decide in this court.

The trial was then proceeded with.

While his lordship was charging the jury, it was intimated that one of the jurors was required to give evidence in a civil case which was then in course of trial in the City Court, before the Chief Baron.

JACKSON, J. did not think he could allow a juror to leave the box, as the jury were empanelled to try a very serious crime,—a circumstance of the kind had never come under his notice while he was on circuit, and he should, therefore, consult with the Chief Baron before he could allow the juror to go.

His lordship then retired for about a quarter of an hour, and, upon his return, stated that, upon consultation with the Chief Baron, he had determined to permit him to go into the other Court and give his evidence, in custody of the sheriff.

Mr. O'Grady, the juror, was then taken into the other court by the sheriff, upon which Coppinger called upon his lordship to discharge the jury, and contended that the trial could not now proceed, that there had been a separation of the jury, and they were now virtually discharged; for one of them had gone into another county from that in which they were sworn, for the County Court-house was, for the purposes of trials, reckoned a part of the county of Limerick; but the City Court, into which the juror had gone was in the county of the city of Limerick; the jury were bound to stand together.

JACKSON, J.—I cannot agree with you; but I shall take a note of your objection.

The juror having returned, the learned judge proceeded to finish his charge to the jury.

It was then objected by Sir Coleman O'Loughlin, that the names of the witnesses indorsed upon the indictment were not in the handwriting of the Clerk of the Crown or his deputy (the fact was admitted). (See Reg. v. O'Connell, 2 Law T. p. 248, note (a).)

JACKSON, J. overruled the objection, but took a note of it.

John Lynch was acquitted, Patrick Lynch and Edward Conway were found guilty, and sentenced to be executed on the 8th May.

(a) At the adjourned summer assizes of 1843 a similar plea was put in, but, of course, as the jury were discharged without giving a verdict, the question was not at that time further pressed by the prisoners' counsel.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE past week has been a holiday with Parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

POST-OFFICE STATISTICS.—Some voluminous and highly interesting statistical returns have recently been presented to the House of Commons, on the motion of Lord Ebrington, Sir C. E. Douglas, Bart. Dr. J. Bowring, and Mr. Hutt. The following results are obtained. The total number of letters alleged to be missing amounted, in October and November 1839, to 588, of which 224 were found; in October and November 1842, to 2,058, of which 592 were found; and in the two months ending July 5, 1843, to 1,800, of which 520 were found. The number of applications as to delay of letters amounted, at the above-mentioned periods, to 175, 316, and 260, respectively. The number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom amounted, in one week of the year 1839, to 1,585,973; in one week of the year 1842, to 4,202,546; in one week of 1843, to 4,020,246; and in the week ending May 21, 1843, to 4,212,658, shewing that the recent reduction in the rates of postage has nearly trebled the number of letters despatched through the Post-office. The total number of persons employed in the post-offices of the United Kingdom in May 1843, amounted altogether to 11,302; of whom 8,398 were employed in England and Wales, 1,399 in Scotland, and 1,505 in Ireland. This return, however, only relates to such situations as the Postmaster-General appoints to. The total number of letters forwarded through France to the East-Indies, viâ Egypt, amounted, in 1839, to 20,827; in 1840, to 72,516; in 1841, to 45,536; in 1842, to 44,079; and in 1843, to 14,509. The amount of money paid to France for the said letters was, in 1839, 1,147*l.*; in 1840, 4,457*l.*; in 1841, 3,341*l.*; in 1842, 3,549*l.*; and in 1843, 1,307*l.* The number of letters received from India in the above five years amounted respectively to 31,123, 122,396, 108,027, 106,455, and 37,120. The number of newspapers transmitted to India, viâ France, amounted during the past year to 33,096, for which the sum of 76*l.* was paid to the French government. The number of outward letters not passing through France, forwarded by English steamers through Egypt, amounted in 1841 (in round numbers) to 225,000; in 1842, to 287,000; and in 1843, to 216,890. The number of homeward letters transmitted from India by the same channel was, in 1843 (including eight months of that year), 170,814. The number of chargeable letters which passed through the London general post (inwards and outwards) during the first four weeks of the year 1843 was as follows, viz.—unpaid, 312,839; paid, 2,431,231; stamped, 2,972,828; total, 5,716,898. The number of letters which passed through the London district post (exclusive of all general post letters) during the same period was—unpaid, 112,293; paid, 847,624; stamped, 1,020,091; total, 1,971,008. The estimated average for four weeks in the year 1839 was, for general post letters, as follows, viz. unpaid, 1,358,651; paid, 263,496; total, 1,622,147. The net revenue of the Post-office establishment of the United Kingdom (exclusive of charges in the Government departments) amounted, in 1839, to 1,614,353*l.*; in 1840, to 1,589,486*l.*; in 1841, to 393,166*l*; in 1842, to 424,115*l.*; and in 1843, to 478,479*l.* 216,585 money orders, to the amount of 466,798*l.* were issued and paid in London during the quarter ended the 5th of January, 1843; and 981,194 money orders, to the amount of 2,055,192*l.* were issued in England and Wales during the same time. The number of letters actually registered in London was, in June 1843, 8,112.

THE IRISH STIPENDIARY MAGISTRACY.—Some voluminous returns relating to stipendiary magistrates in Ireland have just been printed by order of Parliament, on the motion of the son of the ex-Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Viscount Ebrington, Lord Eliot (the present Irish Secretary), and Mr. Bellew, M.P. for the county of Meath. It appears that the number of stipendiary magistrates serving in Ireland from the 4th of April, 1839, to the close of that year, amounted to sixty, of whom twenty eventually died or retired; that the number serving during the year 1840 was sixty-two, of whom seventeen eventually retired or died; that the number serving in 1841 (up to the month of September, when the Whigs were expelled from office), amounted to seventy, of whom sixteen retired or died, four were discontinued, and four were discontinued and subsequently reappointed. Ten new stipendiary magistrates have been appointed since the month of September, 1841, that is to say, since the accession of the Conservatives to power, thirty-three new stipendiary magistrates' stations were created between the 1st of April, 1839, and the 15th of September, 1841. Another return of the number of stipendiary magistrates in Ireland, who were effective on the 1st and 15th days of each month, from the 1st of April, 1839, to the 31st of March, 1844 (inclusive), shews that there were never more than sixty-six effective, nor less than fifty-seven.

MISCELLANEOUS SERVICES, &c.—Three voluminous papers have just been issued from the Treasury, containing the estimates, &c. of the sums received for "miscellaneous services," during the year ending the 31st of March, 1845. The first includes the estimates for "public works and buildings." Under this head we find the total sum required for the services of the ensuing year to amount to 273,645*l.* exhibiting a decrease, compared with 1843, of 42,626*l.* and a decrease, compared with 1842, of 27,183*l.* Of the above sum of 273,645*l.* 112,190*l.* is required for public buildings and royal palaces; 60,000*l.* for the new Houses of Parliament; 50,000*l.* for the Caledonian Canal; and 26,871*l.* for public buildings and works in Ireland. The second paper contains the estimates of sums required for "salaries and expenses of public departments;" under which head, it appears, that the total amount required for the service of the ensuing year is 743,441*l.* exhibiting a decrease, compared with 1843, of 34,995*l.* and compared with 1842, of 23,326*l.* The largest item is one of 212,321*l.* (or nearly one-third of the whole amount) for "printing and stationery:" the other sums are pretty equally distributed. The expenses of the Poor Law Commissioners amount to 50,090*l.* and those of the Mint to 53,236*l.* The third and last paper contains the estimates for the expenses of "law and justice." Under this head, we find the total amount required for the ensuing year, 1844-5, to be 873,194*l.* exhibiting an increase, compared with 1843, of 32,859*l* and an increase, compared with 1842, of 62,974*l.* Of the above sum, 300,000*l.* (or more than one-third) is required for the convict expenditure in New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land; 30,000*l.* for the police of Dublin; 62,109*l.* for criminal prosecutions, &c. in Ireland: 16,935*l.* for criminal prosecutions in Scotland; 3,999*l.* for the Pentonville Prison; 13,368*l.* for the Insolvent Debtors' Court; 150,000*l.* for the expenses of the prosecution and removal of convicts, formerly paid out of the county rates; 30,000*l.* for law charges in England, &c. Thus it will be found that the gross total estimates for the whole of the miscellaneous services for the year 1844-5 (under the three different heads), amount to the sum of 1,890,280*l.*

THE COST OF THE POOR.—From returns just prepared for Parliament respecting the amount expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor, &c. it appears that there are 590 unions in England Wales, of which the population was 13,993,967. The average annual expenditure for the relief of the poor, three years prior to the union, was 5,608,934*l.* In 1841, the expenditure was 4,288,520*l.*; in 1842, 4,438,660*l.*; and in 1843, 4,679,495*l.* Under this head of expenditure are included the costs of maintenance, out-door relief, establishment charges with salaries, work-house and emigration loans repaid, and other purposes immediately connected with the relief of the poor. The number of in-door and out-door paupers relieved in 1841, in England and Wales, was 1,116,523; in 1842, 1,235,437; and in 1843, 1,333,247. The number of illegitimate children (in-door and out-door) relieved during the quarters ending Lady-day, 1841, was 29,123; in 1842, 29,357; and in 1843, 29,699. Thus the proportion of illegitimate children, in 1843, to every 1,000 of the total number of paupers relieved in that year, was 223·3; and the proportion of illegitimate children in the same to every 1,000 of the population was 2·1. This return is exclusive of places not united under the Poor Law Amendment Act. The above will shew that the expenditure has been yearly increasing at the rate of about 6,000*l.* or 6,500*l.* and the number of paupers from 100,000 to 120,000, while the number of illegitimate children increases annually at the ratio of about 300.

MALT, HOPS, and BREWERS.—Mr. Benjamin Wood, M.P. for Southwark, has moved for accounts relating to malt and hops, and to the number of persons licensed as brewers, victuallers, &c. for the year 1842-43. We find that the total quantity of malt made in the United Kingdom during the year ended the 10th of October, 1843, was 4,459,673 quarters, of which 3,171,441 quarters were used by brewers and victuallers, and 394,857 quarters by retailers. With respect to hops, it appears that the total number of acres of land in Great Britain under the cultivation of hops in 1843 amounted to 43,156 31-32 acres. The total amount of duty paid on hops of the growth of last year was 243,796*l.*; viz. 133,508*l.* old duty, at 1 12-20d. per lb.; and 98,680*l.* new duty, at 38-420d. per lb. 20cwt. 3qr. 32lb. of foreign hops were exported from Great Britain during the past year to the United States of America; 292,709lb. weight of British hops were exported to various foreign countries in 1843; 27cwt. of foreign hops were imported into the United Kingdom. It further appears that the total number of brewers in the United Kingdom is 2,044, and the total number of licensed victuallers 86,074; that 31,227 persons are licensed to sell beer "to be drunk on the premises;" that 27,009 victuallers brew their own beer; and that the total number of bushels of malt consumed by brewers amounts to 17,719,938 bushels, and the quantity consumed by victuallers to 7,6..,604 bushels. The quantity consumed by persons licensed to sell beer "to be drunk on the premises" is 2,761,672 bushels.

BARRACKS (IRELAND). A return of the expenses incurred in the fortification of barracks and other stations for troops in Ireland in the year 1843, has just been published, by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Captain Bernal, M.P. It appears, according to this paper, that the gross total amount of expenses so incurred during the above-mentioned period was 14,450*l*. 11s. The number of barracks was as follows, viz.:—in the Dublin district, 16 (including 5 in the metropolitan city); in the Limerick district, 15; in the Cork district, 11; in the Athlone district, 21; and in the Belfast district, 12. No expense has been incurred by the Royal Engineer Department for Police Barracks in Ireland.

DETACHED PARTS OF COUNTIES.—A Bill to annex detached parts of counties to the counties in which they are situate has been brought into the lower House of Parliament by Mr. R. Scott and Mr. J. Brotherton, the members for Walsall and Salford. It contains seven clauses, the first of which enacts, that wherever in England or Wales, any detached portion of any county is entirely surrounded by the main body of any one other county, or by such one other county and the sea, such detached portion shall henceforth be incorporated with, and form part of, the county by which it is so surrounded. Portions of the county of Durham, called "Norhamshire," and "Islandshire," are henceforth to form part of the adjacent county of Northumberland.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Quarter Sessions have been generally held during the present week. It is gratifying to learn that the LAW TIMES has not addressed itself in vain to the magistracy, on the subject of the impropriety of those who preside as judges in criminal trials acting as prosecutors. In some counties the rule refusing prosecution briefs has been so far relaxed that the magistrates have directed counsel to be employed in all cases in which the prisoner is defended by counsel. This is an important step in the right direction: but justice will not be done until the judge ceases to play the part of prosecutor in any case, "instead of" (to use the expressive language of CRESSWELL, J.) "holding the scales evenly between the parties."

We shall take an early opportunity of directing the attention of the magistrates and of the Profession to another subject, which has been forcibly impressed upon us by passing from circuit to sessions—namely, the vastly greater severity of the sentences passed upon prisoners at the latter as compared with those passed by the learned judges.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE sudden death of LORD ABINGER has created a vacancy in the Exchequer, and the Profession is on the tiptoe of expectation to learn who will be his lordship's successor. It is rumoured that the amiable and learned Chief Justice of the Common Pleas contemplates retirement from the cares of his office. Should this double vacancy occur, it is probable that the present excellent Attorney-General, with the applause of all parties, and the hearty congratulations of the Profession, by whom he is both beloved and respected, will take the seat of the deceased nobleman, and preside at the Exchequer, and the Solicitor-General will rest and refresh his shattered health in the comparatively light labour of the Presidency of the Common Pleas, preparatory to undertaking the more toilsome duties of the Chancellorship. In such case, it is probable that Mr. Kelly and Mr. Thesiger would be respectively the new Attorney and Solicitor General, unless the great influence of the Hon. Mr. Wortley should prevail over the greater ability of the latter gentleman. In any event, there must be a mighty move at the Bar, and the golden ball of fortune will be set rolling for somebody to catch; who will be the successful man or men it is impossible to foretell. The next on-comers after the present men are indisputable; but who will follow them no two persons seem to agree, such is the dearth of commanding talent among the juniors.

The Western Circuit has been the topic of a good deal of speculation. The death of Mr. Serjeant Bom.. and the retirement of Mr. Erle, made a sudden opening, which has been filled by Cowa.. Q. C. and Cockburn, Q. C. as the undoubted leaders. But it is as yet undecided who of the juniors are to stand next to them. The post of honour is contested by Kinglake, Butt and Hayward, who have given notice of intention to apply for silk.

V. C. Wigram has at length delivered a formal judgment upon the question started incidentally, but not decided, by Lord Cottenham, in the famous case of Whitworth v. Gaugain, in which his lordship expressed more than a doubt upon the validity of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds as against a judgment creditor by elegit. Such a doubt, coming from such a quarter, necessarily spread confusion and alarm throughout the mercantile and monied community, a large portion of whose credits were effected in reliance upon the security of such deposits. A corresponding interest was excited in the Profession, and the point was warmly debated in legal circles, periodicals, and pamphlets, the weight of opinion inclining in favour of the dictum of Lord Cottenham. Fortunately for the interests of commerce, the point was forthwith formally raised, and has been directly decided, after most learned and elaborate argument, by V. C. Wigram, who expressed a doubt whether Lord Cottenham had been correctly reported, and held in language the most express, the supposed priority of a judgment creditor by elegit to be contrary to every principle of equity, and that the doctrine upon which the validity of equitable mortgages is founded remains unimpeached and their title impregnable.

COURT OF ALDERMEN.

On Tuesday a court was held for the despatch of business.

EXTENSION OF THE PRACTICE OF ATTORNEYS.

The Lord Mayor presented the following petition to the Court:—

"The petition of David Williams Wire, solicitor, sheweth—That your petitioner has been admitted and sworn, and is now practising as a solicitor in the High Court of Chancery and in all the courts of law at Westminster, as appears by the certificate hereto annexed.

"Your petitioner thereby humbly prays that he may be admitted an attorney of the Mayor's Court of London."

Alderman Brown presented a similar petition from Wm. Davis, of Coleman-street. He stated that he considered himself bound to present the petition from the respectable individual whose name was annexed, but he believed there were many interests affected by it, and he therefore thought that the matter should be referred to a committee, and that the attorneys of the Mayor's Court should be informed of the application, and summoned to attend before a committee upon the subject.

Mr. Wire, on being called upon by the Lord Mayor, stated that he made the application under the authority of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, which enacted, that every person who should have been duly admitted an attorney of any one of the superior courts of law at Westminster should be entitled to be admitted an attorney in any other of the said courts, or in any inferior court of law in England and Wales. He (Mr. Wire) had been admitted in the superior courts, and he now claimed to be admitted an attorney of the inferior court of the mayor and aldermen of the city of London, commonly called the Mayor's Court. He was fully aware that the practice of that court had been exclusively confined to four gentlemen, and that they would claim a vested interest in the monopoly, having either purchased or obtained these places by the gift of the corporation. But notwithstanding such practice and notwithstanding its previous legality, he submitted that the Act of last session completely destroyed any chartered or vested rights, and threw open the court to all practitioners admitted by the superior courts; and he was borne out in the opinion by the Act itself, by the exceptions introduced, and by the interpretation already put upon it by the recorders in other towns and cities, who, notwithstanding the previous exclusion, now, under the authority of the Act, admitted all practitioners duly qualified. He believed it would be unnecessary further to argue this question as a matter of law; but if it were necessary, he was fortified in the view he had taken of the Act by authorities. He would now, therefore, turn to the benefits likely to result to the public from the throwing open of the court. It was a court of large jurisdiction, and embraced both a legal and equitable side.

Alderman Brown said that this was a question of grave consideration, and deeply affecting the rights of others, and it ought, therefore, to be referred to a committee to examine and report upon.

Mr. Wire said, with the concurrence of his learned friend near him, he had no objection to a reference, provided the committee considered the matter forthwith, as he was anxious to get the answer of the court to enable him, if necessary, to go to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus.

Alderman T. Wood and Alderman Brown seconded a proposition to refer the matter to a committee, and to advise with the law officers of the corporation thereon.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Subsequently a similar petition was presented from Mr. Hartley, of New Bridge-street, solicitor, and it was stated that several more petitions upon the subject would be likely to follow, it being the determination of the Profession to open this court.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint A. M. Mundy, esq. to be Colonial Secretary for the province of South Australia.

The Queen has also been pleased to appoint J. M. Collier, esq. to be Treasurer for the Island of Tobago.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Charles Wilkinson, of the city of York, Gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

EDINBURGH COURTS OF LAW.—The public, particularly the Legal Profession, will be glad to learn that the Lords of the Treasury have authorized the erection of four new and greatly enlarged Lords Ordinaries' court-rooms, to replace the present small and inconvenient courts. In the meantime, and during the erection of the new courts, we understand two of the Lords Ordinaries will hear cases in the large recesses of the Outer House as formerly; and that two temporary courts will also be fitted up in the south end of the Outer House.—Caledonian Mercury.

THE SECONDARIES' COURT.—Owing to the great inconvenience to barristers and attorneys practising in the Sheriff's and Secondaries' Courts, in consequence of the sitting of both courts taking place on the same day (Tuesday), an application has been made to the learned Secondaries, Messrs. James and Potter, for an alteration in the time of sitting in their court not only for changing the day, but for an earlier hour to be fixed for hearing causes. In accordance with that wish, those gentlemen yesterday caused the following notice to be circulated.—"Secondaries' Office, No. 5, Basinghall street.—In order to meet the convenience of the profession, at the suggestion of many of its members, notice is given that from and after the last day of Easter Term, 1844, writs for [illegible] issues directed to be tried before the [illegible], and writs of inquiry of damages [illegible] city, will be executed at this office on [illegible] and Friday only in each week, instead of Tuesday and Friday, to commence at the hour of eleven in the forenoon, instead of twelve o'clock. Dated this fourth day of April, 1844.—J. James and G. W. K. Potter, Secondaries." The alteration will give great satisfaction, as formerly on the Tuesdays the Court was generally kept waiting some time for the attendance of barristers engaged in some of the first causes, who were being detained at the Sheriff's Court, in Red Lion-square.

A DIFFICULT CASE.—A case of considerable interest to mercantile men came before the Cour Royale of Paris a few days ago. The questions involved are—1st, Whether the imprudence of the captain of a vessel constitutes baratry on the part of the owner, and deprives him of the benefit of his insurance? 2nd, Does a captain who continues [illegible] fire has broken out in the vessel and a port is near which he could reach, commit a fault which releases the insurance-office from all responsibility? The facts of the case, as stated by M. Billault, the deputy, counsel for the plaintiff Mr. Kent, an English merchant residing at Boulogne-sur-Mer, are as follows:—The brig Sylvain, of 124 tons, the property of Mr. Kent, commanded by Captain J. Baclin, and with a crew of seven men, after having taken on board at Boulogne a cargo of coals left the port Cette on the 26th of August, 1842. On the 3rd of September, the captain had the pumps [illegible], and, having discovered that the vessel was leaking [illegible] usual, placed a man in charge of the pump, with instructions to report any increase in the leak. On the 10th the vessel passed the Straits of Gibraltar, and on the 12th the man in charge of the pumps reported that the water had increased. On the 14th, at twelve miles distance from the point of the Roquette, he stated that the water had become warm, and upon this report the captain ordered a general examination to be made as to the cause. One of the crew having gone down into the hold, was nearly overpowered by the heat; and then, for the first time, it was suspected that the water from the leak had caused fermentation and produced fire in the cargo. This suspicion was confirmed on the 19th, and two of the crew, whilst endeavouring to trace the precise locality of the fire, were suffocated by the smoke. On the 21st the smoke poured forth in volumes, and the crew got ready their clothes and a quantity of provisions, preparatory to their escape. On the 22nd the captain steered for the Bay of Rosas, about 18 miles distant; but he was unable to reach it, and on the same day the fire made a vent, and burst forth in flames. The captain and crew, finding all their efforts to check the fire useless, resolved to abandon the vessel, as the only means of saving their lives, and launched their boat in a heavy sea. The crew got into it, but the captain, unwilling to desert his vessel whilst even the most slender hope existed of saving it, remained on board until the fire had gained such a height, that to have stayed an instant longer would have been death. He then got into the boat, and, having reached the shore, reported his casualty to the adjutant of marine of the village of Lastardit, by whom, as well as by the captain, the facts were laid before the Vice-Consul of France at Rosas. On the 21st of November Mr. Kent, who had insured the vessel for 40,000f. with the companies of the Assurances-Générales, Orleanaises, Lloyd Français, the Union des Ports, and the Avenir, reported the [illegible] ment. This was resisted, on the ground that the captain had not exercised due judgment, and that his conduct constituted an act of baratry, which deprived the owner of all right to compensation. Mr. Kent, under the advice of counsel, commenced a suit against the insurers before the Tribunal of Commerce of Paris, who, giving to the articles [illegible] and 316 of the Code of Commerce an interpretation unfavourable to the plaintiff, delivered judgment for the defendants. Against this judgment Mr. Kent has appealed, and the Cour Royale has to decide on the questions stated above, and which are of great importance, for if the decision of the Tribunal de Commerce should be confirmed, the owner of a vessel will not only be held responsible for his servants as far as regards the necessity of their using every effort to prevent the loss of his vessel, but also for their judgment as to the means to be employed, a doctrine which has never before been set up. M. Billault, having stated the case, was proceeding to shew that the [illegible] Tribunal de Commerce was contrary to [illegible] when the President observed that [illegible] causes on the list which had priority, and postponed the further hearing until a future day.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION BILL.—A few evenings ago, on a question being put to Sir J. Graham on the above subject, he replied, "that he should be prepared before Easter, or immediately after, to introduce a measure generally affecting the medical profession throughout the United Kingdom, not [illegible] but relaxing the restrictions on the practice of medical men." We understand that the chief provision of the new Bill will be the establishment of a council of health and medical education for the government of our profession. It will be composed of one of the Secretaries of State, the regius professors of physic at Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, and one of the Edinburgh medical professors, three physicians and three surgeons, as representatives of the Royal Colleges of England, Scotland and Ireland, six other persons (laymen probably) to be appointed by the Queen, and a representative of the general practitioners of England. The Crown will appoint all the members of the first council, except those who will sit by virtue of their office. [illegible] profession will be preserved. No one will be licensed to practise as a physician until he has attained the age of twenty-six, nor as a surgeon till he is twenty-five; but licentiates in medicine and surgery (general practitioners) will be allowed to commence practice at twenty-one. The new council will entirely [illegible] the existing medical corporations, [illegible] will do little more than [illegible] degrees [illegible] will be found to constitute the chief [illegible] new measure; we refrain, however, from any comment till the Bill itself, or an authentic draught, [illegible].—Medical Gazette.

ENORMOUS LEGACIES.—The late Mr. John Maltass, the celebrated merchant of Smyrna, has by his will, dated October 2, 1841, [illegible] now the subject of dispute in the Ecclesiastical Court, Doctors'-commons, bequeathed the following enormous legacies:—To his wife [illegible] 000 Turkish piasters, and also 20,000 [illegible] John Maltass, 106,000 Turkish piasters [illegible] son's wife the same amount, to his [illegible] daughters, [illegible] M. Abbott, C. Maltass, [illegible] J. Wood, 106,000 Turkish piasters [illegible] son-in-law, R. R. Wood, [illegible] to his son-in-law, C. Wood, 70,000 piasters; to his brother Benjamin Maltass, 125,000 piasters; to two sisters 10,000 piasters each; to seven grandchildren, 10,000 piasters each; to the British Chapel at Bugia, 10,000 piasters; to the Peste Hospital at St. Rock, 10,000 piasters. He directs 10,000 piasters to be divided among of the servants of the house, according to the length of their services; and the interest of 50,000 piaster to be distributed amongst the aged destitute and infirm at Smyrna. Various other legacies are given, but the above are the principal ones. The residue of the property is given to his wife. He appoints Messrs. John Maltass, jun. Richard Benjamin Abbott, and Charles Wood, his executors. The total number of piasters bequeathed in the will are 2,250,000. The value of an Arabian (Turkish) piaster is 5s. 6d.—Britannia.

CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL JUSTICE IN FRANCE.—The Moniteur publishes a report on the administration of civil and commercial justice in France during the year 1842. The number of appeals against decisions of inferior courts referred to the Court of Cassation in that year was 5[illegible], of which 396 were rejected, 117 admitted, and 7[illegible] remained to be examined. The 27 Royal courts were called to pronounce in 1842 on 17,336 affairs, 5,067 of which were lying over since 1841, and 10,[illegible] were new cases. They gave judgment in 9,182, and [illegible] were struck off the list, having been either amicably adjusted or relinquished by the parties. The three chambers of the Royal Court of Paris had decided 1,7[illegible] affairs, or 578 per chamber. The civil tribunals [illegible] delivered, in 1842, 49,635 judgments, 42,010 of which were executed by the parties, and 7,625 were the object of appeal. The Royal courts pronounced on [illegible]318 of those appeals, rejecting 4,338, and admitting [illegible]. The appeals in the remaining cases were withdrawn. The commercial tribunals, and the civil courts to whose arbitration commercial affairs were referred, adjudicated on 24,956 suits; their decisions in 22,94[illegible] were executed, and 2,012 were appealed against. The number of new cases brought before the 36[illegible] civil tribunals of the kingdom, in 1842, was [illegible]; of cases lying over from 1841, 53,875; in all 167,[illegible]. They terminated 120,[illegible] affairs, or nearly three-fourths of the whole number. They pronounced 89,509 definitive judgments, and 31,32[illegible] affairs were struck off the list, either in consequence of a compromise or a renunciation; 7,625 appeals were entered into against those judgments, only one-fourth of which were admitted by the Royal courts. The applications for a separation, made in 1842, amounted to 962; 917 by wives, and 45 only by husbands: 817, or the 9-10ths of the former, were grounded on excesses, ill-treatment, or wounds inflicted by the husband; 80 on the keeping of a concubine under the conjugal roof; and 20 on the condemnation of the husband to a penalty entailing dishonour. More than one-half of the applications for a separation brought before the courts by husbands, or 24 out of 45, were founded on a charge of adultery, and 21 on excesses or ill treatment. Of the 962 marriages of which the dissolution was demanded 13 had not lasted a year; 180 had lasted from 1 to 5 years; 228 from 5 to 10; 27[illegible] from 10 to 20; and 191 upwards of 20 years, 9 of the latter had lasted from 40 to 49 years. Children had been born of 544 of those unions; 383 had been sterile, no accurate information had been obtained respecting the 35 others. 184 of those applications had been withdrawn before judgment; 126 in consequence of a reconciliation between the parties, and 58 for other causes. The Courts rejected 94, and sanctioned [illegible]. The number of commercial associations of every description formed throughout France in 1842, was 2,308; and that of the failures, 2,419, or 95 less than in 1841, and 199 less than in 1840. The engagements amounted to 114,107,236 francs, in [illegible] Paris alone figures for [illegible],683f. There [illegible] notaries in the kingdom in 1842; [illegible] the acts passed before them were [illegible] per notary. The justices of the peace had to decide in that year on 609,025 affairs, [illegible] of which they amicably adjusted.

The first conviction for a breach of the regulations of the new fishery convention between France and England took place on Wednesday at Lewes. Two French fishing boats having entered Newhaven harbour, Lieutenant Brown, of the Coast Guard, observing that the vane at the mast-head required by the regulations affecting French vessels coming within three miles of the coast was not of the prescribed colour (blue), and also that the numbers and initial letters of the port to which the boat belonged were painted on each side of the bows, conceived it to be his duty to take the captains before a magistrate. They were accordingly conveyed to Lewes, and [illegible] Mr. P. Black, the French consul, was present, and, in defence, stated that no copies of the regulations had been placed in the hands of the defendants, and therefore requested the magistrate to mitigate the penalty to the lowest possible amount. The consul observed that even among our own fishermen, who could not plead such ignorance of the regulations, they were as yet only partially carried out. The defendants were then fined 18s. each, including costs; and the French consul promised to write to the French authorities, suggesting that copies of the rules should be furnished to every boat in order that the masters might not suffer from ignorance of a complicated law.—Brighton paper.

SHAM ATTORNEYS.—Complaints have frequently been made at the Central Criminal Court, the Middlesex Sessions, &c., of the disgraceful conduct of a set of fellows who have long been in the habit of attending there, and offering their services to the prisoners and their friends as legal advisers, and who, after extorting from them almost their last shilling, for the alleged purpose of retaining counsel in their behalf (in which, in many instances, they neglect to do), afterwards take care to keep out of the way of their dupes on the day appointed for the prisoner's trial. The attention of the Legislature has been called to the subject, and the following clause in the late "Act for Consolidating and Amending several of the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors," will, it is hoped, put an effectual stop to the disgraceful conduct above mentioned.—"That from and after the passing of this Act, no person shall act as an attorney or solicitor, or commence or defend any action, suit, or other proceeding, in the name of any other person, or in his own name, in her Majesty's Courts of Chancery, Queen's Bench, &c., or in any other Court of civil or criminal jurisdiction, or act as an attorney or solicitor in any cause or suit, civil or criminal, to be tried or determined before any justice of assize of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery or at any general or quarter sessions of the peace for any county, city, borough, &c., or before any justice or justices, unless such person shall have been, previously to the passing of this Act, admitted and enrolled, or otherwise duly qualified to act as an attorney, and continue to be so duly qualified to act, &c." The 32nd clause enacts, that "any attorney or solicitor shall wilfully or knowingly act as agent in any action, &c., or permit or suffer his name to be in any way made use of in any such action, or shall do any other act thereby to enable such unqualified person to appear, act, or practise in any respect as an attorney, &c., knowing such person not to be duly qualified as aforesaid, and complaint shall be made thereof in a summary way to any of the said superior Courts, and proof thereof made upon oath to the satisfaction of the Court that such attorney hath knowingly and wilfully offended therein as aforesaid, such attorney may be struck off the roll, and for ever after disabled from practising; and it shall and may be lawful for the said Court to commit such unqualified person so acting or practising as aforesaid, to the prison of the said Court for any term not exceeding one year. In addition to the above, the "new prison regulations," recently promulgated by the Secretary of State, direct that the governor shall allow prisoners committed for examination or trial to see their legal advisers at all reasonable times, and in private if required, unless a committing or visiting magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless he shall know any sufficient cause why such legal adviser should not be admitted. Every person, however, claiming admission must be a certified attorney or solicitor, or his authorized clerk. In order to carry the above into full effect, the Sheriffs of London have caused a notice to the following effect to be posted in Newgate:—"No person acting as the legal adviser of any prisoner committed to Newgate for trial will be allowed to visit such prisoner unless he is a duly qualified attorney, or clerk to such attorney, and that in either case he must produce a written retainer, signed by the prisoner, and authorizing him to act as his attorney, and sign an entry in a book to be kept by the gaoler, stating that he is so authorized, and that every attorney or attorney's clerk will be required to sign such entry before he will be allowed to have an interview with the prisoner." With regard to what constitutes "acting as an attorney" within the meaning of the above Act of Parliament, Mr. Walesby, when lately presiding as Chairman at the Middlesex Sessions, intimated that preparing and delivering a brief to counsel was acting as an attorney.—Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

There is some justice in the following complaint of an "Articled Clerk:"—

Perceiving that your columns are always open to the admission of correspondence on matters o. general interest, I take the liberty of requesting your attention to a point of much importance to those connected with the Legal Profession, in the hopes of either seeing my letter in your influential paper, or a leading article from your own pen on the subject. I refer to that system of postponement and night-work which is becoming so prevalent among solicitors, alike prejudicial to the employers and the employed. You must be aware of this fact, and therefore I trust it may be deemed worthy of attention. Procrastination and postponemen f work which ought to be done at once cannot possibly benefit either party, particularly when it is put off designedly. Surely a clerk ought not to be denied, through the negligence of the master, those hours of relaxation which are necessary for health and study; for it is not to be expected that he will work in the day-time if kept till midnight the day preceding, but rather the contrary. It is not so injurious to work reasonably the whole of the day-time, provided one can keep regular hours of rest at night; but when work arriving, perhaps, in the morning, or at least at noon, is postponed till the evening, without any reasonable cause, this cannot be done. Were solicitors generally to begin their work early, and continued employed at it all day, they would find much more would be done, and more comfortably so, than when driven off to the last moment. I am not speaking unadvisedly when I say that nearly one half of the lawyers, particularly the young ones, who have good businesses, fall into this habit. Unmindful of their own interests, of the attachment of their clerks, of the safety of their clients, and of their own credit, they wilfully postpone the forwarding or completion of a business till it becomes absolutely necessary, and it is then done at such a time, and in so hurried a manner, that it is extremely liable to faults, and it becomes a matter of serious consideration whether such work can, under the circumstances, be said to be well and safely done. I am therefore confident, that the greater part of the clerks, both articled and otherwise, will feel extremely obliged by your exerting your influence to check this growing evil,—one which the body of clerks, of which I form a member, feel to be particularly grievous and inconvenient. I have purposely avoided entering into the details of the case, but have spoken thus generally in order to draw attention to the subject; and fearing that I have already trespassed too far on your time and space.

I am, Sir, &c.

AN ARTICLED CLERK.

The subject of the fees to justices' clerks continues to attract attention. We have received the following:—

As you have considered my communication of last week, upon the subject of magistrates' clerks' fees, worthy of a place in your columns, and as I have taken up the cudgels against the opponents of the system of paying justices' clerks by fees, but which, be it known, I have only done in order to set right the public against the misstatements relative thereto, which have gone the round of the papers, I once more venture to address the public through the medium of your paper, and, with your permission, I shall continue so to do as often as I see such unfounded, unjustifiable statements with regard to justices' clerks and their fees, as have lately been made by the Marquis of Lansdowne and Lord Campbell. But here let me again state that I have no objection to a proper salary, and that my only object in thus addressing the public is to disabuse their minds against either the positive false statements of those who do know better, or the speculative observations of men who, having been unaccustomed themselves to attend a bench of magistrates, speak only from the jaundiced hearsay evidence of some prejudiced being. My present observations will be in answer only to the unfounded statements made (I take them from the report in the LAW TIMES) by the Marquis of Landsdowne and Lord Campbell in their seats in the House. And really I cannot but express the surpr. .e, and even regret, that I feel that gentlemen—noblemen—holding the station in the country these noble lords do, should, either from ignorance or from some cause which they alone best know, state that in the House which can be proved by every justices' clerk in the kingdom, and by every justice who properly fulfils his duty, to be incorrect. If the noble lords have made their respective statements from ignorance, they are to blame for not properly informing themselves; if from any other cause or feeling towards a set of men, generally speaking, by birth, education, and station, gentlemen, then they are so much the more to blame. The judges will tell a culprit that it is no excuse that he was ignorant of the law. These noble lords, therefore, can have no possible right to plead ignorance of the practice when they make statements—and that too in the execution of their most sacred office as legislators of the kingdom—which I defy them to be in a condition to substantiate. I, Sir, am ready to admit and cordially agree to have altered every objectionable part connected with either the duties or the fees of justices' clerks; but surely it is but fair, upright, and honest to those clerks, to have those objectionable parts brought forward, and discussed in a fair and straightforward manner. I wish to see this done; and if it be so, I am convinced the public generally will acquit the justices' clerks of the unfair, nay, I will say ungentlemanly conduct of which they are accused by the noble lords, particularly by Lord Campbell. With this preface, I will at once come to the statement of the Marquis of Landsdowne, as reported in the last week's LAW TIMES. The marquis is made to say, in reference to the taking fees by justices' clerks, that "there were those persons who were charged with those small offences but were acquitted, and then, though declared guilty of no offence, were nevertheless punished by being taxed with certain fees." Now, Sir, upon this head I challenge the marquis to produce one single case; not but that there are hundreds of cases where such a proceeding is richly deserved, viz. those cases which fail of strict legal evidence, though there can be no moral doubt of their guilt: but, Sir, I call on the marquis to substantiate his statement by one single case. I am myself clerk to a large division, and for years have been accustomed to attend, in the course of my profession, the justices' meetings at six or seven other divisions, and yet I have never witnessed such a case in my life. But, Sir, I have witnessed this (and a very proper proceeding it is) that when a petty case has been brought before the justices, and upon investigation it has turned out that although no positive offence had been committed, but a quarrel, or brawl, or some such thing had taken place; or in a common assault, when from the evidence it was not clear which party had struck the first blow, and one party had been equally bad with the other, the justices have directed that each party should pay half the costs, which has been a proper punishment to both. Perhaps the noble marquis means such a case as this; if so, it would be but just that he should amend his declaration, the next time he takes his seat. I now come to the statement made by Lord Campbell, as also reported in the last number of the LAW TIMES. This noble lord is made to say that he "KNEW that great extortion was practised at present by swelling out the proceedings for the mere purpose of increasing the costs at SO MUCH PER FOLIO." Now, Sir, this is a direct and most ungentlemanly attack upon the character of those gentlemen holding the office of justices' clerks, and it is as unfounded as it is unjust, for I hesitate not to say, notwithstanding the noble lord's declaration that he knew the fact, that he cannot substantiate it; and I challenge him, as I did the marquis, to produce one single case, inasmuch as I am confident, from my personal knowledge of the manner in which justices' clerks are paid, that there never was an instance where they received so much per folio except for copies of the different original proceedings, which, as a matter of course, could not by any means be spun out to a greater number of folios than the originals themselves. And at every bench of justices that I have ever seen or heard of, the originals are paid for by so much (say one or two shillings) for every information, summons, warrant, conviction, and commitment, long or short, and not by the folio; and for the copies thereof, in this division, three-half-pence per folio of 92 words. If Lord Campbell considers this extortion, he is welcome to make all the copies for me and receive all the profits.

In conclusion, Sir, I beg to state that I cannot, for the life me, see the reason for these unfounded statements and unjust attacks, made with such apparent bitterness against a body of gentlemen acknowledged, by every justice accustomed to attend the bench, to be liberal, and frequently unnecessarily so, in their conduct and feelings, and from whom there is no opposition to the proposed plan of paying them by a salary. More acrimony could scarcely have been shewn by a bitter personal enemy than has been most unnecessarily displayed in the discussion of the question of magistrates' clerks' fees; and I do trust that such uncalled for expressions of feeling will, for the future, be laid aside; or at least that, if made, they will be made upon facts which can be proved and substantiated.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1844.

TO OUR READERS.

The near approach of Term, which will claim so many columns for the Reports, together with the space occupied by the Index (which, at the request of our readers, has now been made more copious, embracing a reference to the subjects as well as to the names of cases in both the volumes completed), compels us to abbreviate many of our wonted observations on passing events, and to omit much legal intelligence, to enable us to bring up an arrear of many pages which has been in type for a long time, waiting an opportunity for appearance.

We have to announce a gratifying accession of new subscribers with the new volume. The supplementary list of these will be published very shortly. For a great portion of them we are indebted to the kind personal recommendations of present subscribers.

LAW REFORM SOCIETY.

Some correspondents have angrily assailed this Society by anticipation, for of its promoters, its designs, or its capacities they can know nothing, inasmuch as we merely announced its formation in general terms, without naming its members, or defining its plans.

One of our friends asserts that nothing good can come from Lords Brougham and Campbell, and that if they have any thing to do with the Society, it cannot and ought not to enjoy the confidence of the Profession, nor to have the support and aid of the Law Times in the promulgation of its proceedings.

These noble and learned lords are active promoters of the society, and yet we cannot refuse it our confidence, nor do we think that our correspondent will, upon reflection, justify the hasty language of hostility in which he has indulged before he could know aught of that which he condemned. Granting that those noble and learned lords deserve the censure heaped upon them as Law Reformers, they do not constitute the society; indeed, they are but a fraction of it. Already it numbers in its ranks, not only the most eminent of the judges, commissioners of bankruptcy, law officers, and distinguished counsel, but many non-professional personages of mark, who approve this mode of securing a better system of law-making than we have yet enjoyed. The following is the prospectus of the society. We shall faithfully report its doings.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

During the last fourteen years very great changes have been made in all branches of the law. In every recent session of Parliament some important Acts of this nature have been passed, and many others have been brought in or projected; and there is a very general opinion that considerable further alterations are necessary, and it cannot be doubted that they will be proposed.

That these reforms should be proceeded with in the most cautious spirit, and that no further change should be made without all possible investigation, will not be disputed. Many of the recent alterations in the law, however beneficial in intention, have, it is conceived, been carried into operation in a defective form. Public attention is not always directed to them, and they frequently rest too much on individual responsibility in their passage through Parliament. On the other hand, it is highly advantageous to the community, that proper reforms should be proposed and the reasons in support of them be brought before the public; but more especially before the members of both Houses of Parliament. It would seem also likely to prove beneficial if some public body were to collect all accessible information on the subject of Law Reform.

To carry out these objects it is proposed to establish a society, to be called, "The Society for promoting the Amendment of the Law."

The principal objects of this Society would be:—

1. To assist all useful reforms in the Law.

2. To collect information on all subjects connected with Law Reform.

3. To undertake a communication with the proper authorities in other countries on these subjects.

The Society to consist (without reference to any political party) of gentlemen belonging more especially to the following classes:

1. Lawyers in actual practice.

2. Lawyers who have accepted judicial situations, or who have retired from practice.

3. Gentlemen who have given attention to the subject of jurisprudence, and who are disposed to promote the objects of the Society.

The mode in which the objects of the Society are to be carried out to be left to a committee.

It is submitted that this Society might materially assist the cause of Law Reform, and that this subject is as capable of deriving benefit from an association of this nature, as the many other departments of arts and science, which have derived benefit from established societies: and that if it were properly supported it would supply a want much felt by legislators, and might not only be highly useful, but might command considerable and legitimate influence.

Since the above was in type, the advertisement of its formation has appeared in our columns. To this we refer the reader.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

The following has been sent to some poor people at Hammersmith, with a solicitation to be employed to take them through the Court of Bankruptcy:—

"Litera scripta manet.

"To Insolvents and Others.—An Attorney of many years' experience in Insolvent matters, assisted by an able Accountant, offers his services to those who are involved. They are informed that by virtue of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, 5 & 6 Victoria, cap. 16, imprisonment for debt may be totally avoided by presenting a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, which will protect them and stay all process against the person. Apply to Mr. Henry Lee, No. 12, Cook's-row, Old Saint Pancras-road, where the parties will be satisfied of the advertiser's integrity: security for half the costs agreed upon taken, as well as reference given to those who, in difficult circumstances, have availed themselves of the Advertiser's practice on very reasonable terms.

"N.B.—Debts legally recovered, at 10 per cent. and the parties guaranteed from all further liability. Leases, Assignments, Mortgages, Bills of Sale, &c. prepared on like moderate charges.

"John Tinslay, Solicitor,
2, Roll's-buildings, Fetter-lane."

DEATH OF LORD ABINGER.

The announcement in our last of the severe illness of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer must have prepared our readers for the event which it is now our melancholy duty to record. Lord Abinger died at Bury, on the morning of Sunday, surrounded by his family, but unconscious of their presence.

We had commenced a brief memoir of the professional career of this distinguished personage, when we lighted upon a singularly interesting and accurate one in the columns of the Times, so evidently from the pen of one who enjoyed a peculiar knowledge of his history and character, that we should be doing injustice to our readers, by depriving them of the best information, were we not to prefer this narrative to the necessarily crude sketch which we could supply from the imperfect authorities to which only we could have access; we, therefore, extract it entire:—

"Not only amongst the members of the legal profession, but throughout the community at large, the death of a chief judge, belonging to any of the superior courts, is regarded as an event, never unimportant, and sometimes to be deeply deplored. During the long period of half a century, Lord Abinger had practised or administered the law. His active and distinguished life was passed during the reigns of four sovereigns. When he entered upon the exercise of his profession, Lord Kenyon presided in the Court of King's Bench, Sir James Eyre was chief baron, the first Earl of Rosslyn at the head of the Common Pleas, and the first Earl of Eldon attorney-general. To climb the heights which these great men had already attained formed the object of his youthful ambition. To contend with the formidable rivalry of their imitators and successors became the business of his life; and no reader now requires to be informed that he prosecuted this great design with an amount of professional learning, moral energy, and intellectual power, such as have been rarely equalled, and never surpassed. He rose high, and maintained himself in a position of almost unassailable eminence, amongst such men as Best, Gibbs, Garrow, Shepherd, Gifford, Copley, Tindal, Romilly, Brougham, Wilde, with the celebrated Thomas Erskine at one extremity of the series, and Sir William Follett at the other. Few duties can be more agreeable to the writer, and perhaps not many more interesting to the reader, than to take a cursory review of the steps by which a man, who was neither 'born great, nor had greatness thrust upon him,' achieved by his own unaided efforts, the dignity of the bench, and the honours of the peerage.

"He was the descendant of a family which settled in Jamaica as long ago at the first establishment of the colony. In that island they lived long enough to acquire considerable wealth and distinction, and there Lord Abinger was born, the second and last surviving son of Robert Scarlett, by his marriage with Miss Elizabeth Anglin. His youngest brother, Sir William Anglin Scarlett, was also a member of the legal profession, and eventually became chief justice in the island with which he and his relatives had been for so long a period connected. As a natural result of the locality in which he had been born, it was necessary for Lord Abinger to leave his home and travel to Europe, in order to secure the benefit of such an education as his early powers seemed entitled to receive, and for this purpose he was consigned to the care of a friend in the north of England at as early an age as he could venture to travel alone. He was placed for a short time at a public school, but was soon removed to Cambridge, where he entered as a fellow commoner of Trinity College. In four years he took the degree of B.A., and shortly afterwards quitted the university. Within one year after his call to the bar, viz. on the 22nd of August, 1792, he married the third daughter of Mr. Campbell, of Kilmorey, in Argyleshire, by whom he had three sons and two daughters; of the latter the eldest is the lady of Lord Campbell who enjoys a peerage in her own right as Baroness Stratheden.

"On quitting the university he came to London, and devoted himself to his profession with great ardour, selecting as the chief object of his laborious studies the perusal of modern reports, which he esteemed the speediest road to success as an advocate. By the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple he was called to the bar in the year 1791. It has frequently been observed that the possession of any considerable patrimony proves an impediment to success in the arduous and often discouraging pursuit of legal eminence. To this general rule the subject of the present memoir formed a remarkable exception. Although he inherited more than a common independence, he devoted himself to the most laborious of all professions with an earnest perseverance of which there are few examples, and with an industry rarely called into existence by any stimulus less than the pressure of actual necessity. It would seem as if in his case the gifts of nature had been so improved by the accidents of education, as that no bounty of fortune could abate his assiduity, nor any allurements of pleasure corrupt the dignified ambition which aimed at judicial rank, and was eventually gratified by ample income and hereditary dignity.

"Mr. Scarlett began his professional career in the usual way. Previous to his call to the bar he shut himself up in that monastic seclusion to which those who read the laws of England must submit for years, without mitigation of their toil, and very often without any reward for their self-denial; he was not, however, destined to be the victim of unremunerated labour, for, though he sowed in toilsome solitude, he reaped an early and a golden harvest.

"The features which mark the life of a young barrister are full of sameness and often of dull monotony. He goes to Westminster or to Guildhall in the morning, and returns to his murky chambers to spend his afternoon and evening in unbroken application to cases, statues, pleas, demurrers, or decisions; and so the routine proceeds till the circuit varies the scene, and somewhat changes the character of his course of life. Still the difference is immaterial, and detracts little from the noble perseverance of men who, like Mr. Scarlett, have the fortitude to 'bide their time.'

"The practice of the common law was that to which he gave a preference; and the northern was the circuit to which he attached himself. Years rolled by; and, like others, he was compelled to go through the usual probation. Men immeasurably his inferiors in 'learning, talents, toil, and sense,' occupied the position of his leaders; while he discharged the necessary, but subordinate functions, of a junior counsel. No extraordinary rapidity of advancement characterized his life at the bar; thirty briefs did not pour in upon him within the compass of a single day, as happened to Mr. Erskine in the early portion of his career; on the contrary, Mr. Scarlett proceeded with a secure and steady success, which was sure to wear well, having been dearly and honestly purchased. In due course the leader of his circuit presented him with a bag, but not until he had business enough to render that species of accommodation quite needful. Not many years elapsed before that bag laboured under a plethora. The opinion entertained of him by attorneys, clients, and jurors, at first favourable, gradually grew into admiration, and at length ripened into unbounded confidence; until, in the end, men began to think that it would be almost 'a tempting of Providence' for any one engaged in litigation to omit retaining Mr. Scarlett. At the time to which we refer, his personal appearance was, in a remarkable degree, calculated to win the favour of every beholder. Though born in a tropical climate, his physical strength and animal spirits were indomitable, while his command of temper also presented an exception to the ordinary rules which apply to West Indians. He was as calm as any Englishman, and as discreet as 'if bred at Glasgow or at Aberdeen.' While he toiled through the duties of a junior counsel, his leader—no matter who that fortunate person might be—always appeared to place full reliance upon his legal information, and even upon the prudential suggestions respecting the conduct of the case which, from time to time, he would cautiously pour into the ear of his learned but less able senior. These things are never lost upon that branch of the legal profession which dispenses patronage to the bar; and business in term time, business at nisi prius, business on circuit, came in 'thick and threefold,' until the perquisites of his clerk amounted to an income on which even a gentleman might manage to live. But his position was still that of a junior counsel; the favour of the Crown had not yet conferred on him the honour and emolument of being called within the bar; nevertheless, the high estimation in which his powers as an advocate were held induced many an attorney to dispense with the assistance of a King's counsel, intrusting the character and fortune of those who employed him to the dexterity and discretion of one who never disappointed any rational expectation which a client could form, and very often exceeded his fondest hopes. Notwithstanding this signal success, twenty-three years elapsed between Mr. Scarlett's call to the bar and his acquisition of a silk gown. In those days that species of patronage was in the gift of John, Lord Eldon; and though prompt enough to bestow it on any Tory who possessed a fair claim, those who made no public or private display of Toryism found their advancement in the profession of the law postponed to the latest moment that was at all consistent with fair play, or even with a plausible semblance of justice. At length, in the year 1816, Mr. Scarlett was called within the bar, invested with a silk gown, and became, therefore, one of that eminent body known as 'his Majesty's counsel learned in the law.' From this time forward a large proportion of the leading business of the Court of King's Bench fell into his hands; and, as there came at the same time a considerable increase of fees, without any great augmentation of labour, he naturally bethought himself that the time had arrived when, like other great members of the profession, he could advantageously unite the exalted function of enacting laws with the more lucrative, but less conspicuous, occupation of expounding them. To enter the House of Commons, therefore, became the next object of his ambition, and he forthwith offered himself as a candidate for the borough of Lewes; but his opponent, Sir John Shelley, was elected by a majority of 19. On a subsequent occasion he offered himself for the same place, but with no better success; and in consequence of this disappointment, he was obliged for a few years longer to confine his powers to the exclusive exercise of a profession in which he was acquiring great wealth, permanent reputation, and present celebrity. The demise of George III., however, necessarily led to a general election, and he accepted the offer of the late Earl Fitzwilliam to come in for Peterborough.

"Although his professional fame had not even then attained its highest point of eminence, he entered parliament with the character of being one of the ablest counsel at nisi prius that had ever adorned the English bar. Yet there were many amongst his rivals and contemporaries who excelled him in the attributes of an orator. He was no sentence maker; his style was so unadorned and unpretending, that his audience never suspected themselves to be in the presence of a great man; he never abashed a jury, or benumbed their faculties by any display of intellectual superiority; but rather sought to comfort them, and mould them to his purpose, by inducing them to conceive a very high opinion of their own wisdom and intelligence; he never made the least attempt to exercise imagination, and always gave practical proof that he had no wish to excite the passions of a tribunal by any thing approaching to declamatory appeals. The addresses which he delivered to a jury formed a series of closely connected, well-digested statements and acute remarks, which appeared to be constructed not so much with reference to the general or abstract merits of the case, as to the peculiar mind and temper of those by whom that case was to be adjudicated. It never seemed to be his object to produce a brilliant effect as regarded the auditory assembled in a court, or to win applause from the more enlarged judgment of the public; but simply to get a verdict by such means as to him appeared the surest and the speediest; his mode of practice at the bar, therefore, did but little towards qualifying him to become distinguished in the senate. Doubtless his understanding was superlatively sound and vigorous, but its whole force had for many years been concentrated upon the subtleties of his profession. The statesman is accustomed to view mankind in masses—in mighty aggregations; but the nisi prius advocate deals with no greater body of his fellow-men than is barely sufficient to fill a jury-box. In his mind the interest of a nation may be confounded, as to its nature and quality, with that of an ordinary client, and the principles of legislation forgotten amidst the heats and struggles of forensic polemics. It can therefore occasion no surprise that the great luminary of Westminster hall should, in St. Stephen's Chapel, appear as a star of second or third-rate magnitude.

"The first subject to which he applied himself in the House of Commons was the financial policy of the Ministers who were in power when he first obtained a seat in that assembly. He urged the expediency of applying the sinking fund to make good the deficiency in the revenue; but, as might be expected, these early efforts of his in the way of parliamentary opposition produced little effect upon the general policy of the King's government, and he therefore thought it expedient to lose no time in applying himself to subjects more congenial to the habits, and probably more agreeable to the natural construction of his mind, accordingly, we find him giving cordial and efficient assistance to Sir Samuel Romilly and Sir James Mackintosh in their efforts to amend the criminal law. In the next stage of his career as a legislator he introduced a proposition for altering the poor-law That attempt proved abortive, and the practical carrying out of the principles which he then put forth was reserved for a later period and another parliament.

"In the year of 1822, a vacancy occurring for the University of Cambridge, he became a candidate, but Mr. Bankes was returned by a majority of 138; and Mr. Scarlett continued to sit for Peterborough, still a supporter of the Whig interest, though so quiet, unobtrusive, and discreet, that he could scarcely be called a partisan. On the breaking up of the Liverpool administration, in 1827, Mr. Canning invoked the assistance of the Whigs, and Mr. Scarlett became Attorney-General. This was his first approach towards those Conservative principles by the consistent maintenance of which he has been distinguished for nearly twenty years; and from the general tenour of his life it may be inferred that they were at all times more in consonance with the moral and intellectual constitution of his nature than that liberality which enters so largely into the speeches, and so little into the practice, of his quondam associates.

"In the office of Attorney-General Mr. (now Sir James) Scarlett was succeeded by that able and very learned, but somewhat eccentric person, Sir Charles Wetherell. Then came the Wellington Ministry, and with their accession to office came many changes, amongst which was the measure of Roman Catholic relief. To this Sir Charles Wetherell opposed himself with extraordinary effect and characteristic vehemence. Whereupon the Duke, in his usual way, intimated that the resignation of the worthy and learned knight would be very acceptable; and without loss of time Sir James Scarlett became once more his Majesty's Attorney-General. This was the period of the Brunswick Clubs; and the enthusiasm which characterized those associations naturally extended itself to their organs amongst the daily and weekly press. Several criminal informations were filed against a publication, long since defunct, called the Morning Journal, against the Atlas, and other papers, for libels on the Duke of Wellington and the Lord Chancellor. It has often been observed that 'the man who undertakes the advocacy of his own cause has a fool for his client.' Some of those who were the objects of prosecution at that time did defend themselves in person; and, looking at the circumstances in which they were placed, it may possibly be thought that their case formed an exception to the general rule; for, as they could not indulge much hope of acquittal, they had nothing to lose, while they had every thing to expect, from the sympathy of their patrons, and from the sources of advantage which notoriety is frequently supposed to open. These prosecutions, in which Sir James gained verdicts, formed the leading features of his official life. He still continued to owe his seat in Parliament to Lord Fitzwilliam, whether sitting for Malton or for Peterborough, and yet he gave his unqualified support to those principles which, about that time, ceased to be designated by the term 'Tory,' and assumed the denomination of 'Conservative.'

"As might be expected, he resigned the office of attorney-general when Lord Grey became the head of the government, and zealously co-operated with Sir Robert Peel and his supporters in their opposition to the several reform bills which, during the years 1830, and 1831, were submitted to the consideration of Parliament. He had, however, for some time ceased to be the nominee of Lord Fitzwilliam, having been returned for Cockermouth in 1831, and for Norwich in 1832.

"Lord Lyndhurst filled the office of Chief Baron in 1834. Towards the latter end of that year Sir Robert Peel was unexpectedly called upon to form a Conservative ministry. Lord Lyndhurst was, therefore, required to withdraw from the Exchequer, in order that he should preside in Chancery; and the office of Chief Baron was conferred upon Sir James Scarlett, who, at the same time, was called to the House of Peers by the title of Baron Abinger.

"It has long been proverbial in Westminster-hall, that a distinguished advocate, when raised to the bench, does not always become an eminent judge; on the contrary, it has happened in more instances than one, that men who never had enjoyed much fame at the bar have, when placed on the judgment-seat, acquired, amongst the sages of the law, the highest and most enduring reputations. To this rule Lord Abinger formed no exception, for his fame as an advocate has not been equalled by his character as a judge. The same result having often happened in similar cases did not prevent considerable surprise in some minds that a man who for nearly forty years had been accustomed to influence juries with almost undisputed away, should suddenly lose some portion of his ascendancy over their minds when he attained to a more elevated position and a weightier responsibility. A full investigation of the causes to which this effect might be attributed would require little less than a dissertation upon the character and composition of juries, upon the difference which subsists between the qualifications of an advocate and those of a judge, as well as upon those peculiarities of individual character that impart a favourable development to faculties in one position, and which in another cause them to become unmanageable or ineffective. As a brief memoir of this description must present rather a summary of facts than a series of metaphysical discussions, it may shortly be stated, that, for some time after his elevation to the bench, Lord Abinger did not get his verdicts out of the jury-box with all the facility that long habit at the bar probably led him to expect. A an advocate he had been the wonder of the age in which he lived. The causes of his matchless good fortune had often been made the subject of elaborate inquiry. One writer would tell the world, that he owed it all to his knowledge of 'the books;' a second would impute the whole matter to his skill in cross-examination; a third to habitual influence over the mind of the judge; a fourth that 'by some conjuration or mighty magic,' he acquired a personal acquaintance with every juror in the box during the progress of a cause; a fifth, that under the guise of an artless manner, a homely phraseology, and a passionless aspect, he was nevertheless a profound logician, and a consummate orator. It fortunately happens, that there exists no necessity for following up these ingenious speculations. No one who ever frequented the courts in which he practised could doubt that he, with much greater rapidity and effect than any other person present, acquired a knowledge of the facts of the case, the law of the case, the feelings and opinions of the judge, the degree of intelligence and prejudice existing in the jury-box, the characters of the parties to the cause, the documentary evidence, the pleadings, the witnesses, and even the solicitors on either side. Under every variety of circumstances, he exerted himself, body and soul, to present the facts of his client's case clearly and consistently, and indisputably before a jury. Few men excelled him in the art of cross-examination; but he outstripped all competition, whenever he found it necessary to restore to comfort, and to set up one of his own witnesses whose testimony might have been damaged by a severe cross-examination from the adverse counsel. Polite to the bar, respectful to the bench, and conciliatory to the jury, he went through the most toilsome and distracting duties with faculties never obscured by passion or enfeebled by defeat—with a memory never at fault, a judgment that seemed incapable of error, and an ardent zeal, as readily called forth on behalf of the meanest as in the cause of th most dignified client. Though the subject-matter of the action might reach the lowest scale of insignificance, his best endeavours were put forth; and the weightiest issue could exact from him no more.

Lord Abinger was for many years a bencher of the Inner Temple, and at all times a very zealous guardian of the rights and privileges of that ancient and learned corporation, never failing to use his best endeavours to prevent their calling to the bar any individual whose character or habits were likely to unfit him for becoming a depository of that large confidence which must often be reposed in members of the legal profession. He was for many years Attorney-General of the County Palatine of Lancaster; and his lordship was also a privy-councillor.

"His first wife died in the year 1829, and after remaining a widower for 14 years he married, in 1843, the daughter of the late Lee Steere Steere, Esq., of Jayes, in Surrey. Lady Abinger had previously been married to the Rev. H. J. Ridley, of Ockley.

"Lord Abinger retained the full use of his remarkable and vigorous faculties down to the very day on which he was attacked with the fatal disease that terminated his valuable existence. He was one of the judges of the Norfolk Circuit during the present assizes; and, being at Bury St. Edmund's, he presided in court on the second of this month up to the late hour of 7 o'clock in the evening, going through the business of the day with the same clearness, precision, and skill which distinguished him in the prime of life. Within two hours from the adjournment of the court he was speechless, and within the short space of five days, he breathed his last, having reached the advanced age of 76, and having acquired, as a leading counsel at nisi prius, higher rewards in fame and in wealth than have yet fallen to the lot of the most fortunate amongst his contemporaries.

"His eldest son, Robert Campbell Scarlett (now Lord Abinger), was born on the 5th of September, 1794. On the 19th of July, 1824, he married Sarah, the second daughter of George Smith, Esq., Chief Justice of the Mauritius. The issue of this marriage was two sons and two daughters. The present Lord Abinger was called to the bar, and practised for a short time. He was returned to Parliament for Norwich in 1835, and for Horsham in 1841; and his elevation to the peerage will therefore occasion a vacancy in the representation of that borough. The second child of the deceased peer is Lady Stratheden, the third is the widow of Sir Edward Currey, the fourth Colonel Scarlett, of the 5th Dragoon Guards; and his youngest son, who had been marshal and associate of the noble and learned Chief Baron in the Court of Exchequer, has been recently appointed her Majesty's Secretary of Legation at the Court of Tuscany."

PRACTICAL NOTES ON STATUTES.

No. V.

7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 55.

Sheriff's Fees.

The assizes being now over, we think that a short note upon the subject of sheriff's fees on writs of execution will be of practical utility.

What fees may be taken.—The sheriff was at common law bound to execute all the king's writs and sell the goods, without any charge or reward whatever (Woodgate v. Knatchbull, 2 T. R. 158), and therefore nothing can be claimed but that which is given by statute. The 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 55, repealed part of 42 Edw. 3, c. 9, and 1 Hen. 5, c. 4, and part of 23 Hen. 6, c. 9, and the fees mentioned in those statutes are now superseded by those allowed by the table; and in cases in which these last apply no other fees can be taken. Thus the amount of fees for sale by auction are fixed, and the sheriff cannot claim anything for extra trouble and expense to prevent a rescue or other incidental object (Slater v. Haines, 7 M. & W. 413, 9 D. P. C. 221), not even if such expense is incurred in consequence of adverse claims (Davies v. Edmonds, 2 Law T. 101, 3 D.N.S. 395); but he is entitled to his per-centage upon the whole sum realized by the sale, although a portion of it is subsequently paid to the landlord for rent. (Davies v. Edmonds, ibid.) As in the table of fees, sales by auction are only contemplated, the sheriff will lose his claim if the goods are valued and sold by private contract, and will not be allowed even the expenses of appraisement. (Phillips v. Lord Canterbury, 1 Law T. 317; 3rd N. S. 283; 11 M. & W. 619.)

Poundage.—The 29 Eliz. c 4, 3 Geo. 1, c. 15, and 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, are not repealed by the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict.; and the sheriff's claim to poundage is therefore unaffected by the new table of fees. Poundage, then, is due whenever there is a levy, although the parties compromise before sale (Alchin v. Wells, 5 T. R. 470); but not if the debtor pays the sum to the sheriff before execution, for then there is no levy. (Colls v. Coates, 11 Ad. & El. 826.) The poundage, on execution of writs of ca. sa. is payable only on the debt bonâ fide due, notwithstanding the plaintiff has, by mistake, indorsed a larger sum on the writ, in contravention of the directions of 3 Geo. 1, c. 13, sec. 17 (Evans v. Maners, 9 D. P. C. 256); and in case of a compromise by the Crown, poundage is due only upon the sum actually received by the Crown under the levy. (Rex v. Robinson, 4 D. C. P. 447.) If a writ of ca. sa. is indorsed non est inventus, and the defendant surrenders himself to the sheriff, the sheriff will be entitled to poundage. (Magnay v. Morgan, 1 Law T. 253.)

How levied, and return by sheriff.—In writs of ca. sa. poundage cannot be demanded of the defendant, as the 43 Geo. 3 gives to the sheriff the power of levying only under executions against goods. (Hagley v. Racket, 5 M. & W. 620.) The sheriff, it seems, may levy fees and expenses allowed by the new table, although they are not indorsed on the writ, and need not specify the respective amounts in his return. (Curtis v. Mayne, 2 D. N. S. 37.)

Remedies against the sheriff.—The third section of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. gives power to the Court to punish the sheriff summarily, provided the complaint is made before the last day of Term next following the act complained of; and the fourth section empowers the Court to award costs as they may think fit; but this only applies to cases of complaint to the Court, and costs cannot be ordered against the sheriff when the amount has been referred to a judge by consent. (Curlewis v. Bird, 1 D. N. S. 752.) It seems that this remedy is cumulative only, and does not alter the liability of the sheriff to an action for extortion. (Ibid.; but see Usher v. Walters, 1 Law T. 78.)

ARCHBOLD'S NEW PRACTICE.

(Concluded from p. 15.)

From the same chapter we take another very useful section on a subject upon which we receive continual applications for information:—

ADMISSION OF ARTICLED CLERKS.

"Notice of intention to apply for admission.]—Formerly, every clerk who intended to apply for admission, must, for the space of one full Term previous to the Term in which he intended to apply, have caused 'his name and place of abode, and also the name or names and place or places of abode of the attorney or attorneys to whom he shall have been articled, written in legible characters,' to be affixed on the outside of the court, in which he was to be admitted, in such place as public notices were usually affixed, and also in some conspicuous place in the chambers of each of the judges of the court, and also in the King's Bench office or Common Pleas office. (R. T. 31 Geo. 3, K. B. C. P.)

"This is somewhat altered at present. Instead of affixing it on the outside of the court, it is now ordered by R. G. H. 6 W. 4, that 'three days at the least' (that is to say, three days exclusive, Anon. 2 Har. & W. 65) 'before the commencement of the Term preceding that in which any person not before admitted shall propose to be admitted an attorney of either of the courts, he shall cause to be delivered at the Master's or Prothonotary's office, as the case may be, instead of affixing the same on the walls of the courts as now required, the usual written notices, which shall state, in addition to the particulars now required, his place or places of abode or service for the last preceding twelve months; and the Master or Prothonotary, as the case may be, shall reduce all such notices as in this rule first mentioned, into an alphabetical table or tables, under convenient heads, and affix the same on the first day of Term in some conspicuous place within, or near to and on the outside of each court.' Soon after this rule was promulgated, many mistakes were made in not delivering the notice to the Master in time; but as the rule was not then very well known, and the error therefore excusable, the Court in most cases allowed the name, &c. to be inserted in the Master's list, after the time here mentioned. (See Ex parte Blunt, 5 Dowl. 231.) Under special circumstances, also, the Court have allowed the clerk to put up his notices after the commencement of the Term, with a view of being admitted on the last day of the following Term. (Ex parte Chandler, 1 Dowl. N. C. 814.) Where the 15th April fell on Easter Sunday, and the Wednesday was therefore the first day of Easter Term, a delivery of the notices to the Master three days before the 18th was holden to be in time. (Ex parte Bayley, 6 Dowl. 516.) The clerk must also give a Term's notice, to the same effect, to the examiners, by leaving the same with the secretary of the Law Society at the hall of that society in Chancery-lane. (R. G. H. 6 W. 4, s. 4.)

"Also, by a rule of the Court of Queen's Bench, instead of sticking up the notices in the judges' chambers, which was found inconvenient, it is ordered that the party intending to apply shall 'for the space of one full Term, previous to the Term in which such person shall apply to be admitted, enter or cause to be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose at each of the judges' chambers of this court, his name and place of abode, and also the name and place of abode of the attorney or attorneys to whom he shall have been articled; and that no person who shall not have complied with this rule shall in future be admitted an attorney.' (R. T. 33 Geo. 3.) This must be done at least the day before the Term; but the Court, under peculiar circumstances, have allowed the clerk to be admitted, notwithstanding the notices were not entered until the first day of Term. (Ex parte Downing, 8 Law J. 232, qb.)

"So that now, in all the courts, one copy of this notice must be delivered at the Master's office three clear days at the least before the Term immediately preceding that in which the party is to apply for admission. And before the same Term, one other copy must be given to the examiners, as above directed; and five more copies must, in the Court of Queen's Bench, be entered in the books kept for that purpose at the chambers of the judges of that court respectively, or in the Court of Common Pleas, must be affixed in a conspicuous place in the respective chambers of the judges. (Ex parte Gordon, 2 Dowl. 470; Re Parsons, 5 Nev. & M. 241; 1 Har. & W. 349.) And one more copy must be affixed also before the Term, in the usual place in the Queen's Bench office or the Common Pleas office, as the case may be. The notice in the office being that which gives the greatest publicity to the intended application, will not be dispensed with (Ex parte Morgan, 4 Dowl. 296); where, indeed, through illness, this notice was not affixed in the office until the fourth day of Term, Taunton, J. allowed the clerk to be admitted in the following Term. (Ex parte Herbert, 2 Dowl. 172.) But where, through inadvertance, it had not been affixed at all, Littledale, J. refused to admit the clerk; he said, however, that upon giving fresh notices, he would allow him to be admitted on the last day of the following Term. (Ex parte Stonehurst, 1 Har. & W. 517; and see Ex parte Chandler, 1 Dowl. N. C. 814, S. P.) But as to the entry of the notices in the books at the judges' chambers, where, through the inadvertance of the London agent, the notice was entered in the book at the chambers of the chief justice only, and not at the chambers of the other judges, until within a few days of the second Term, Littledale, J. allowed the party to be admitted on the last day of Term. (Ex parte Woolright, 1 Har. & W. 517, 4 Dowl. 274; and see Ex parte Downing, supra.)

"The notice, we have seen, must state the name and place of abode of the master; and of all the masters the clerk may have served during his clerkship. If there be a mistake in the name (Ex parte Dobson, 2 Dowl. 539), or if any name be omitted (Ex parte Jones, 1 Dowl. 439. but see Ex parte Collins, 6 Dowl. 495), the Court usually refuse to admit the clerk. In one case, however, where a wrong name had been inserted by mistake, they allow the notice to be amended, and the party to be admitted on the last day of the following Term. (Re Clarke, 4 Nev. & M. 709, 1 Har. & W. 146, and see Ex parte Dukes, 7 Dowl. 605.) And where a clerk, who had changed his name during his clerkship, by mistake inserted in his notice his present name only, and not his former one, the Court allowed him to put up fresh notices, and to be called in the following Term. (Ex parte Ridley, 2 Har. and W. 66.) Where both master and clerk had two Christian names, and they were described by both in the notices, but by one only in the articles, the Court allowed the clerk to be admitted, on an affidavit of the identity of the party. (Ex parte Croft, 1 Har. & W. 375; 5 Nev. & M. 58.)

"The form of the notice will be found in the Appendix.

"In some cases, under peculiar circumstances, where the clerk was going to one of the colonies, or a foreign country, to practise there as an attorney, the Court, upon special application for the purpose, have allowed him to be admitted, before his notices have been given the time required by the rules above mentioned. (See Ex parte Hulme, 1 Har. and W. 366, 4 Dowl. 88; Ex parte Lawson, 2 Har. & W. 85; Ex parte Handcock, Id. 99.)

"It will be perceived that these notices must be given three days exclusive before the commencement of the Term next preceding that in which the clerk is to be admitted (ante, pp. 51, 52); and therefore if the clerk be not admitted in the second Term, all these notices must be again given, before he can apply for admission. (Ex parte Blunt, 12 Law J. 97, qb.) In one case, indeed, where, under peculiar circumstances, the clerk did not apply until the third Term, Littledale, J. although he could not order him to be admitted then, granted a rule that upon then giving his notices, he should be admitted on the last day of the fourth Term. (Ex parte Southern, 6 Dowl. 26.)

"Swearing, admission, &c.]—Engross an affidavit of service (see the form, in the Appendix), and annex it to the copy of the articles executed by your master; also engross an affidavit of the stamp duty being paid (see the form, in the Appendix), and let both affidavits be sworn before a judge.

"Having made these two affidavits, call at the Master's office, and get the original affidavit of the execution of the articles, which you had filed there. Pay him 2s. 6d. Then take these three affidavits, your articles (see Ex parte Clarke, 3 B. & A. 610; Ex parte Nicholls, 1 Dowl. N.C. 263), and the certificate of the examiners as to your fitness, to the chambers of one of the judges of the court, and give them to the clerk, who will thereupon obtain the judge's fiat for your admission; pay him one guinea. Then take the fiat, affidavit of due execution, articles and certificate to the Master's office; give them to the clerk, and pay him at the same time 25l. (the stamp duty on your admission), and his fees. Attend afterwards at Westminster, at such time as he may appoint, and you will be sworn, and sign the oath roll; and your admission, on stamped parchment, signed by one of the judges or Masters, will be delivered to you. Pay the crier 1s. for the oath, and 5s. on your signing the roll. You then take this admission to the Master's office, and the clerk there will enter your name upon the roll of the attorneys of the court. Pay him 10s. This enrolment is made by the Masters of the Queen's Bench and Exchequer, as a matter of course, even without instruction; but it is otherwise in the Common Pleas. In prudence you should see that it is done; for an omission in this respect may be of serious consequences to you. An attorney, although admitted, yet if not enrolled, has no legal right to costs; and in a late case, where the attorney for the defendant was not enrolled, the Court of Common Pleas stayed the proceedings, upon a verdict for the defendant, without costs. (Humphreys v. Harvey, 1 Bing. N.C. 62; 2 Dowl. 827.) And in a similar case, where an action for penalties was brought against the attorney for practising, his name not being on the roll of attorneys, the Court held that they could not relieve him, by allowing his name to be enrolled nunc pro tunc, as the right of a third person would thereby be compromised; they intimated, however, that they would have done so, if the action had not been brought. (Ex parte Swift, 1 Bing. N.C. 734; 1 Hodg. 175.)"

The second book treats of the proceedings in actions generally, in the following order: limitation of action; process and other proceedings in the action, to declaration; proceedings from declaration to plea; pleading and other proceedings, to issue; trial and other proceedings, to verdict; proceedings from verdict to judgment and execution; amendment and writ of error. The third book is devoted to the proceedings in particular actions, as ejectment, replevin, penal actions, and feigned issue. The fourth book describes the proceedings in actions by and against particular persons, as actions by and against attorneys; by and against bankrupts and their assignees; against clergymen; by and against corporations; against hundredors, &c.; by and against husband and wife; by and against ideots and lunatics, infants, insolvents; against justices of peace, constables, &c.; by paupers; against peers and members of Parliament; and by and against prisoners. The fifth book treats of the Law and Practice of Arbitration, and forms not the least valuable portion of the contents of these useful volumes. The sixth book supplies all the information required by the practitioner, as to rules, judges' orders, &c.; and the seventh and last treats of irregularity, and the mode of taking advantage of it.

To these there is added an Appendix of Forms; and that which, though a novelty, is certainly a recommendation, a series of Questions of Practice, introduced principally for the benefit of the law student, that he may be enabled, when he has carefully perused the volumes, to test his memory by answering these queries in writing, and then referring to the text to see if he has replied correctly. This is an innovation upon the established form of law books, for which we thank Mr. ARCHBOLD. We hope the example he has set will be universally followed.

The writer is so well known, and his authority stands so deservedly high, that we can pass no better compliment upon the execution of the work, the outline of whose design we have traced, than to say that it is in all respects worthy of himself.

We will take one other passage, not, however, so much to shew the manner of the author, as to instruct the reader. It is on the subject of ARBITRATION.

"All matters in dispute between parties may be referred by them to arbitration. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, have refused to make a submission a rule of court, where part of the matter agreed to be referred had been made the subject of an indictment. (Watson v. M'Cullum, 8 T. R. 520, but see Baker v. Townsend, 7 Taunt. 422; R. v. Cotesbatch, 5 D. & R. 265.) And the Court of Exchequer have holden that a poor's rate was not the subject of a reference, and that an award as to its validity, and the extent of liability of one of the parties to it, was therefore bad, and could not be enforced. (Thorp v. Cole et al. 2 Cr. M. & R. 367, 1 Mee. & W. 531.) Also, upon a trial before the sheriff, upon a writ of trial, a verdict cannot be taken subject to an award; for the sheriff is bound to try the cause, and cannot delegate his authority to another. (Wilson v. Thorpe, 6 Mees. & W. 721.)

"We shall consider this subject under the following heads:—1, the submission; 2, the proceedings before the arbitrator, and the award; 3, the mode of enforcing the award; 4, for what causes and how set aside.

"1. The submission.

"A submission to arbitration may be, by order of Nisi Prius, or by rule of court, or by judge's order, by bond or other deed or agreement of submission. These we shall consider presently. In drawing them up, care must be taken to define exactly what matter in difference is intended to be referred. The reference is usually either of all matters in difference between the parties, or of the matters in difference in some particular cause, or of some specific matter in difference between them. A submission of all matters in difference between the parties in the cause would be in fact a submission, not of the cause only, but of all matters in difference; the words 'parties in the cause,' being merely a designation of the parties, and not of the subject of reference. (Malcolm v. Fullarton, 2 T. R. 645.) But a reference of all matters in difference in the cause between the parties would be a reference of the cause only. (Id. and see Smith v. Muller, 3 T. R. 624.) Where the submission recited a claim by the plaintiff against the defendant for a sum of 201*l.* and then stated an agreement to refer all matters in difference; in fact, the plaintiff had another claim against the defendant for 120*l.* which he did not actually demand of him until after the date of the submission, but which he insisted upon before the arbitrator, and the arbitrator awarded upon it in his favour: the Court held, that this recital in the submission did not limit the effect of the larger operative words, and that the arbitrator was right in deciding upon this claim of 120*l.* it being a matter in difference between the parties. (Charleton et al. v. Spencer, 12 Law J. 23, qb.) If by mistake the submission be drawn up differently from what was intended by one of the parties, so as to preclude him from bringing his case or any material part of it under the consideration of the arbitrator, he should apply to the other party to consent to its being amended; and if they refuse, a judge upon summons will probably allow him to revoke his submission. But the Court, without consent, will not amend it. (Rawtree v. King, 5 Moore, 167; Pearman v. Carter, 2 Chit. 29.)

"By whom.]—Where the submission is by bonds or deed, the bonds or deed must be executed by the parties themselves, or by some persons authorized by them, for that purpose, by some instrument under seal; and the like, if the submission be by parol, or by agreement not under seal, except that the authority need not be by deed. And it has been holden that one of several partners cannot bind his co-partners by a submission to arbitration, even of matters arising out of the business of the firm. (Stead v. Salt, 3 Bing. 101; Adams v. Bankart, 1 Cr M. & R. 681; and see Boyd v. Emmerson, 4 Nev. & M. 99.) Where the submission is by rule of court or judge's order, it is always obtained by the attorneys of the respective parties; and at Nisi Prius, if the counsel or attorneys for parties in a cause consent to a reference, it is deemed binding on the clients, whether they are privy or consenting to it or not. (Filmer v. Delber, 3 Taunt. 486; see Beddell v. Doose, 6 B. & C. 255.)

"By order of Nisi Prius.]—When a cause is called on at Nisi Prius, it may be referred by an order of Nisi Prius. As soon as this is agreed upon, the counsel engaged in the cause indorse their briefs accordingly, and hand them to the associate, who will thereupon draw up the order. At the same time, it is usual to have the jury sworn, and to take their verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the damages laid in the declaration, subject to the award; this is essentially necessary in bailable actions, for otherwise the bail would be discharged by the reference. (2 Saund. 72 a.) If the award be at all likely to be under 20*l.* or likely to be such, in other respects, as would require the certificate of the judge, if the cause had been tried to give the parties costs, care should be taken that a power be given to the arbitrator, by the order, to certify in the same manner the judge might have done. (See Wallen v. Smith, 5 Mees. & W. 159; Dewar v. Swaby, 10 Law J. 328, qb.; Spain v. Cudell, 9 Dowl. 745.)

"By rule of court or judge's order.]—It is only in cases where an action is pending, that the parties can submit to arbitration by a rule of court or a judge's order. The rule is obtained upon two motion papers, on which the terms of the reference are indorsed shortly thus: 'Referred to Mr. —— on the usual terms; award to be made on or before the ——,' adding if necessary such other terms, not included in the usual printed form of the rule, as may be agreed upon. Get these signed by counsel, and take them to the Master's office, and the clerk there will thereupon draw up the rule. A judge's order is obtained from his clerk, upon a written consent to the like effect, signed by the attorneys on both sides. It may be necessary to mention, that a judge's order, referring a cause, may be made a rule of court, even after the submission has been revoked by one of the parties; for it may be necessary, notwithstanding the revocation, to act upon that part of the order which gives costs for wilful delay. (Aston v. George, 2 B. & A. 395.)

"By bond, &c.]—If no action be pending, or indeed whether there be or not, the parties may submit the matter in difference between them to arbitration, either by mutual bonds of submission, or by deed, or by agreement not under seal, or by parol. I have given a form of such a bond, in the Appendix, from which a deed or agreement, if preferred, may readily be framed. In these instruments, care should always be taken to introduce the usual consent clause, under stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, which shall be mentioned presently, that the submission may be made a rule of court; otherwise you will not be enabled to proceed against the party by attachment, or execution, for non-performance of the award.

"By stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, s. 1. Parties wishing to end 'any controversy, suit or quarrel, for which there is no other remedy but by personal action or suit in equity,' by arbitration, may agree that their submission shall be made a rule of any of His Majesty's courts of record, and insert such agreement in their submission; and the same may afterwards, upon affidavit thereof by one of the witnesses thereto, be entered of record in such court, and a rule be made thereupon; and if any of the parties disobey the award or umpirage to be made in pursuance of such submission, he shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of the said court, and the court on motion shall issue process against him.

"A parol submission is not within this Act, and cannot therefore be made a rule of court, even with the consent of parties. (Ansell v. Evans, 7 T. R. 1.) Nor are mere criminal matters, which are the subject of indictment, within the Act; the words 'controversies, suits or quarrels,' meaning only civil disputes between the parties. (Per Lord Kenyon in Watson v. M'Cullum, 8 T. R. 520, and see Lucas v. Wilson, 2 Burr. 701.) Where three actions in the Exchequer and one in the King's Bench were referred by one agreement, containing a consent that it might be made a rule of the Court of King's Bench or Exchequer; and after the award was made, the submission was accordingly made a rule of the Court of King's Bench; and there was an application also to make it a rule of the Exchequer, but that court refused to do so, saying that the Court of King's Bench, of which the submission was already made a rule, could deal with the whole matter, as well as they could. (Winpenny v. Bates, 1 Dowl. 559.) So, where a cause in the Exchequer was referred by a judge's order, and it was made a part of the order that it should be made a rule of the Court of Queen's Bench: upon application for this purpose to Patteson, J. in the Bail Court, he held there was no objection to it, and it was accordingly done. (Milstead v. Craufield, 9 Dowl. 124.) Where the consent was, to make the 'award' a rule of court, instead of the submission, the Court held it to be sufficient. (Pedley v. Westmacot, 3 East, 603; Re Storey, et al. 7 Ad. & El. 602; see Soilleux v. Herbst, 2 B. & P. 444; Re Woodcroft and Jones, 9 Dowl. 538.) Where the agreement of submission contained this consent, and the time for making the award was afterwards enlarged, but the enlargement did not contain it, it was contended that the submission alone could be made a rule of court, but not the enlargement: but the Court, after consulting with the other judges, held, that a general consent to enlarge, virtually included all the terms of the first submission, and among the rest, the consent to make it a rule of court. (Evans v. Thompson, 5 East, 189.) The submission may be made a rule of court in vacation, as well as in Term. (Re Taylor, 5 B. & A. 217.) And it may be made a rule of court, even after it has been revoked. (Aston v. George, 2 B. & A. 395; see 5 Taunt. 452, semb. cont.)

"Proceedings before the arbitrator, and the award.

"After having obtained the submission, and ascertained that the arbitrator will undertake the reference, get a written appointment from the arbitrator, and serve a copy of it on the opposite party. Make out a short statement of your case, and leave it with the arbitrator; or if the cause have been referred at Nisi Prius, leave him one of the briefs. Then attend at the time appointed, with your witnesses, and have them called in before the arbitrator, in the order in which you wish them to be examined. If statements, as above mentioned, or the briefs, have been delivered to the arbitrator, it is not usual or necessary for even counsel to address him in the first instance, but he at once pro- ceeds to hear the witnesses on both sides; and he then hears the parties by their counsel or attorneys,—for the plaintiff first, then for the defendant, and lastly (if the defendant have called witnesses or given other evidence), for the plaintiff in reply. Some arbitrators, in cases where the defendant has given evidence, allow the counsel or attorney for the defendant to address him first, and then the plaintiff's counsel or attorney in reply. But in this, and in all other matters under the immediate control of the arbitrator, it is impossible to lay down any general rule of practice, each arbitrator usually adopting such a line of practice in this respect as he thinks best. As to the law connected with this part of the subject, independently of the practice, it will be convenient to consider it under the following heads.

"Umpire and umpirage.]—If the submission direct an umpirage, in case the arbitrators should disagree, it either names the umpire, or directs how and when he should be appointed. If he is to be appointed by the arbitrators, he may in general be appointed by them before they enter upon the reference, even although the submission give the power to appoint only in case of their disagreeing. (Bates v. Cook, 9 B. & C. 407, Roe dem. Wood v. Doe, 2 T. R. 644.) They may, in fact, appoint him either before or after the time limited for making their award, provided they do so before the time limited for making his umpirage. (Harding v. Watts, 15 East, 556.) And they must appoint him, if at all, before the time appointed by the submission for the making of his umpirage. (Re Doddington et al. 8 Law. J. 331, cp.) If the arbitrators are to appoint him, his appointment should be matter o' choice, not of chance: they cannot choose him by lot, or by tossing-up, or the like; if they do, his umpirage cannot be enforced, and the Court, upon application, will set it aside (Re Cassel, 9 B. & C. 624; Ford v. Jones, 3 B. & Ad. 248; Wells v. Cooke, 2. B. & A. 218; Young v. Miller, 3 B. & C. 407; Re Greenwood et al. 9 Ad. & El. 699; Hodson v. Drewry, 7 Dowl. 569); unless indeed he have been so chosen, with the knowledge and consent of the parties. (Re Tunno & Bird, 5 B. & Ad. 488, 2 Nev. & M. 328, and see Re Jamieson, 2 R. & W. 35.) Where one of two arbitrators choose the umpire, under some claim of right to do so, which was acquiesced in, though with some reluctance, and for the sake of peace, by the other, the Court refused to set aside the umpirage. (Re Vinicombe & Morgan, 10 Law J. 128, qb.) Where arbitrators choose an umpire, and, upon his refusing to act, choose another, their second choice is good; their power to appoint is not determined by the first choice, if the umpire then chosen refuse to act. (Trippet v. Eyre, 3 Lev. 563; Oliver v. Collings, 11 East, 367.)

"When the umpire enters upon his umpirage, he may re-examine the witnesses; but it has been holden not to be objectionable for the umpire to receive the evidence from the arbitrators, unless the parties require him to do otherwise (Hall v. Lawrance, 4 T. R. 589), or expressly consent to his doing otherwise; if either of them re,uest of him to examine the witnesses, and he refuse to do so, the Court will set aside the award. (Re Sulkeld et al. 10 Law J. 22, qb.) So, if an umpire refuse to receive further evidence, besides that which was given before the arbitrators, his umpirage will be bad, and the Court will set it aside; and the fact of one of the parties having taken it up will be no waiver of the objection. (Re Jenkins et al. 11 Law J. 7', qb.) He may make his umpirage at any time before the expiration of the time limited for that purpose by the submission; he may do so even before the time limited for the arbitrators making their award. (Spriyens v. Nash, 5 M. & S. 193; Smailes v. Wright, 3 M. & S. 559.) Where the umpire was to make his umpirage within six months, and he made it within six calendar months, but not within six lunar months, the umpirage was holden bad. (Re Swinford and Horn, 6 M. & S. 226.) There is no objection to the arbitrators joining with him in his umpirage; their doing so does not affect the umpirage either one way or the other. (Soulsby v. Hodgson, 3 Burr. 1474; Beck v. Sargent, 4 Taunt. 232.) But it seems that arbitrators cannot decide upon part, and the umpire upon another part, of the matters referred, unless the submission contain a special authority to that effec.. (Tollit v. Saunders, 9 Price, 612.) On the other hand, where by the submission the arbitrators had a power to appoint an umpire, and the parties bound themselves to perform and obey the award of the said two arbitrators and their umpire; an award was made by the two arbitrators only, and it did not appear they had appointed any umpire: the Court held the award bad, and refused to grant an attachment for the non-performance of it. (Hetherington v Robinson, 4 Mees. & W. 608.)

"Witnesses.]—Where the submission is by rule of court or judge's order, or order of Nisi Prius, or where it contains a consent that it shall be made a rule of court, the attendance of witnesses before the arbitrator may be compelled, either by rule of court or a judge's order; the party at the time of making the application, stating the county in which the witness resides, or that he cannot be found; they may also be compelled by such rule or order to produce such documents as they would be bound to produce upon a trial. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 40.) An appointment of the time and place of attendance, signed by one, at least, of the arbitrators or by the umpire, must be served upon the witness, together with or after the rule or order, and his expenses tendered to him in the same manner as in the case of a trial; after which, disobedience of the rule or order will be deemed a contempt of the Court. Id. But he shall not be compelled to attend more than two consecutive days, to be named in such order. Id. There is no objection, it should seem, to have one order for all the witnesses on each side, and to serve copies upon them personally, at the same time shewing them the original, in the same manner as in the case of a subpœna; but it may be prudent to have a signed appointment for each witness.

"The witnesses may be sworn by any one of the arbitrators or the umpire. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 41.) And the submission, directing the witnesses to be examined on oath before a judge or commissioner (which may still be done, James v. Attwood, 5 Bing. N.C. 628), does not exclude this general power of the arbitrator to administer the oath. (Hodsoll v. Wise, 4 Mees. & W. 536; S. C. nom. Hodson v. Wilde, 7 Dowl. 15.) The form of oath to be administered may be thus:—'You shall true answers make to all such questions as shall be asked of you, touching the matters in question between the parties to this reference; So help you God.' Or in the case of a Quaker or Moravian, he may make an affirmation thus, repeating it after the arbitrator: 'I, A. B. being [one of the people called Quakers' or 'one of the united brethren called Moravians] do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that I shall true answers make to all such questions as shall be asked of me, touching the matters in question between the parties to this reference.' It is no objection, however, to an award, that the witnesses were not examined upon oath, if that objection were not made at the time of the examination. (Ridout v. Pye, 1 B. & P. 91.) But where the submission required the witnesses to be examined on oath, and the arbitrator received some affidavits, the Court set aside the award, saying that the deponents ought to have been examined vivâ voce. (Banks v. Banks, 1 Gale, 46.)

"Examination of Parties.]—The rule or order of reference usually authorizes the arbitrator to examine the parties, if he think fit. As it is a matter entirely in the discretion of the arbitrator, whether he will examine a party or not, the Court will not interfere where he refuses to do so. (Scales v. East London Water Works Company, 1 Hodg. 91.) Indeed arbitrators very seldom avail themselves of the power; and when they do, it is usually by examining one party for the other, as to matters of which there is no other evidence. (See Warne v. Bryant, 3 B. & C. 590.) But there is no objection to his examining the parties, each in support of his own case, if he think fit. (Wells v. Benskin, 9 Mees & W. 45.) The examination in such a case is usually conducted by the arbitrator himself, without the interference of counsel, &c."

With such decisive evidence of its worth, we now commend these volumes to the notice of the Profession.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

[The charge for the insertion of the above is 2s. 6d.]

BIRTH.

Dickinson.—On the 4th inst. at 8, Upper Harley-street, the wife of F. H. Dickinson, esq. M.P. of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

Aboyne, the Earl of, eldest son of the Marquis of Huntly, to Mary Antoinetta, only surviving daughter of the Rev. P. W. Pegus and the Countess Dowager of Lindsey, and half sister of the Earl of Lindsey, at St. Martin's church.

Bromfield, Mr. James, of Whitchurch, Shropshire, solicitor, to Alice Anne, daughter of the late Stephen Worthington, esq. of Liverpool, on the 9th inst. at Bangor, Carnarvonshire.

Langdale, Alfred, esq to Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late W. C. L. Keene, esq. of Gower-street and Lincoln's-inn, on the 11th inst. at St. Pancras Church.

Morgan, George De, esq. of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, to Josephine, third daughter of Rear-Admiral Sir Josiah Coghill Coghill, bart. of Belvedere-house, in the county of Dublin, on the 10th inst. at Cheltenham.

DEATHS.

Bromley, Nathaniel Warner, esq. of Bansfield Hall, Suffolk, and East-street, Red Lion-square, and formerly of Gray's-inn, on the 8th inst. aged 88.

Gould, John, esq. of Gloucester-street, Queen-square, and late of Rochester, solicitor, on the 29th ult. aged 74.

Leathley, John, esq. second son of the late William Leathley, esq. of Upper Bedford-place, and nephew of Mr. Justice Maule, on the 15th January, at Macao.

Smith, George, esq. on the 9th inst. at his chambers, No. ,, Gray's-inn-square.

THE MONEY MARKET.

There has been some activity and fluctuation in the Stock-market since our last report. Consols have reached 100½, at which they now stand. There is some advance in the unfunded debt, Exchequer Bills being now quoted 74s. to 76s. prem. The Three per Cents. Reduced, 99⅝ to ¾; the Three-and-a-Half per Cents. Reduced, 103⅛ to ¼; the New Three-and-a-Half per Cents., 104 to ⅛; Bank Stock, 200 to 201; India Stock, 294 to 296.

The Foreign market is firm, with but little doing; Spanish Five per Cents. closed 26½ to ⅝; the Three per Cents., 37⅜ to ½; Portuguese, 46 to 47; Peruvian, 30½ to 31½; Mexican, 35¾ to 36; the Deferred, 15⅞ to 16; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 61⅛ to ⅜; the Five per Cents., 100 to ¼; Danish, 87½ to 88½; Colombian, 14⅞ to 15⅛; Chilian, 102 to 104; Buenos Ayres, 37 to 38; Brazilian, 80 to 81; and Belgian, 104½ to 105½.

In the Railway Share market there has been no material change since our last. We may, however, add, that prices do not stand so firm as they did last week. Subjoined are the latest quotations:—London and Birmingham, 234 to 236; New Quarter Shares, 27½ to 8½; New Thirds, 39½ to 40½; South Western, 84 to 5; Eighths, 3⅞ to 4⅛ prem.; London and Brighton, 44 to ½ per share; New, 11¼ to ½; Blackwall, 6⅛ to ⅜; Greenwich, 5 to ⅛; Croydon, 16⅝ to ⅞, Manchester and Leeds, 112 to 114; New, 47½ to 8½; Quarter Shares, 9¼ to ¾; Manchester and Birmingham, 48 to 49; Birmingham and Derby, 62 to 3; Thirds, 20 to 1; Eighths, 4¼ to ½; Midland Counties, 90 to 2; North Midland, 90 to 2; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 65½ to 6½; New, 16¼ to ½; Great Western, 109½ to 10½; Half Shares, 69½ to 70½; Fifths, 19 to ¼; South Eastern, 35½; New, 5¼ to ¾ premium; Northern and Eastern, 57¼ to 8¼ per share; Eastern Counties, 12¼ to ½; New Registered, 14⅛ to ⅜; Perpetual Five per Cents., 1 1-16 to 3-16 premium: Birmingham and Gloucester, 94 to 6 per share; Hull and Selby, 58½ to 9½; Bristol and Exeter, 72 to 4; Paris and Orleans, 35¾ to 6; Paris and Rouen, 37½ to 8; Rouen and Havre, 7¼ to ¾ prem.; Caledonian, 5¼ per share; Chester and Holyhead, 7¼; Dublin and Cashel, 6; Harrowgate and Knaresborough, 2¾ to ⅞; Lancaster and Carlisle, 7⅜ to ⅝; Norwich and Brandon, 7½.

In Joint Stock Banks—Colonial, 15; London Joint Stock, 13⅜ to ⅝; London and Westminster, 25⅛; Provincial of Ireland, New, 17½.

In Mines—Santiago de Cuba, 9; United Mexican, 4⅜.

The High Prices of the Funds.—It appears that for the first time for nearly a century, the Three per Cent. Consols are at par, or 100*l.* money for 100*l.* stock. The last time they were at 100*l.* was in 1749, the year after the peace of Aix-la Chapelle; at which period the amount of the public debt was rather more than 78,000,000*l.* The highest price the Three per Cents. ever rose to was in June, 1737, and again in May, 1739, when they attained the high price of 107*l.* Between the year 1729 and the year of the rebellion, 1745, the Three per Cents. were never lower than 89, and for a considerable portion of that period they were above par. Again, in March, 1792, they rose to 97⅛, when the amount of the national debt was 239,359,000*l.* During the period between the peace of Paris, in 1763 (when the amount of the debt was 138,774,000*l.*), and the breaking out of the American war, they fluctuated between 80 and 90 per cent. Towards the close of the American war—namely, in Feb. 1782—they were as low as 52¼. At the termination of the American war the debt was 249,851,628*l.* In the years 1797-8, in consequence of the great success of the French armies on the continent, and of the mutiny at the Nore, and of the rebellion in Ireland, together with the failure of the attempt to negotiate with the French republic, the price of stock became less than it had been before or since that time. In May, and again in June, 1797, the Three per Cents. Reduced were as low as 46¾. In the September of that year the Three per Cent. Consols fell to 47⅞, being the lowest price to which they ever have fallen. Dr. Hamilton, in his valuable work on the national debt, states that they were also at that price in January, 1798. The Three per Cent. Consols have not been under 68 since the latter part of the year 1820, when they were 67⅝. The highest price the Four per Cents. ever attained was 107½, in August, 1791; and the lowest price was 59½, in January, 1798. The highest price the Five per Cents. ever attained was in August, 1791, when they were 122½, and the lowest price was in August, 1798, when they were only 60½.—Globe.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Thursday, March 14.

STOCKING v. LLEWELLYN.

Infringement of patent—Injunction—If after injunction obtained there appears to be any material variation between the allegations in the bill or the aid thereby sought, and the affidavits in support of the plaintiff's case, the Court will, upon application of the defendant, dissolve the injunction with costs.

This was a motion to dissolve an injunction which had been obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant, to restrain him from using and exercising, and from building and running certain cabs, to the [illegible] benefit of which the plaintiff claimed to be solely entitled, under and by virtue of certain letters patent. The plaintiff's case was, that about the year 1836, W. S. Gillett and John Chapman invented certain improvements in the construction of cabs, the advantage whereof consisted in the cabs being in a state of balance on the axle when the driver was in his seat, so that the weight on the horse was as little as possible, and with the centre of gravity of the vehicle directly under the passengers' seat, thereby preventing the possibility of the vehicle overturning.

The above invention was secured to the said W. S. Gillett and J. Chapman by letters patent, dated 21st day of December, 1836, which gave them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, the exclusive right, during the term of fourteen years from the date thereof, to make, use, exercise, and vend their invention of "certain improvements of that description of vehicles called cabs, within England and Wales and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed."

In pursuance of a proviso in the said letters patent, the patentees procured a specification, describing the nature of the invention, and how it is to be performed, to be duly enrolled in the Court of Chancery, on the 21st day of June, 1837, within six months of the date of the letters patent.

In the specification, the patentees declared that their invention related, 1st, to the application of a driving-seat or box (or such-like convenient support for the driver), to the back of such description of two wheeled one-horse vehicles as are so constructed that the passengers enter in front, suitable to cabs; 2ndly, in a mode of applying and working of a window or blind to cabs; 3rdly, in the mode of applying a safety-frame to cabs; 4thly, a mode of applying the springs of two-wheeled one-horse vehicles used as cabs; 5thly, in a mode of applying a suitable instrument to cabs to ascertain the distance at any time gone by the cab, whereby the same might be indicated to the passenger and to the owner of the vehicle, and thus produce a check on the driver. The description of which novelties were referred to by figures or letters on certain drawings annexed to the specification.

The above-named patentees continued till lately to be the joint proprietors of their patent invention, until the 7th of December last, when the letters patent were assigned and made over to John Chapman solely, who, on the day following, duly assigned all his interest therein to the plaintiff, who is consequently now the sole holder of the letters patent and sole proprietor of the invention.

The charge against the defendant was, that he had lately, and without leave of the plaintiff, built and used three cabs constructed with driving seats and safety frames according to the method described in the specification, and protected by the letters patent, [illegible] Chapman on behalf of [illegible] W. S. Gillett, his co-patentee [illegible] license [illegible] [illegible] which [illegible] became [illegible] payment [illegible] defendant had [illegible] of the above [illegible] took [illegible] the [illegible] structed with driving seats and safety-frames according to the specification.

It moreover appeared that the original patentees had [illegible] their patent at law in [illegible] actions which they brought against parties infringing the same, and obtained triple damages in four out of five of these actions; which, however, were not paid by the defendants, they having taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. The bill for the injunction prayed "that the defendant, his agents, servants, and workmen might be restrained from using and exercising the aforesaid invention of 'certain improvements in that description of vehicle called cabs,' and from building, or running, or selling and disposing of any cabs constructed with driving seats and safety-frames for which the said letters [illegible] [illegible] according to the method [illegible] the said specification, during the [illegible] the said term of fourteen years granted by the said letters patent, without the license, consent, or agreement of the plaintiff first had and obtained. And that an account might be decreed to be taken of all sums of money made, possessed, and received by the said defendant, or by any persons or person by his order, or for his use, by running cabs constructed according to the said specification, without a proper and valid license from the plaintiff or the former holders of the said patent, the plaintiff being ready and willing, and thereby offering on his part to account for any trifling sums which might have been paid by and received from the defendant, upon the understanding that he would take out a proper license, as aforesaid. And that the defendant might be decreed to pay the plaintiff what should be found due from him upon taking such account."

Bethell and Wood, for the motion, denied that the defendant had ever built any cab whatever with driving-seats or safety-frames, according to the method described in the specification [illegible] the bill to be protected by the said letters patent or any cab whatever. On the contrary, it appeared from the defendant's answer and affidavits in support of the motion, that the defendant had, about the month of Aug. 1840, bought a second-hand cab at a sale by public auction at Coldridge's Repository, in St. Martin's-lane, which cab has a safety-frame and springs similar to that used in Hansom's cabs, and in the specification set forth in plaintiff's bill; but there was not, nor is there, any window, or blind, with a crank-handle thereto, to such cab, or any apparatus for measuring the distance gone by such cab; and that when he bought the cab he caused it to be repaired, and then used and drove it publicly without any molestation, or any person claiming any patent right, until the month of August 1841, when he was threatened by Chapman with legal proceedings unless he took out a license for the same; and that, being alarmed at the threats of legal proceedings, he from time to time made small payments of money to Chapman, down to the month of April last; that in the month of Sept. 1842, he formed a co-partnership with a person, by name of Gillins, as cab proprietors, and that the latter brought into the concern two other cabs (mentioned in the plaintiff's bill) of the same construction as the cab originally purchased by the defendant, with the exception of certain variations in window and crank handle, which were driven publicly by the defendant and his partner without molestation, or without any payment of any license for the same, until the 11th of December last, and that neither he nor his partner when they bought their respective cabs, had any knowledge that they had been improperly built, or that their building [illegible] in any way infringed the plaintiff's patent. That the cab, called Hansom's Patent Safety Cab, differed in no respect from the cab described in the specification to the said letters patent, except in having the seat at the top instead of behind the cab; and that numerous cabs were constructed and have been used since August 1836, according to the invention of Mr. Hansom, agreeing with the construction in the before-mentioned specification, and that there was no novelty in the construction of the plaintiff's cab. Upon the facts of the case, therefore, the defendant contended that the injunction ought to be dissolved—in the first place, because the plaintiff had represented the defendant as having built the cab, whereas he ought to have alleged him, not as building, but as using the said cab. 2ndly. That the defendant bought the vehicle at a market overt, without being at all aware that he was infringing any person's patent. 3rdly. That there was a want of honesty in the representation made by the plaintiff when he applied for the injunction—namely, his having stated the defendant as the maker or builder of the patent cab, in respect of of which the injunction was allowed. 4thly. That after the license had been granted, the non-payment of the arrears into which the defendant had fallen was a mere matter of law, in respect of which the plaintiff ought to have brought his action.

S[illegible] and Berrett, in support of the injunction, contended that the [illegible] having bought the cab [illegible] there was no essential dis[illegible] as to the merits of his [illegible] and that, with regard to the [illegible] partly relied upon by the defendant, the question could not now be a matter of discussion. The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Certainly not. And if, as [illegible] patent articles in open market, [illegible] the patent itself would be [illegible] the extent of the articles [illegible] that [illegible] had driven three cabs about with plaintiff's safety frame, and there was no evidence that the safety frame was not put on when the cab was sent to be repaired.

Cases cited: Stocking v. Woodill (not reported); Jones v. Pierce (Webs. Pat. Cas. 124); University of Oxford and Cambridge v. Richardson (6 Ves. 708).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It is quite plain on the face of the bill that it seeks relief on the ground of the defendant having built cabs; but the affidavits made on behalf of the plaintiff do not sufficiently support the case he has put forward by his bill. The relief which the injunction asked was founded upon that allegation, which states that the defendant had built and used three cabs. The bill narrates the plaintiff's title, and that the defendants "had lately, without leave of plaintiff, built and used three cabs, constructed with driving-seats and safety-frames, according to the method described in the specification, and protected by the said letters patent, and he has thereby infringed on the plaintiff's said letters patent, and the benefit and advantage granted thereby—nevertheless he persists in building and running cabs constructed with driving seats and safety-frames, according to the said specification, and sets the plaintiff at defiance," &c.; and then the injunction is asked to restrain defendant "from using and exercising the aforesaid invention, and from building, or running, or selling any of such cabs." The relief therefore asked is in respect of the building, and my attention could only be called to the affidavit which omits to state the building. Moreover, from the evidence, it not only appears that the defendant never has built or constructed any vehicles upon the principle of the plaintiff's patent, but that the latter was also acquainted with this circumstance [illegible] he filed his bill. As the plaintiff did not amend his bill, and put his case properly before the Court, the injunction must be dissolved. It is said at law a licensee cannot dispute his patentee's title any more than a tenant can his landlord's; but that is not the law here. Injunction dissolved with costs.

GARCIAS v. RICARDO.

Practice under the 17th order of 26th of August, 1841.

The 17th order of 26th of August, 1841, directs that the interrogatories contained in the interrogatory part of the bill, shall be divided as conveniently as may be from each other, and numbered consecutively 1, 2, 3, &c. This does not render it imperative on the plaintiff, when he ingrosses his bill, to commence every such interrogatory at the margin with a fresh line, although it may have been the invariable practice with attorneys so to do ever since the promulgation of the above orders.

This was an application made to the Court, to settle a question with reference to the intention of the 17th order.

It appears that the interrogatories had been engrossed in the bill in a continued form, without any breaks, and without commencing every interrogatory by a fresh line. The officer of the court had, in consequence, refused to file the bill; first, on the ground of the common usage, which, since the new orders of 1841, had been adopted by the profession, of taking a fresh line for each interrogatory; and, secondly, the inconvenience and trouble which a contrary practice would involve.

Lewis appeared for the plaintiff.

His HONOUR the VICE CHANCELLOR said, that in reference to the orders of 26th of August, 1841, it has always been his object to impose no greater burdens upon the suitor than the orders themselves will warrant,—and that as the interrogatories then stood he thought they were sufficient. His Honour stated, moreover, that although it, be true, that, since the orders of 1841 were issued, it has been the usage to put the numbers in the margin, yet he thought it was quite consistent with the liberty of the subject to place them in continuation—and that he was in favour of the record.

Bill ordered to be put upon the file.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Thursday, April 4.

WHITWORTH v. GAUGAIN.

Bankers—Equitable mortgagee—Judgment creditor—Tenant by elegit.

The title of a judgment creditor, or a tenant by elegit in actual possession, is not superior, or equal, to that of a prior equitable incumbrance.

In this case the bill was filed by the plaintiffs, as equitable mortgagees, against the defendants, as judgment creditors of Mr. Cooke, for the purpose of having the property, comprised in such mortgage, declared by the Court to be subject, in the first instance, to the mortgage debt, before satisfying the judgment creditors, on the ground that the judgments were entered up subsequently to the deposit with them, the plaintiffs, of the title-deeds of the property under an agreement by way of equitable mortgage, and notwithstanding the defendants had since, by means of elegits, obtained actual possession of the property.

Romilly, Q.C., and Whitworth, for the plaintiffs. The principle contended for was, that an equitable mortgage is a distinct specific charge upon the property, and a judgment only a general one. That an equitable mortgagee is a purchaser, for a valuable consideration, of an interest in land, by express contract. The cases cited in support of the plaintiff's position, were, Burge v. Francis, 1 Equity Cases Abridged, 320; Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. W. 277; Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Vernon, 564; Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W., 490; Lodge v. Lyseley, 4, Sim., 70; Newlands v. Paynter, 4 M. & C., 408; Doe dem. Wigan v. Jones, 10 B. & C., 459; Skeeles v. Shearly, 3 M. & C., 112; Shannon v. Bradstreet, 1 S. & L., 52; and Forth v. Duke of Norfolk, 4 Mad. 503;

Anderdon, Q.C. appeared for the assignee of the bankrupt.

Walker, Q.C. contrà.—The cases cited have no application to the case where an elegit has been issued; the difference between this and the cases cited, is, that here the debtor retained possession of the lands, and the judgment creditor took from him, not only legal, but the actual possession, and the tenants attorned. (See 22 vol. of Viner, p. 22; and Metcalfe v. The Archbishop of York, 1 M. & C., 54.)

Russell, Q.C. for other parties, defendants.—The interest of the judgment creditors is a vested legal estate capable of passing by a conveyance, and not depending on the judgment, but by the suing out the elegit, which makes the interest vested as a tenancy by elegit. (Bacon's Abrid. vol. 3, p. 402.) So long as the creditor has only a judgment, he has [illegible] right, but the moment he sues out an elegit, he has a vested estate, giving a right to distrain, to maintain an ejectment, and to take the rents and profits. That he has it not by a conveyance does not matter, he has it by the best of titles, a parliamentary one. That which the law acknowledges as my debtor's property, that the law gives me, and the party that comes to displace me, must shew a stronger title, an equity that touches me.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Every word of the argument applies to a trust as well as this.

Russell, in continuation.—No, it does not, for a trustee has always been treated as a bare trustee, and prevented by the Court from affecting the land of the cestui que trust, by charging or encumbering it. But how does this case stand? Money is advanced, from time to time, by the plaintiff to the debtor, who agrees to execute a mortgage when called upon to do so. An arrangement binding upon the conscience of the debtor, but in nowise affecting his land; as in cases of equitable mortgage in Scotland, ex parte Alexander, before the House of Lords, as a Scotch appeal case.

Hall, on the same side, referred to and commented upon, the case of Carbend v. The Attorney-General, as treated in the 5th vol. of Bythewood, p. 72 and 451, and 483.

Tyrrell, who was with Russell, mentioned the case of Henry v. Smith (2 Drury and Warren 381) as shewing the judgment creditor's right over the land of his debtor. A judgment, when no elegit has been issued, has, as it were, a potential claim upon the land, in the way of a charge. This claim the elegit perfects, and makes that, which was only potential before, now vested and indefeasible. The Court has intimated that it does not know how it can give a greater right than the debtor himself has. Now we do not say it can, but we argue on the principle, that the party having the legal right, shall oust a person having an equitable right without notice prior to entering the judgment, or prior to suing out the elegit. The creditor's claim too, like the plaintiff's, is founded upon contract, and, as such, in equity, the claims and rights are equal.

Romilly, Q.C. in reply.—The fallacy of the argument on the other side is this: they want to establish the position, that a judgment is in the nature of a contract with the debtor. Now, it is no contract at all with the debtor, but it is rather the placing the creditor in the place of the debtor, by assignment, or operation of law. What the one could do, the other could do; of what the one had notice, the other had notice: this distinction is taken at law, and supported by cases in B. & C. Reports. Another fallacy is, that an elegit is an estate at law different from a judgment; but elegit is this, it is the perfecting of the judgment. They say a judgment gets something, and an elegit something else, which ousts an incumbrancer. An elegit only gives you that which is affected by the judgment; it is admitted that a judgment will not prevail against a mortgagee, and therefore an elegit cannot, having reference back only to the judgment. There is nothing in the fact of their having actual possession of the land; the question must resolve itself back as to whether that, of which possession was given, belonged, in fact, to the debtor or not. Should the claims of a judgment creditor be allowed to prevail against those of a prior equitable incumbrancer, fraud would be considerably opened and facilitated, especially in cases where money is borrowed from bankers upon a mere deposit of title-deeds; which security might be then defeated by the party entering up a subsequent judgment.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—On the authority of Newlands v. Paynter, before Lord Cottenham, the Court will protect an equitable interest; were it otherwise, there would be an end of all trusts, as the creditor of the trustee might take the estate of his cestui qui trust. And if an equitable mortgagee is a purchaser, for a valuable consideration, of an interest in land, by express contract, I cannot comprehend how any distinction can be made between this case and an equitable interest in land. In Robertson v. Morton, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland said—"If a man has power to charge certain lands, and agrees to charge them, and in equity he has actually charged them, a court of equity will execute the charge." This will explain the nature of an equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds, accompanied with an agreement to execute a mortgage conveyance. In the argument of the case, both parties referred to, and drew conclusions from, the proposition that, in a court of equity, a purchaser for value, who obtained a conveyance of the legal interest without notice of an equity affecting the specific subject of his purchase, would, as at law, have a better title to that subject than a mere equitable claimant—a proposition which was true against the cestui qui trust, in the case of a purchase from a trustee, as in the case of an equitable mortgagee, or of any other equitable claimant. The proposition thus necessarily admitted by both parties, was pregnant with consequences, which went a great way towards deciding the present question. If the tenant by elegit was to be considered as a purchaser for value under a conveyance, all trusts, and all equitable interests of every description, must be subject to the trustee's judgments. It would be difficult to draw a distinction between cases of a pure trust from the present, unless it could be shewn that the interest of the equitable mortgagee was, for the present purpose, distinguishable from that of the mere cestui que trust. Again, it followed conversely, that if the equitable interests of an ordinary cestui que trust were not subject to the trustee's judgments, though executed, the judgments, though executed, were not analogous to purchases for value. Or, in other words, the judgment creditor of a trustee was not a purchaser for value in the contemplation of a court of equity. It is admitted that the interest of a cestui que trust would be protected in this court against the judgment creditor of the trustee, and that the equitable interest of a purchaser would also be protected against the vendor's judgments obtained after the purchase. But it was said that the interest of an equitable mortgagee was distinguishable from that of an ordinary cestui que trust, and other equitable interests, which, it was admitted, would be preferred in equity—that the interest of the equitable mortgagee was imperfect, while that of the cestui que trust was perfect. In what respect was the interest of the equitable mortgagee imperfect? As between the mortgagor and mortgagee, it was complete. In what respect, then, was it imperfect as between the mortgagee and those who claimed through the mortgagor? It was liable to be defeated by a fraudulent dealing with the legal estate, and in that respect, no doubt, it was imperfect. But that was an infirmity, to which all equitable interests were subject; and if other equitable interests were to be protected against judgments obtained against the trustee or other party in whom the legal estate was, why should the interest of the equitable mortgagee be unprotected? As to the argument, that the right of the judgment creditor was founded in contract, how did it alter the case? The question remained, what was the contract? It was a contract for a judgment, and the fruits of a judgment, and the original question, therefore, what right did a judgment confer? remained wholly untouched. If a party contracted specifically for a given property, and obtained the legal title, and paid the money, without notice, up to the time of obtaining the conveyance, as well as paying his money, that might give him a right to be preferred to an equitable claim which was prior in point of time. But there was no principle upon which a court of justice could be required to imply that a contract to give a judgment was a contract to give that which did not belong to the debtor. The late statutes, giving other rights to judgment creditors, makes no difference. It was said that the judgment creditor's equity was equal to that of the equitable mortgagee, and that he had, by force of the elegit, an estate at law, in addition to his equitable interest, and therefore was to be preferred. This took for granted the whole question in dispute. That the tenant by elegit had an estate in that which he might lawfully take (the debtor's property), he did not deny; but to say, that, by force of the elegit, he acquired a rightful interest in land, which in equity did not belong to his debtor, was taking the whole matter in dispute for granted. The judgment of the Court must be in favour of the equitable mortgagee, and the property must be held subject to satisfy his claim, in preference to that of the judgment creditors.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, April 15.

(Before Lord DENMAN, C.J., PATTESON, J., and WIGHTMAN, J.)

Re UDELL.

Municipal Corporations—Practice.

Kelly, Q.C., moved for a rule, calling upon Mr. Udell to shew cause why an information in the nature of a quo warranto should not issue, calling upon him to shew cause by what right he claims to be a capital burgess of the borough of Ilchester. The borough of Ilchester not being within schedule A or schedule B of 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 76, is regulated by the ancient charter, which limits the franchise to the inhabitants; and the question was, whether Mr. Udell was an inhabitant.

DENMAN, C.J.—There is a rule already pending on this matter, which was enlarged last Term.

Kelly, Q.C.—I was not engaged in it, and I am anxious not to be prejudiced by lapse of time.

By the COURT.—We are not clear that you will not be precluded by the former rule, but we need not determine that now. There must not, however, be two rules pending at the same time; but we will make a note of this application, and if it becomes necessary, it can be renewed hereafter.

REG. v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

In this case, the Great Western Railway Company had removed by certiorari certain orders of sessions, made on appeal against poor-rates, to which the Company were not parties. The grounds and notices of appeal had been brought up into this Court, together with the orders.

Archbold moved for a rule to quash the certiorari, on the grounds that an order of sessions could not be brought up into this Court by a person who was no party to the appeal, and that the return could not be supported, as it included documents not of record.

Rule nisi on first point.

HASLAND v. YOUNG and OTHERS.

An attorney has no implied authority to bind his firm, by giving a guarantee to pay the debt of a client, on consideration of his being discharged from custody.

Pearson shewed cause against a rule to enter a nonsuit.

Petersdorff, contrà.

The action was against a firm of solicitors for a guarantee given to secure a debt due from a client, the consideration for which was his discharge from imprisonment.

The guarantee had in fact been given by one of the defendants, unknown to the others, in the name of the firm; and the question was, whether a solicitor has an authority under such circumstances to bind the firm of which he is a partner.

Cases cited: Hedley v. Davison (2 G. & D.); Lee v. Price (1 C. &. M. 453); Marsh v. Saundiland (2 B. & A. 678); Duncan v. Lowndes (1 Camp. 497.)

By the COURT.—This case is quite clear. The principle applies, that this is not in the usual course of business. This could not be such an undertaking in the way of business as would bind the firm.

Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

LAMB v. NEWBIGGIN.—Robinson and Udall shewed cause against a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence.—Temple, contrà. Rule absolute.

REG. v. SCOTT and OTHERS.—Erle, Q.C., moved to make a rule absolute to remit a fine which had been imposed on the defendants on a conviction for a nuisance, the nuisance having been abated.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. TALMASH, STEWARD OF THE MANOR OF STAINES.—Cleasby moved for a mandamus to the steward of the manor of Staines, to enter on the rolls of the manor a certificate in pursuance of 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vic. c. 50, for the enfranchisement of copyhold land, the property of Poor Law guardians.

Rule nisi.

BEADON v. BAKER.—Plaintiff, in person, moved for a new t ial. Rule refused.

Tuesday, April 16.

REG. v. SMITH, Clerk.

In this case a mandamus had gone to the defendant to restore the prosecutor to his office of parish clerk. The return set out several acts of misconduct on the part of the prosecutor, to which he pleaded de injuria. The jury found for the Crown as to one of the alleged acts of misconduct, and for the defendant as to the rest; upon which the learned judge who tried the cause (Coleridge, J.) directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant.

Talfourd, Serj., now moved to enter the verdict for the Crown, or to enter it in part for the Crown on the ground that it was devisable, or for a new trial. Case cited: R. v. Archbishop of York (6 T. R. 490).

Rule nisi.

HOPKINSON v. LEE.

This was an action of covenant tried at the last assizes for Surrey, before Denman, C. J., verdict for the plaintiff.

Thesiger, S. G., moved to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, upon the ground of variance, and the non-joinder of a co-covenantee. Cases cited: Anderson v. Martindale (1 East, 447); Eccleston v. Clepsham (1 Sand. 150, and note); Snellcote v. Hoare (8 Taunt. 37). Rule nisi.

BROWN v. FREEMAN.

Construction of contract—Sufficiency of pleading after verdict.

Cleasby moved to arrest the judgment. The declaration was in assumpsit for neglecting to supply the plaintiff with sufficient steam-power to work four spinning-frames. The declaration alleged that the defendant had agreed to demise to the plaintiff a room, to which a steam-engine was annexed, with power to work four spinning-frames, except in the case of a break-down of the engine, under circumstances not within the Factory Act. It then charged the defendant with omitting to supply sufficient power to work four spinning-frames. He submitted first, that the declaration did not shew any promise to supply the power in question; secondly, that it was bad for not negativing the exception, and alleging that there had not been any such break-down of the engine as would dispense with the necessity of supplying the power; and thirdly, that the declaration was bad for not alleging a notice by the defendant that he was in want of power, or a request that it should be supplied.

By the COURT.—The clear meaning of the agreement is, that the defendant should supply sufficient power for working four spinning frames; but even if it were not, it would naturally bear this construction, and the objection cannot therefore be taken after verdict. Nor can the second objection be sustained after verdict. It is like the case where the declaration charged a covenant to repair except on the west end, with a general breach, that the defendant did not repair, which was held good after verdict. There is nothing in the third objection, for the contract is to supply the power at all events, and not merely after notice. Rule refused.

BUSH v. BRETTELL.

Effect of credit given in particulars.

The plaintiff sued the defendant as the representative of a certain company, which had been incorporated by Act of Parliament. The particulars embraced work done both before and after the incorporation of the company, and contained the following statement in general terms: "By cash 320*l.*" The plaintiff was obliged to forego his claim in respect of the work done before the incorporation of the company, as the defendant was not liable for such work; and the value of the work and labour since the incorporation was less than the sum for which credit had been given.

The plaintiff had a verdict, and this was a rule to enter a nonsuit or a verdict for plaintiff, on the ground that the plaintiff had given credit in his particulars for a greater amount than was due from the defendant, and therefore was not entitled to a verdict.

He was not aware that it had ever been decided that an agreement, partly for the sale of goods, and partly for something else, which is not within the exception, does not require a stamp, because, excluding the goods, the subject-matter of the agreement does not amount to the value of 20*l.*

It was an action of trespass for breaking a house, and for assaulting the plaintiff, and was tried before Rolfe, B., at the last assizes at York. The plaintiff's father was put, more than thirty years ago, into a parish-house by the parish officers. He occupied it without interruption till his death, and often received parish relief. The parish repaired the house, and have done so within the last twenty years. After the death of the pauper, two years ago, his wife continued to occupy, and on her death her son, the present plaintiff, took possession, and was soon after turned out by the defendants, who were parish officers. The learned judge was of opinion that the parish was barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff.

LUNN v. THORNTON.

Trover—Bill of sale—Maxim "Nemo dat quod non habet."

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause, which was tried before Patteson, J. at the last assizes at Buckingham, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiff, pursuant to leave at the trial, for the sum of 5*l.* upon the second issue. The action was in trover for household furniture, &c. The pleas were (except as to some articles) not guilty (except as aforesaid), not possessed, leave and license, and payment into court of 5s. as to accepted articles. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on the first and third issues, and for the defendant on the second and fourth. The question turned upon the second issue of not possessed. It appeared the plaintiff was a baker, living in the town of Stony Stratford. The defendant was a mealman. In October last, the defendant seized all the goods on the defendant's premises, stating he had a bill of sale. Application had been made to the defendant to see the bill of sale, but he declined, not being aware what sort of instrument would be exhibited. The document exhibited by the plaintiff was a deed poll, the operative words of which were, that the said Richard Lunn had bargained, sold, and delivered, and by these presents do bargain, sell, and deliver unto the said John Thornton, all and singular the goods, stock, implements in trade, &c. then and now being, &c. to have and to hold, &c. It appeared at the trial that goods of the value of 5*l.* were on the premises, which were not there when the deed was made. The objection was, these were things the plaintiff was not possessed of at the time. They were not the subject of grant at all. Nemo dat quod non habet applies. On that point Patteson, J. had at the trial allowed the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for the amount of these things. A man cannot grant things he is not possessed of at the time. (Viner's Abridg.; tit. Grant; Shep. Touchstone; Perkin's Profitable Book, secs. 65, 90; Grantham v. Hawley, Hobart, 132.) Supposing the goods sold again, who has the property in them, the grantor or the grantee? There is no estoppel in this case, because there is no indenture, but a mere deed-poll executed by the grantor. With reference to some of the articles, the grant is inoperative, as it would seem they were not in existence at the time of the grant. Rule nisi.

LONGFORD v. WOODS.

Injury to reversion—Amending declaration—New counts.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why certain amendments should not be struck out of the declaration in the cause, with costs. The action had been brought against the defendant by the plaintiff, being the owner of the reversion in certain houses in Chelsea, for pulling down a chimney belonging to the plaintiff. The defence was, the chimney was a very dangerous one, and that it was requisite for the public safety to have a portion removed. On the 29th June appearance was entered to an action on the case for an injury to the reversion. On Nov. 3, the declaration was delivered, and at that time had only one count, charging defendant with direct injury to the tenement, in pulling down the chimney. On the 20th of November, the plea was delivered. On the 24th, a summons was then taken out to amend the plea, and order made to amend. Something was said about that time with respect to amending the declaration; but the affidavit states, the learned judge expressed considerable difficulty in allowing declaration to be amended. The question arose further on. On the 22nd of January, 1844, a summons was taken out and attended before Coltman, J. and on the 24th an order was made to amend. At that time, the party applying for the amendment did not distinctly state what sort of amendment it was he wished to make. The defendant objected it was a violation of a rule of court to put in other counts which would be different causes of action, and which would be also a violation of the new rules. On the 7th of March, the plaintiff delivered his amended declaration; and he then inserted two additional counts, the second charging the defendant, not merely with pulling down the chimney, but pulling down walls; stating also the right to support, and that the defendant removed the support, per quod, the chimney fell down. The third count stated that the defendant negligently pulled down an adjoining messuage, whereby, &c. Their lordships would see from both these counts, that if the tenant had brought the action it must have been in another form. There being no direct injury, raised a very different and totally novel question. The parties went eventually before Erskine, J. who made no order, but suggested that the parties must apply to this court, reserving the costs of the application. He submitted, the plaintiff had no right to add these two counts, being in violation of the stat. Car. 2; and in the latter case, a violation of the new rules. It is a rule of this court, that after the expiration of two terms, though a plaintiff may amend his declaration, he shall not be allowed to insert a count or counts introducing a new cause of action. By the 2 Car. he would be out of court. The 13 Car. 2, stat. 2, c. 2, enacts, among other things, that the plaintiff shall put into court his bill or declaration against the person so arrested, alluding to the old form of capias, before the end of the term next after appearance. The effect of that was, a person could not declare unless the defendant in the meantime had omitted to sign judgment of non pros. (Brown v. Crump, 6 Taunt. 300.) Where Court on demurrer gave leave to amend by adding new counts, though more than two terms had elapsed, if the proposed counts contained no new causes of action, in the Common Pleas, the course formerly was, the plaintiff at any time might have leave to amend his declaration by adding new counts, but not afterwards. (1 Tidd, i. 698.) Supposing that this does not fall within the old rule, and that it is the same cause of action stated in a different manner, then the plaintiff will be met by the new rules, Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, which declare, 'several counts shall not be allowed unless a distinct subject-matter of complaint is intended to be established in respect of each." The first count stands as it did originally, but the added counts give in reality a different subject of complaint. Rule nisi.

BATE v. LAWRENCE.

Warrant of attorney—Signing judgment irregularly.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a judgment signed upon a warrant of attorney, not properly signed in reference to the terms, should not be set aside. The warrant was dated the 14th of July, 1838. Defeasance to secure 800*l.* and interest. Judgment was signed on the 30th of November, 1843, and a fieri facias issued. On the 18th of December, the defendant became a bankrupt, and on the 3rd of February the bankrupt came up to pass his last examination. The objection made to the signing judgment on this warrant of attorney was, that the defendant authorized the plaintiff to enter up judgment, as of Trinity, Michaelmas next, or any other subsequent Term. This judgment was signed on the 30th of November, which is not in any Term, and contrary to Reg. Gen. Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, s. 3. In Cobbold v. Chilver (1 Dowl. N. S. 726) the warrant of attorney authorized the plaintiff to sign judgment "as of last Hilary Term next, Easter Term, or any subsequent Term." Held, that if the plaintiff had signed judgment, "as of" the previous Hilary Term, it would have been a good judgment within the contract, although in itself by the Reg. Gen. Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, s. 3, irregular; but it was held also, in the same case, that judgment, signed under such an authority in vacation, was irregular, and must be set aside. Coulson v. Clutterbuck (2 Dowl. N. S. 381) and Raymond v. Smith (12 L. J. N. S. 279) support this view. The judgment is a nullity, in not following the terms of the warrant of attorney. Rule nisi.

BELCHER and ANOTHER v. LAMBERT.

Money had and received—Verdict against evidence—Fraudulent preference.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff in this cause, tried before Denman, C. J. at the last assizes, should not be set aside, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

The action was for money had and received. The particulars of demand stated that the action was brought to recover 600*l.* received in 1843, a which the plaintiff contended had been paid by way of fraudulent preference.

The COURT took time to consider, but on a subsequent day granted a Rule nisi.

HUXLEY v. BOLD.

Goods sold and delivered—Verdict against evidence—Bill of exchange in blank.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury, and that the verdict was against evidence. The action was for goods sold and delivered. The plea was in substance that an agent of the plaintiff, after the cause of action arose, took and received a bill of exchange for the amount of the debt, and that the said bill was not due at the time of action brought. The replication stated that one Hibbert took the bill of exchange without the authority of the plaintiff, notice of which was given. The plaintiff was a wholesale tobacconist, and the defendant a retail dealer in the same trade in Birmingham. The plaintiff had applied for the settlement of his account, and the defendant had made various excuses for not paying. The plaintiff's traveller had taken a bill accepted by the defendant, but which bill had no drawer's name upon it at the time of acceptance. The traveller had no authority to take the bill. A letter was subsequently sent by the plaintiff to the defendant, stating that it was not his practice to take bills, to which letter the defendant had replied. There being no drawer's name to the bill, it was not perfect, and a bill drawn in blank is a promise to pay nobody. The bill was produced at the trial without the name of the drawer. There was no evidence to support the plea constituting the issue between the parties. The shape of the paper manifested that the plaintiff had never accepted it, but that he had in fact repudiated it. There was no evidence to go to a jury, and the verdict was against evidence. (Crisp v. Griffith, 2 C. M. & R. 159; Simon v. Lloyd, 2 C. M. & R. 187; Mercer v. Cheese and Others, 5 Scott, N. R. 664.)

PETERS and ANOTHER v. CLASSON and ANOTHER.

Trespass—General Highway Act—Tender and amends.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause found for the defendant should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiffs for 40s. according to leave reserved by Tindal, C. J. at the trial. The declaration was in the ordinary form of trespass, charging the defendants with breaking and entering the plaintiffs' close. The plea of not guilty was pleaded by stat. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50. A special plea stated that there was a common and public highway in Tamworth adjoining the plaintiffs' land, and that there was a certain water-course traversing the close of the plaintiffs, and the plea then went on to state that the watercourse on the plaintiffs' land was filled and choked up, and prevented the water running from the highway, therefore, the defendants entered, &c. A great body of evidence was called to disprove the defence set up by the special plea. The defendants admitted the plaintiffs had disproved certain allegations, and therefore the issue on that plea should be found for the plaintiffs. But the plea of not guilty the defendants contended must be for them. The defendants, as surveyors, had made a new ditch across plaintiffs' land to connect a drain with a public navigable river. Defendants contended that having the power under the General Highway Act to enter plaintiffs' land for such purposes, the plaintiffs could not proceed for damages at Nisi Prius, but before another tribunal. The sections of the Highway Act which related to the present case were the 54th, 67th, and 68th. The 67th sec. gives power to the surveyors to make, scour, cleanse, and keep open all ditches, water-courses, &c. and for that purpose to enter any lands or grounds upon paying the owners and occupiers the damage occasioned by such entry. Taking the three sections together, it was contended the defendants were entitled to enter for the purpose of making a new drain, and any damage the plaintiffs might seek to recover must be ascertained through justices at petty sessions, and could not be the subject of trespass. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contended that, supposing the defendants at liberty to enter for the purpose of making a new drain, the right was given upon the terms of making compensation, to be ascertained in a particular way. In this case, there having been no compensation of any kind tendered or ascertained, the plaintiffs had a right to treat the defendants as trespassers. (Poyfield v. Porter, 13 East, 200.) The point will be whether, looking to the whole Act of Parliament, the omission to make amends would not make the defendants trespassers ab initio. (Paddock v. Forrester, 3 Scott, N. R. 715.) The scope of the old statute is, you shall have the right to enter, and you shall be protected if you tender sufficient amends, but you are not to have protection where no tender of amends has been made at all. There is only a licence by law, and not by contract of the parties.

Rule nisi.

DOE dem. COLDECUTT v. JOHNSON.

Will—Power of appointment—Inadmissibility of secondary evidence.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this action should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the lessor of the plaintiff, or why a new trial should not be had. The cause was tried at Chester, before Williams, J. and a verdict found for the defendant. The ground for a new trial was, that evidence was improperly admitted; that the verdict was against evidence, and against the opinion of the learned judge. Ejectment had been brought on the demise of one John Coldecutt to recover possession of a house and premises in the town of Nantwich. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed title to the premises as tenant in tail, under the will of his great-grandfather, one Michael Mason, who made his will in 1782, and died in 1788. The plaintiff claims upon the death of one Thos. Mason, who died in March 1842, and the defendant claims as being the devisee of Thos. Mason, who, it is alleged, was the tenant in tail. The testator left four children, three sons and a daughter. The estate for life was given with power of appointment. The three sons died without issue; and supposing that Michael, the second son, did not exercise the power of appointment under the will of his father, who had three sons, the last, Thomas Mason, dying in 1842, the consequence would be, the lessor of the plaintiff would take as tenant in tail upon the death of Thomas Mason. The youngest of the four children of the testator was a daughter, who had sons, one of whom married the defendant; the other children died unmarried. The first question arises on the subject of the admissibility of evidence of a secondary character as to the will of the second Michael. It is alleged that he had made a will, which was a good execution of this power, under which his eldest son, Thomas Mason, had become entitled to the estate in fee. The original will was not produced, but the defendant offered secondary evidence, namely, a copy of a will of the second Michael, which had come from the lessor of the plaintiff. It was proved some search had been made in the diocesan court at Chester, but no original will was found. Evidence was given of an admission by the lessor of the plaintiff that he had furnished to the defendant a copy of the will made from a book in his father's handwriting, which being a copy of the original will, it was proposed to read as the copy, as a will properly executed, without shewing any search. When the book was produced, it appeared to be an old book, containing entries concerning the sale of cheese, going back to 1793. The learned judge received the copy in evidence; and the question arose, whether that copy was received in evidence as being a copy of a will duly executed and attested. Had sufficient search been made? And the second question was, whether the book from which the copy had been made was sufficiently authenticated as a copy? With respect to the first question, no search had been made by the executors and other members of the family for the original will; and in the second instance, it could not be taken to be a copy, for it did not at all follow it might have been made in the life-time of the testator, there being nothing to shew it was not. Michael Mason did not die until 1796, and there being entries in the book produced concerning the sale of cheese as early as 1793, it was quite consistent that the father of the plaintiff might have made that copy, but it was not a necessary inference that such was the ultimate intention of the testator. The next question which would arise would be, supposing that copy to be properly received in evidence, whether that was a good execution of the power. There was nothing in the language of the supposed will, shewing any intention on the part of the testator to execute this power. It could not be conceived that a party devising his property to trustees in the mode, and for the purposes of this will, was exercising a power of appointment. Supposing this was not a good execution of the power, then it stands upon the original devise, and the lessor of the plaintiff is clearly entitled.

The learned judge, on summing up, told the jury that it appeared in evidence, that the party making the will had been incapable of doing anything of the kind from his birth, being an idiot.

Rule nisi, to ascertain the latter fact from the judge's notes at the trial, before granting the rule generally.

Agreement for a lease—Operative words—Possession.

Wilde, Serjt.—This was an action tried at the last Glamorganshire Assizes before Maule, J. in which the plaintiff was nonsuited, with leave to apply to the Court to enter a verdict. The only question in the case is, whether a certain agreement is a mere agreement for a contract of a lease, or operates as a present demise, or whether a yearly tenancy arose under that agreement with respect to the operation of the words of the agreement. It was considered better to turn the facts into a case. The agreement relates to a contract between the parties for the working of certain coal-mines in Glamorganshire. The agreement is dated Feb. 2, 1838, and states that Thomas David agrees to let and grant a lease to George Morgan and others of coal, iron, stone, and fine clay under the land, together with all the mines in a certain parish in Glamorgan, at ninepence per ton for every ton of coal, &c.; six months' notice on the part of the grantees to determine the lease at any time. The agreement to contain the usual covenants; the grantees entered into possession, and the works continued until the water became excessive. Ultimately disputes arose about the terms of the lease, and the grantor died. The question was, whether the grantees could claim possession by virtue of this agreement or tenant-right which might have arisen. The general intention of the parties in giving construction to the instrument is among the tests usually adopted. This instrument transferred the possession as a lease rather than a contract. (Bacon's Abridg. Title Lease: "Any thing which transfers the possession to the parties is a lease.") Possession was intended to be given to the parties under this agreement. The party engaged to sink a pit before the 24th June. Possession, by this agreement, intended to pass under the agreement, and before any lease should be granted, the time being uncertain; whereas the time for beginning the works was certain, it being a toll-rent in the nature of a royalty, it was necessary the pit should be opened. He had to pray their lordships' permission to turn the facts into a case.

Attachment—Order of Court.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for an attachment against defendant for disobedience to an order of the Court to produce certain documents. Rule nisi.

GORDON and OTHERS v. ELLIS and ANOTHER.

Partnership—Immaterial Allegation—Set off.

Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment in this cause should not be arrested, or why a new trial should not be had. The action was tried before Coltman, J. at the last sittings—verdict for the plaintiff, 835*l*. damages. The action was for money had and received. Plea, non-assumpsit, with several other pleas; but the only pleas necessary to be noticed were the 5th and 6th. The defendant had been employed, as an auctioneer, by Thomas Gordon, a partner of the plaintiffs, to sell certain fixtures, utensils, and stock, and the action was brought for the proceeds; and the contest in the case was, whether advances made by the defendant to Gordon were advances in anticipation of the proceeds of the sale. The two last plaintiffs insisted that the advances were made on the separate account of Gordon, their partner, and were not matter of set-off out of the proceeds of the sale. The ground upon which the present application rests is, the replication puts in issue an immaterial allegation, leaving a good bar to the action. The 5th and 6th pleas were alike, the only difference being, they applied to different sums. The substance of the 5th plea was, that before the money mentioned in the declaration had been received, the defendants, with the privity of the plaintiffs, by order of Gordon, their partner, put up for sale certain property belonging to the firm; and, at the time, the plaintiffs agreed that the defendants should retain and reimburse themselves out of the said property their advances upon the faith and confidence of the last-mentioned agreement. The defendants did afterwards sell and dispose of the property, the other plaintiffs allowing the said Gordon to deal with the property as his own; the money in the declaration said to be due from them being the identical money claimed, from which money the defendants retained the sum in the plea mentioned, for the purpose of reimbursing themselves; and that, &c. The replication stated that the plaintiffs did not suffer and permit Gordon to deal with the property as his own sole property, in manner and form, &c.; and upon this traverse issue was joined, and found for the plaintiff. This allegation is immaterial. The action is brought by three partners. An answer to one is an answer to all; because an action of assumpsit for money had and received is an action which will survive. Thomas Gordon might be the only person to bring an action; and whatever would be a defence to Gordon would be an answer to an action brought jointly with him. (Wallace v. Kelsall, 7 M. & W. 241; Jones v. Yates, 9 B. & C. 532; Sparrow v. Chapman, 9 B. & C. 241; Jacaud v. French, 12 East, 317.) The principle of the decisions is, that an agreement by one of several partners with a partnership debtor, which would operate in bar of an action by the party making that agreement, may be made a bar to an action by all the partners. Here there was no suspicion of fraud; it did not follow that the money advanced by the defendants to Gordon was not for partnership purposes. The replication does not answer all that is averred. One partner borrows money on an agreement that it shall be deducted out of the proceeds of the sale of partnership property. He may be the only partner entitled. The agreement set out states that the defendants were employed, with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs, to sell the property. The replication simply traverses that the other plaintiffs did suffer Gordon to deal with the property as his own sole property. The plea would have been good without the allegation, and would not have been answered by evidence of the fact introduced by the allegation.

DARBY v. EVANS.

Husband and wife—Liability of husband—Restraint. When a verdict is sought to be disturbed, on the ground of there being no evidence to go to the jury, the Court will hold the party applying for a new trial strictly to the terms, and will not grant a rule, if any evidence, however slight, was offered at the trial.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict, which was for the plaintiff, should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, pursuant to leave. The action, which was for debt, was tried before the under-sheriff of Middlesex, and was brought to recover compensation for work done for the wife of the defendant, while living apart from her husband. The question was, whether there was any evidence to go to the jury of such ill treatment on the part of the husband as would justify the wife leaving his house. Evidence had been given at the trial, that the defendant's wife had communicated with her brother by notes thrown from a window of the house.

TINDAL, C. J.—If the wife leaves the house in consequence of ill treatment on the part of the husband, he is bound for necessaries. The question here is, whether there is not some evidence. To grant the rule there must have been no evidence of ill treatment, and although in this case it is very slight, we cannot say there is none.

Rule refused.

FEARN v. FILICA.

Authority—Bill of Exchange—Procuration.

Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict, which passed for the plaintiff for 302*l*. 5*s*., should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and misdirection. The action, which was tried before Coltman, J. at the last sittings, was brought on a bill of exchange, Indorsee v. Acceptor, and issue was joined, on the question whether certain persons using the name of Howard and Co. endorsed the bill, and how far a person called Lorregan was authorized by a certain letter. The plaintiff replied he was a bonâ fide holder for value, having discounted the bill. It appeared that one Grant had taken a counting-house in the city, and had used the name of the firm Howard, Grant, and Co.; their principal business appearing to be accepting bills in the name of the firm. Large books were kept, in which no entries whatever had been made. The present action was brought on a bill remitted from Paulby and Co., Milan, and endorsed to Gaudolfi and Co., who are, in reality, the present defendants, the defendant carrying on the business of that firm. A short time before the letter arrived, which was on the Monday, containing the bill, on the Friday previous, Grant, who was the only person ever seen carrying on the business of Howard, Grant, and Co., disappeared. An advertisement of 50*l*. was offered for his apprehension. The letter from Milan, containing the bill, was handed to Lorregan by the clerk of Grant, and Lorregan having, at the request of Lopez, procured the acceptance of the defendants, endorsed the bill in the name of Howard, Grant, and Co., and also in his own name, to one Daniels. The bill was given to a person called Lopez, who had had transactions with Grant, and by Lopez handed to Daniels, in discharge of a debt due from him to Lopez. It was sworn at the trial, that the plaintiff had discounted the bill and given a cheque for the amount. When Grant absconded, he left a letter directed to Lorregan, containing authority to endorse the bill. The letter was to the effect that Grant, having urgent business on his hands, had left town, and, in his absence, authorized Lorregan to open all letters and endorse, in the name of the firm, all bills of exchange to Mr. Lopez, or negotiate and pay bills against any liability that Lopez might be under on their account. On this authority Lorregan had endorsed the bill to Daniels. In the first place, this bill, by the terms of the letter from Paulby and Co., never was the bill of Grant. Howard, Grant, and Co. were to accept a bill for the same amount drawn by Gaugolfi and Co.; the assignees of Grant could not hold the bill against Paulby and Co. Procurations are strictly construed, and in this case, Grant's authority only applied to bills not endorsed. The authority never had any validity, Grant never taking any property or right to the bill, Lorregan must be taken to have acted throughout with full notice, and there was no authority to endorse the bill to himself. Here there was also an act of bankruptcy. The verdict, as to an act of bankruptcy in this case, was clearly against evidence. Rule nisi on both grounds.

KEALE v. WHEELER.

Bonds—Rate of interest—Memorandum—Indorsement.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause, tried before Wightman, J. at the last assizes at Winchester, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant for 800*l*. pursuant to leave. The declaration was in assumpsit to recover the price and value of eight securities, each worth 100*l*. The defendant pleaded—first, never indebted; second, that he did not buy from the plaintiff, nor did the plaintiff sell, the securities to him. The defendant further pleaded, the plaintiff did not transfer the securities to the defendant; and the fourth plea was one of covin, fraud, and misrepresentation, but no proof whatever was offered at the trial in support of this plea. A verdict was entered for the plaintiff on the first three issues. The securities were bonds given by commissioners of the town of Southampton under two Acts of Parliament for borrowing money, not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum, to improve the town and port of Southampton. The bonds in question had been purchased from one Maddison, who had signed, on a fly-leaf, a memorandum under his hand, but not under seal, by which he undertook to receive 5*l*. per cent. only. A Mr. Clark had been employed by the defendant to inquire about bonds, in order to invest a sum of money the defendant had at his disposal. It appeared that Clark had acted as the agent of both parties. Several letters had passed between the parties, but nothing was said about the rate of interest, and the bonds were ultimately sold at par. After the assignment was prepared, on the defendant's agent going to the plaintiff's banker to pay for the bonds, the latter said, "Are you aware these bonds are bonds securing interest at 4 per cent. only?" It appears the defendant's agent was not aware of it, and the money was not paid. The form of the assignment would not necessarily disclose whether the interest was 4 or 5 per cent. The evidence shewed that Wheeler intended to purchase bonds at 5 per cent., and that Keale intended to sell only the bonds. Plaintiff had undertaken to transfer the bonds in the event of retaining a verdict, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; there had been no fraudulent concealment. The Act of Parliament does not require the interest to be 5 per cent. The contract between the parties did not disclose what the interest was to be. The rule caveat emptor applies. Action against sheriff for not arresting—Special bailiff.

Jervis moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, on the 1st and 3rd pleas.

This was an action against the sheriff of Chester for not arresting a party of the name of Rigby, under a writ directed to the said sheriff; and it appeared that the plaintiff's attorney inclosed the writ in a letter sent by him to the under-sheriff, wherein he requests the under-sheriff to grant the warrant to a person named Mark Topham "whom I have instructed as to the execution thereof." It was submitted that, under these circumstances, the action would not lie; or, at any rate, that it was a question for the jury whether the plaintiff's attorney had appointed Topham as his special bailiff; citing Ford v. Leche (6 A. & E. 699); Doe v. Trye (5 N. Award—Uncertainty.

Kelly and Hayes shewed cause against a rule to set aside the award in this case on the ground of uncertainty. Two actions had been brought, one of trespass for mesne profits, in which the declaration had had been delivered, the other of assumpsit; in the latter of which the writ only had been delivered, both of them being for unliquidated damages. An order of reference of all matters in difference in the two causes had been made by a judge's order, the costs of the said causes and of the reference to abide the event of the award. The arbitrator awarded "of and concerning the premises, and adjudicated and determined that all further proceedings should thenceforth cease, and that the defendant should, on a certain day, pay to the plaintiff the sum of 41*l*. 17*s*. 9*d*. in full of all demands in the said causes." It was submitted that this was a sufficient termination of the causes to shew which way the costs were to be paid, for the arbitrator had no power to enter a verdict or to order judgment to be entered up, and the officer of the Court could award the proper costs; and that it was not necessary for the arbitrator to award what the plaintiff was entitled to receive in each action; citing Eardley v. Steer (5 Tyr. 1071); Day v. Bonnin (3 N.C. 219); Blanchard v. Lilly (9 East); Yates v. Knight (2 N. C. 277); Benwell v. Hinxman (1 C. M. & R. 935); Pearse v. Pearse (9 B. & C. 484).

Cowling, contrà, submitted that the award was indefinite and uncertain in not finding any event so as to shew that the winning party was entitled to costs; and that the proper course would have been to award that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in each case.

The COURT held, that it sufficiently appeared that the arbitrator had awarded in favour of the plaintiff in both actions, and that it was unnecessary for him to award specifically in each case; citing Day v. Bonnin (3 N. C. 219). Rule discharged.

HIGGS v. HARRISON.

Agreement relating to the sale of an interest in land within 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.

Adams, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and to enter a nonsuit.

This was an action of assumpsit, and the declaration stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff would demise and let certain premises to the defendant, from the 25th of March, 1843, for the term of one year, and so on from year to year, at a certain rent, and would relinquish and give up the business and stock in trade, he undertook to pay for the stock in trade, at a certain valuation.

Plea, the general issue.

It was submitted that this was an agreement relating to the sale of an interest in land within 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, and therefore it should have been shewn that the agreement was by a memorandum or note in writing, signed by the defendant; citing Buttemere v. Hayes (5 M. & W. 456); Harvey v. Grabham (5 A. & E. 61); and Mechlin v. Wallace (7 A. & E. 49). Rule granted.

KING v. PHILLIPS.

Pleading—Traverse of accommodation.

M. D. Hill moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and enter judgment for the defendant, non obstante veredicto, or to arrest the judgment, or to award a repleader.

This was an action upon a promissory note and upon an account stated.

Plea, to the first count, that the defendant accepted the said promissory note for the accommodation of the plaintiff without value or consideration.

Replication—That there was a good and sufficient consideration, to wit, the amount of the promissory note in that count mentioned, for the acceptance and payment by the defendant of the said promissory note.

It was submitted that the traverse in the replication amounted to a traverse of a mere inference of law, and was, therefore, immaterial, and the defendant, consequently, entitled to have judgment entered for him.

The COURT held that the replication was an informal way of traversing the accommodation, and was in substance a denial of the plea; and that, at any rate, it was good after verdict. Rule refused.

DOE v. FILLITER.

Action for mesne profits—Extra costs of taxation.

Crowder moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, or why the plaintiff should not recover such amount as the Court should determine.

This was an action for mesne profits after the trial of an action of ejectment, in which the lessor of the plaintiff had recovered certain lands. The costs of that action had been taxed, and the taxed costs paid to the lessor of the plaintiff. In the present action, the lessor of the plaintiff had recovered the extra costs of taxation. It was submitted that he was not entitled to recover such costs in an action for mesne profits. Rule granted.

NICHOLAS v. MORGAN and OTHERS.

Evidence under plea of payment—Guarantee.

E. V. Williams moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant on the third issue, and to enter the same for the plaintiff.

This was an action upon a promissory note, to which the defendant pleaded, thirdly, payment. The making of the note by the defendant was proved by the attesting witness, who stated, on cross-examination, that the plaintiff had given a guarantee to the defendant, and it was then contended, on the part of the defendant, that this proved his plea of payment, and a verdict was entered for him upon that issue, subject to the opinion of the Court. Rule granted.

CHESTON v. GIBBS and ANOTHER.

Evidence—Petitioning creditor's debt.

Costs of affidavit on moving for a new trial.

Kelly moved for a rule nisi to set aside the nonsuit in this case, and for a new trial.

This was an action by the assignees of Sabine and Le Roy to recover the value of certain property of which the defendants had possessed themselves; and notice to dispute the fact having been given, it became necessary to prove the petitioning creditor's debt, which consisted of certain bills drawn by themselves, and passed by them to the bankrupts, and regularly entered in the bankrupts' bill-book. The bill-book had been lost, but it was proved by a clerk that he had some time ago compared the bills in question with the bill-book, and that they were duly entered there. The learned judge rejected the evidence, but told the jury it was no evidence of the petitioning creditor's debt. Two of the petitioning creditor's cheques were also produced, bearing date considerably before the date of the fiat, which, it was submitted, ought to have gone to the jury connected with the fact which was in evidence, that the only transactions of the petitioning creditor with the bankrupts consisted of discounting bills, the proceeds of which were applied to the assistance of the bankrupts.

There were also affidavits in case the Court considered the above grounds insufficient.

The COURT granted the rule, but upon the terms of the plaintiffs paying all expenses occasioned by the affidavits, because, whether they were used or not, the opposite side must still take out copies of them. Rule granted.

SIMPSON v. READY.

Penalties under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 58—Construction of Act—Mode of declaring upon a section in an Act of Parliament containing a proviso.

F. V. Lee, moved for a rule nisi to arrest the judgment.

This was an action brought against the defendant for a penalty of 50*l.* for acting as councillor of the borough of Lichfield, whilst he was disqualified by having an interest in a lease. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. By the 28th section 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, it is provided that no person shall be qualified to be a councillor of a borough during such time as he shall have directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment by or on behalf of such council. The 53rd section enacts, that if any person shall act as councillor, without being duly qualified, &c. he shall forfeit 50*l.* to be recovered by any person who will sue for the same within three calendar months after the commission of the offence: Provided that no such action shall be brought except by a burgess of such borough. It was submitted, 1st, that it ought to have appeared on the face of the declaration that the plaintiff suing was, at the time of the commencement of the action, a burgess of the borough of Lichfield; citing, Thibault q. t. v. Gibson (3 Dowl. N. S. 253, 1 Wms. Saund. 276 a). 2nd, That the offence contemplated by the Act of Parliament was the acting and not the claiming to act, at a time when the party was disqualified. 3rd, That inasmuch as the contract which was alleged to have disqualified the defendant, was a lease between a third party and the corporation, to which the defendant was no party, and in which his name did not at all appear, it must be treated as a disqualification, arising from the defendant's partner being interested in the lease in question, and it was therefore necessary to allege such partnership on the face of the declaration; and, 4thly, That the declaration ought to have alleged that the corporation at the time when the defendant acted as councillor had an interest in the lease.

The COURT held, with respect to the 1st objection, that as the exception came by way of proviso, after the enacting clause, it was matter of defence and need not be alleged in the declaration; 2ndly, That it sufficiently appeared on the declaration that the offence charged was acting, and not claiming to act; and that with respect to the two remaining objections, since the declaration averred, that at the time the defendant acted he was disqualified, the plaintiff would be bound to prove those requisites. Rule refused.

LEWIS v. MUSGROVE and ANOTHER.

New trial—Action against sheriff.

Quære, whether, in an action for a false return, a sheriff can take advantage of rent and taxes being due at the time of levying.

Platt moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit. This was an action against the sheriff of Middlesex for a false return of nulla bona to a writ directed to him to be executed upon the goods of a person of the name of Pyne. To this the defendant pleaded — 1st, not guilty; 2nd, denying that they levied the money indorsed to be levied; and, 3rd, denying that any goods of Pyne were within their bailiwick. It appeared that in 1840 and 1841 Pyne had several executions against him. His goods were sold, and the proceeds of the sale divided rateably amongst his creditors. In January 1842, the present execution was sued out against Pyne and Lero, and was levied upon the goods in Pyne's house, at that time in the possession of the purchaser from the sheriff under a bill of sale, and for which Pyne was to pay rent. There was some wine belonging to Pyne, of the value of 15*l.* for which sum the jury, under the judge's direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff. There were rent and taxes due, either of which exceeded 15*l.*; and notice of the taxes being due was given to the sheriff and the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected that this could not be given in evidence under this state of the pleadings; citing Heenan v. Evans and Another (1 Dowl. N. S. 204, S. C. 4 Scott, N. R. 2). The judge held that the sheriff was not protected by this notice, stating that he was of opinion that the defendants could not take advantage of the rent and taxes being due, and thereupon left two questions to the jury—1st, Were these goods in the defendant's bailiwick? and, 2nd, Was the money paid? It was submitted that this direction was erroneous; citing Andrews v. Dixon (3 B. & A. 645); Foster v. Hilton (1 Dowl. 35); Colliger v. Speer (1 Moore, 73, 2 B. & B. 67); Harrison v. Barry (7 Price, 556); 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 3, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 140. Rule granted.

LEWIS v. MACMURDO.

Platt, Q.C., moved for a new trial. Cases cited: 3 B. & A. 645; Foster v. ——, 1 Dow. 45; Addison v. Barry, 7 Price, 5 & 6 Vic. c. 31, s. 140.

WHITE v. SHAFT.

An award which begins in the names of three referees is nevertheless the award of two only, if signed by two only, and is a good award by the two, when the terms of reference authorize an award by two.

Cowling moved to set aside the verdict herein, and to enter a nonsuit. The action was on a debt on an award. The declaration stated that certain matters in dispute between the plaintiff and the defendant had been referred to the award of three persons—Cook, Singlehurst, and Hazeldon, or any two of them; it then alleged that Cook and Hazeldon had made their award, upon which award this action was brought. The defendant pleaded that Cook and Hazeldon had not made their award. Upon the trial the award was put in. It began in the names of all three of the referees, but was signed by Cook and Hazeldon only. It was proved at the trial that Singlehurst had dissented from the award in question, and refused to sign it. He submitted that this was not in law the award of Cook and Hazeldon only, but an imperfect award of the three referees, as it began in the names of all three, and purported upon the face of it to be the award of all three, although it was signed only by Cook and Hazeldon only. He relied on Thomas v. Harrop (1 Sim. & St. 524), as being an authority exactly in point. He also cited his learned opponent (Watson's) book on Awards, page 107.

By the COURT.—That case appears to have been but loosely reported, and possibly there had been no notice to the third referee. At any rate we do not see any sufficient reason for granting a rule. The award does not purport to be the award of the three. It does indeed purport to have been originally intended to be the award of all three, but it purports to be the award only of those who actually signed it. Rule refused.

LEE v. TRUSTEES of the CALDER and HIBBLE NAVIGATION.—Martin, Q.C., moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant and for a new trial. The point turned upon the construction of some local Acts of Parliament, 9 Geo. 3. c. 71, and 6 Geo. 4. c. 17. He also moved on the ground of surprise. The Court refused the rule on the ground of surprise, as it did not appear that the plaintiff had been prejudiced thereby. On the other points, Rule nisi.

BERRYMAN v. JONES.—M. Smith, moved for a rule, calling on plaintiff's attorney to pay the costs of nonsuit, according to his undertaking. Rule nisi.

STEVENSON v. GRAY.—Grainger moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Rule refused.

EVERARD v. WEBSTER.—Thomas moved for a nonsuit. Rule nisi.

HARVEY v. GRAHAM.—Dasent moved for a distringas. Rule nisi.

PHILLIPS and ANOTHER v. MORRISON and ANOTHER.

Agreement—Ad valorem stamp.

Talfourd, Serjt., moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit. This was an action for the non-payment of instalments of 25*l.* each, under an agreement made between the plaintiffs of the one part and the defendants of the other part, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to sell and the defendants to purchase, at the sum of 77*l.* per acre, certain seams of coal; 100*l.* to be paid at the day of the date of the agreement, and the remainder by equal quarterly instalments of 25*l.* each. The agreement contained covenants by the defendants for the proper working of the mine, and a covenant for quiet enjoyment by the plaintiffs. The agreement, when produced in evidence, was stamped with an agreement stamp, but it was now submitted, that, as it was intended to convey the coals, it operated as a conveyance, and, therefore, required an ad valorem stamp.

The COURT held that to require an ad valorem stamp, it must be a conveyance, whereby the thing sold vested in the purchaser, which was not the case here, and therefore the instrument was properly stamped as an agreement. Rule refused.

PICKETT v. BUTLER.

Evidence in trespass quare clausum fregit, under "Not possessed"—Exclusive right of herbage.

Crowder moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant on the second issue, and to enter the sum for the plaintiff, with 40s. damages. This was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, to which the defendant pleaded, secondly, that the plaintiff was not possessed of the close in question; and in support of that plea, put in evidence the award of the commissioners, under a certain enclosure Act, dated 1796, vesting the exclusive right of herbage in the present plaintiff. At the trial, a verdict was found for the defendant, the learned judge reserving to the plaintiff leave to move to enter a verdict for him, if the Court should think him entitled to it. It was submitted, that an exclusive right to herbage gives the party a sufficient right to maintain an action of trespass: citing Co. Litt. 4 b. Crosby v. Wodsworth.

It was also submitted, that the verdict was against evidence. Rule granted.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

WILLIAMS v. NIBLETT and ANOTHER.—Godson moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence and the damages excessive. Rule refused.

RODGERS and ANOTHER v. MAW.—Knowles moved for a rule nisi to reduce the damages assessed by the jury to such sum as the Court shall think proper. Rule granted.

LANGFORD v. SOLLY.—M. D. Hill moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendants, and for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being perverse. Rule granted.

BONSKELD v. FOSTER and OTHERS.—Watson moved for a rule nisi, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of the damages being excessive. Rule granted.

MORRISH v. MUNDAY.—Crowder moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

DORRELL v. RICHTER.—Knowles moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence. Rule refused.

HARRISON v. FEATHER, P. O.—Watson moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and of the verdict being against evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

KNIGHT v. GIBBS.—Humfrey moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Rule granted.

SHERWIN v. SWINDALLS.

Quære, the effect of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 3, upon 8 & 9 W. 4, c. 11, s. 4, in respect of a judge's power to certify that a trespass was wilful and malicious, in a case where no previous notice not to trespass has been given.

Whateley moved for a rule nisi to rescind the certificate of the judge, under 8 & 9 W. 4, c. 11, s. 4, certifying that the trespass, in respect of which the action was brought, was wilful and malicious, upon the ground that 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 3, has repealed that statute, and therefore in an action of trespass for breaking and entering a dwelling-house, where no notice not to trespass has been previously served, the judge has no power to certify: citing 8 & 9 W. 4, c. 11, s. 3; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 3. (Rudge v. Bond cited, 3 East, 497; Good v. Watkins, ib.; Reynolds v. Edwards, 6 T. R. 11; Summerton v. Jerris, ib.; Davenport v. Merchant, ib. Note a.) Rule granted.

CHARLES v. BRANKER and OTHERS.

Payment of money into court, under the common money counts, is no admission of partnership in the defendants, under a special count in the same declaration.

Chilton moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and to enter the same for the plaintiff.

This was an action of assumpsit, with a count upon a special contract, and the common money counts. The defendants pleaded non-assumpsit to the special count, and payment of money into court under the common counts, with a denial of damages, ultrà. In order to recover under the special count, it became necessary to prove the partnership of the defendants, and there being no other evidence upon the subject than the payment into court under the common money counts, the judge being of opinion that this could not be considered as any admission of partnership, directed the verdict to be entered for the defendants, with leave to move. It was now submitted that the direction was erroneous, citing Stapleton v. Noel (6 M. & W. 16); Raverscroft v. Wise (1 C. M. & R. 203); Kingham v. Robins (5 M. & W.)

The COURT held the direction correct, and that payment of money into court, under the general counts, could not be considered as any admission of partnership under the special count. Rule refused.

REG. v. TOWN COUNCIL OF BIRMINGHAM.

Crompton moved to enlarge this rule. Granted.

O'NIEL v. COGLAN.

J. W. Smith moved to enter up judgment on an old warrant of attorney. The power was to enter up judgment in the Queen's Bench in Ireland, or in any other court of record. The affidavit was dated the 13th of April, and the deponent said that he had seen and conversed with the defendant on 24th March, and he believed him to be still alive. (Watts v. Berry, 4 Dow. 44; Spratts v. Wills, 5 Dow. 221; Doe dem. Clark v. Stillwell, 5 A. & E. 646.) Rule granted.

REG. v. The JUSTICES of LANCASHIRE.

Mandamus to justices to make an apportionment under the Highway Act. Quære, What is a Town Improvement Act?

Cowling moved for a mandamus to be directed to the above justices, commanding them to proceed to the apportionment of a fine under the following circumstances. The inhabitants of a hundred had been indicted at the sessions for the non-repair of a certain portion of a turnpike road leading from Rochdale to Manchester, and they pleaded guilty, whereupon a fine of 800*l.* was imposed. Upon this an application was made to the justices to apportion the fine and costs between the inhabitants and the trustees of the road, pursuant to the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 110. This application was resisted on the part of the trustees, on the ground that they were not liable to contribute, inasmuch as they had no jurisdiction over the road in question, the local Act under which they derived their powers, viz. the 44 Geo. 3, c. 49 (amended and continued by 4 Geo. 4, c. 167, and 6 & 7 Vic. c. 91), taking away their jurisdiction over all roads which are subject to the provisions of any improvement Act, and the 31st section providing that no money should be laid out for the repair of any road comprised within the limits of any town which has an Act for its improvement; and it was further urged by the trustees, that in the present case there was an improvement Act which comprised the road in question, namely, the 6 Geo. 4, c. 128; which, on the part of the inhabitants it was contended, was merely a police Act, and not an improvement Act, the Act being for the lighting, cleansing, watching, and regulating the town of Rochdale, and containing no powers enabling the commissioners under it to repair the roads, or to levy rates for the purpose. At the hearing, the justices declined to make the apportionment. Rule nisi.

DOWLING and WIFE v. ———

Judgment on an old warrant of attorney.

Peacock moved for leave to enter up judgment upon an old warrant of attorney. The defendant had been last seen alive on the 15th of March, but on the 5th of April inst., his brother had admitted that he was alive and well. Rule granted.

Wednesday, April 17.

JONES v. ———

Application to discharge a prisoner out of custody—Service of notice.

Simon moved to discharge the defendant out of custody, under the provisions of the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123. In this case, the notice had not been served on the plaintiff, in consequence of its not being known where he was to be met with. The plaintiff's attorney in the action, also, had ceased to practise, and had given up his business to two gentlemen, Messrs. Kingdon and Sheppard, one of whom, upon being applied to for the place of abode of the plaintiff, and on being informed of the purport of the application, said that he would most certainly oppose the discharge of the defendant. Every exertion had been made to ascertain the place of residence of the plaintiff. Notice had been given to Mr. Kingdon, who, it was contended, must, under the circumstances, be deemed to be the attorney for the plaintiff.

Rule nisi to be served on Messrs. Kingdon and Sheppard.

REG. v. The TOWN COUNCIL of STAMFORD.

Mandamus to town council to restore a sum of money to the borough fund, which has been improperly paid therefrom.

Stephens moved for a mandamus commanding the town council of Stamford to pay, or cause to be paid, 197*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* to the treasurer of the borough, to be carried to the account of the borough fund.

This application arose out of the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, in Reg. v. Thompson (2 L. T. 326), by which it was held, that a payment made of the above sum from the borough fund, on the authority of certain members of the above council, was illegal; and it was by this motion sought to compel the council to restore to the borough the amount so illegally disposed of. After some discussion as to the proper form of the rule, his lordship said he would further consider the subject. Cur. adv. vult.

GEOPEL v. SWINDEN.

Hance moved in this case, which had been tried before the undersheriff of Yorkshire, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, with 11*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* damages, to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial, on the grounds, 1st, of misdirection; 2nd, because the verdict was against evidence. (Davis v. Humphreys, 6 M. & W. 168.) Rule nisi.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. THE HULL AND SELBY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mandamus to a railway company, commanding them to pay over a sum of money, pursuant to the provisions of their Act.

Watson, Q. C. moved, on the part of the company of proprietors of the Selby bridge, for a mandamus against the above railway company, commanding them to pay to the bridge company the sum of 2,500*l.* under the following circumstances:—By the 31 Geo. 3 (local), powers were given to certain parties to build the bridge in question; these parties were incorporated and empowered to take tolls, and were obligated to keep the structure in repair. In 1836 the Hull and Selby Railway Act passed (6 Wm. 4—public, local), which contained clauses referable to this bridge. Powers were given to the company by this Act to build a railway bridge near the former one; but it was provided (page 96) that, inasmuch as such railway bridge might cause a diminution in the receipts of the Selby bridge, that if, after the expiration of three years from the end of one month from the opening of the line, the receipts of the Selby bridge should be less than during the three previous years, that the railway company should pay the bridge company the amount of ten years' purchase of the amount of such deficiency, not exceeding the sum of 2,500*l.* The railway was opened on the 1st of July, and on the completion of the three years, in August, 1843, a calculation of the diminution was made, when it was found that it amounted on the three years to 300*l.* odd, the ten years' purchase of which would have been 3,000*l.* Upon this, the railway company were applied to for the sum of 2,500*l.* (the amount limited by the Act), and no offer of payment having been made, this rule was applied for. Rule nisi.

Ex parte EDWIN COPESTICK and FOUR OTHERS.

Habeas corpus to discharge parties committed under the Masters and Servants' Act.

Bodkin moved for a habeas corpus to bring up these parties from the house of correction at Derby, with the view to their being discharged. The defendants had been committed under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, and it was alleged that the warrants of commitment were bad on many grounds, particularly for not stating the capacity in which the defendants contracted to serve.

Rule granted; the defendants not to be personally brought before the Court.

FLAUTAN v. WHYTE.

Where a judge's order is made, directing a certain thing to be done, and no time is specified, it is to be done forthwith.

When a judge's order is made a rule of Court, the rule itself always contains a clause that the expense of making it a rule is to be paid by the party against whom it is to be enforced.

Chambers moved to set aside a rule of Court in this case.

It appeared that an action had been brought and had been proceeded with up to notice of trial. At this time the defendant took out a summons calling upon the plaintiff's attorney to give a statement in writing of the plaintiff's occupation and place of abode, and that in the meantime all further proceedings should be stayed. On this summons, the plaintiff's attorney indorsed a consent, whereupon, on the 2nd of November last, an order was drawn up and served, and it contained the word "forthwith." The terms of the order not having been complied with, the order was, on the 30th of January, made a rule of Court, and the costs of it were taxed as against the plaintiff's attorney.

It was now contended that these proceedings were irregular, for that, as no time was mentioned in the summons within which the particulars were to be delivered, the order ought not to have contained the word "forthwith."

WIGHTMAN, J.—When no time is mentioned for doing a thing, it is to be done at once; and here was a delay from the 2nd of November until the 30th of January.

Chambers.—The only penalty for not giving the particulars is, that we cannot go on with our action.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The order was in the proper form, and if you thought not, you should have applied to have had it rescinded.

Chambers.—The defendant had no right to make this order a rule of court, since the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 17, points out the penalty for neglect, which is that of a contempt.

WIGHTMAN, J.—They have not applied for an attachment, but merely to make the order a rule of court, which they had a right to do; and by a rule of this court (1840) it is resolved that, where a judge's order is made a rule of court, it shall be a part of the rule that the costs of making it such rule of court shall be paid by the party against whom it is sought to be enforced. Rule refused.

WOODWARD and ANOTHER v. MEREDITH.

Staying proceedings where a party has proved his debt under the defendant's fiat in bankruptcy.

Gray moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why the proceedings on the sci. fa. in this case should not be stayed. In this case an action had been brought against the defendant on two bills of exchange, and the plaintiffs had obtained a verdict. Subsequently the defendant became a bankrupt, and obtained his certificate. The plaintiffs had proved the amount of their judgment under the fiat, by which it was contended they were, under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 59, precluded from further proceeding at law.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Might not this be pleaded?

Gray.—According to the authority of Hurley v. Greenwood (5 B. & Ald. 95), it might not. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HAYWARD v. ROE.

Where there are several tenants who are joint-tenants, it is sufficient that one only be served, if the notice is directed to all.

Henderson applied for leave to sign judgment against the casual ejector. In this case there were three tenants, who, however, were joint-tenants, one only of whom had been served; which, however, on the authority of Doe dem. Williamson v. Roe (10 Moore, 493), was sufficient. The notice was directed to all. Rule granted.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

DOE dem. STOWELL v. ROE.—Wordsworth moved for judgment against the casual ejector. The declaration was headed Easter Term, 8th Victoria, but the notice was dated 1st April, and was to appear in next Easter Term. Rule granted.

GRAVENOR v. HORFORD.—Ball moved to set aside the verdict in this case, which had been tried before the Secondary, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, on two grounds—1st, misdirection; 2nd, the verdict being against evidence.

Rule nisi on the 2nd ground.

LAWTON v. RODGERS.—Henderson moved to set aside the award in this case, on the ground of the arbitrator's having refused to examine the plaintiff's witnesses. Rule nisi.

TWYCROSS v. KING.—Bovill moved to set aside the trial in this case (tried at the last Surrey assizes), on the ground that there was no perfect issue. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. GODSHALL v. LUSTY.—Gray moved for a rule calling upon the lessor of the plaintiff to shew cause why, upon payment of principal, interest, and costs, all further proceedings should not be stayed. Rule nisi.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Tuesday, April 16.

THE ELIZABETH.

A pilot is not bound to take charge of a vessel which requires more than ordinary pilotage; and if he gives other assistance to a vessel in any way distressed, it is salvage, meriting, according to the circumstances, salvage remuneration.

This was a claim for salvage brought by two licensed boatmen, against the owners of the schooner Elizabeth.

The schooner, of 60 tons (new measurement), was on a voyage from the port of London to Canton. She met with a gale of wind near the Isle of Portland, and the master, fearing she had sprung a leak, put back. She was off Dungeness on the evening of the 13th of January, when she hoisted a light (for a pilot, according to the master's statement—for assistance, as alleged by the salvors). The boatmen, now claiming, went on board and assisted in getting the schooner into Dover harbour. The owners have tendered for the service the sum of 10*l.* The ship and cargo are valued at 2,300*l.*

Haggard, for the salvors.—The offer of 10*l.*, which is considerably more than the ordinary rate of pilotage, proves, that in the opinion of the owners, salvage has been rendered; and if the service were salvage, that sum is much too small.

Addams, for the owners.—The vessel was in no danger, and nothing but a pilot was wanted. The owners have made a liberal tender, and the claim of the boatmen is extortionate.

Sed per Curiam.—The doctrine has again and again been laid down, that a pilot is not bound to take charge of a vessel which requires other services than ordinary navigation and pilotage. If he assists a leaky, or damaged vessel, he is entitled to salvage. Here the men certainly did more, and were called upon to do more, than the common duties of their calling, and they are entitled to 20*l.* instead of 10*l.*

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner SKIRROW.)

Tuesday, April 16.

Re RALEIGH and OTHERS.

A decision of some importance was given in this case. The point arose under the following circumstances:—Messrs. E. and J. Bennett, attorneys, were the petitioning creditors in a fiat issued against Raleigh and Goode: and the day after they issued a fiat upon the same debt against all three partners, Raleigh, Goode, and Holland. Both fiats were opened. Mr. Peet was appointed provisional assignee, and he presented a petition to the Court of Review, praying that court to annul the fiat against Raleigh and Goode, and also two other fiats, one against Raleigh and the other against Goode; so that, by getting these three fiats annulled, the joint general fiat against the three might be worked with advantage both to the general and all the separate interests concerned. The Court of Review annulled the three fiats petitioned against; and, in the order annulling Goode's separate fiat, and Raleigh and Goode's fiat, the right of election on the part of the petitioning creditors to the separate fiat against Goode was reserved; as well as the right, "if any," of the petitioning creditors to that of Raleigh and Goode. Before this order was made, Messrs. Bennett had proved their debt under the joint fiat against the three bankrupts. At the dividend meeting, on Friday last, they claimed the right of election under the fiat against the two bankrupts. It was opposed by Mr. Hitchcock, on the part of the assignees, who contended that, inasmuch as they were the petitioning creditors, and had issued the joint fiat against the three, and proved their debt under that fiat, they were not entitled to such election as would enable them to prove the same debt on the estate of the two.

Mr. Commissioner SKIRROW took time to consider, and gave judgment to the effect, that Messrs. Bennett had no right to prove on the estate of the two, and that the proof, therefore, stands as originally made, upon the estate of the three.

Ecclesiastical Courts.

ARCHES COURT.

Monday, April 15.

EVANS v. EVANS.

In a case of divorce, on the ground of adultery, the Court is very unwilling to sign the sentence on the testimony of a single witness, and, for a second time, orders the case to stand over, that further proof may be offered.

This is a suit for divorce, by reason of adultery, promoted by Mr. Evans against Mrs. Evans, his wife. The only evidence in support of the wife's guilt is the testimony of a servant, who has deposed to having seen Mrs. Evans in bed with Elliot, the alleged particeps.

During last term the Court ordered the case to stand over, in order to obtain additional evidence as to the criminality of the parties.

Addams, for the husband, now prayed that the sentence of divorce might at once be signed, though no further proof had been offered. The evidence of the servant was liable to no suspicion, and it had been implicitly relied upon by the jury, who had given damages to the plaintiff at common law.

Sir H. J. FUST.—I am very unwilling to pass sentence upon the testimony of a single witness. There is no precedent of a case like this. There is nothing spoken of as leading up to the commission of the offence, except certain signs between the parties, and they are too vague to be relied upon. It has been alleged that Mrs. Evans left her husband's house, and has since resided with her supposed paramour. If this be so, surely some evidence of it may be obtained; and I must again let the case stand over, to obtain it, if possible.

The VISCOUNT FRANKFORT DE MONTMORENCY against the VISCOUNTESS FRANKFORT DE MONTMORENCY.

Divorce by reason of adultery—Alimony.

This is a suit for divorce by reason of adultery, promoted by the Viscountess Frankfort de Montmorency against the Viscount Frankfort de Montmorency, her husband. It came on on appeal from the Consistorial Court of London, which Court had held the adultery to be sufficiently established, and pronounced for the divorce, allotting the sum of 550*l.* to Lady Frankfort as alimony, pendente lite, and permanent alimony at the rate of 800*l.* per annum.

Against that part of the sentence which referred to alimony Lord Frankfort appealed, on the ground that the sums allotted both for a permanency, and during the pending of the suit, were unreasonably large. Lady Frankfort joined in the appeal against the allotment of permanent alimony, contending that it was too small a sum; and so both parties now appeared before the courts as appellants and respondents.

The allegation of faculties stated the gross income of Lord Frankfort to be 15,000*l.* per annum, from estates in Ireland, in addition to the interest he enjoyed from the sum of 50,000*l.*; but in his answers, Lord Frankfort fixed his net income at 2,550*l.* a year.

Sir J. Dodson, Q. A. and Elphinstone, for Lady Frankfort. The conduct of the husband had throughout been marked with the greatest profligacy; and no imputation rested upon the character of the wife. She had to support and educate their two children (one the heir to the title), and so, taking Lord Frankfort's income at 3,000*l.* a year, surely she was entitled to 1,000*l.*

Jenner and Harding, contrà.—Lord Frankfort's income was only 2,550*l.*, with which he had to support his rank, and as Lady Frankfort had had no property of her own, 800*l.* a year was too much for permanent alimony; and as to the gross sum of 550*l.* during the suit, it was at the rate of 1,050*l.* a year, which was absurdly extravagant.

Sir H. J. FUST.—It appears that since the separation of Lord and Lady Frankfort, which took place in 1838, his lordship has led a life of what I must call gross profligacy. A person, named Maria Billings, admits that she has been in the habit of supplying women who visited him at his house, and who remained for a considerable time in his bed-room, and there is no doubt that he cohabited with the woman Alice Lowe. So far, therefore, as permanent alimony is concerned, he is not in a position to entitle him to the lenient consideration of the Court; and I think that as his income may fairly be taken at between 2,700*l.* and 3,000*l.* and as Lady Frankfort brought no property, the allotment made in the court below is a fair one. But the allotment of 550*l.* as a gross sum during the continuance of a suit which lasted only for four months, seems to me calculated upon a wrong principle, and I cannot help thinking that the learned judge must have intended to have reckoned it at the rate of 550*l.* a year, to which amount I feel bound to reduce it. So far, then, as regards the alimony pendente lite, I pronounce for the appeal, but I affirm the rest of the sentence. Decreed accordingly.

This being the first day of Term, the Ecclesiastical Courts were opened with the reading of prayers and the observance of the usual solemnities.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

WE give below the commencement of the Statutes of the session. The plan adopted with these latter is similar to that of last year. Statutes and parts of statutes, important or interesting to our readers, are given verbatim; of others a copious abstract is presented, and of all the remainder the titles are printed. We prefer to place them in their order, rather than disturb it, even for an earlier reprint of any particular one. We hear that the County Courts Bill is to pass this session. The mutilated Ecclesiastical Courts Bill is also to be made law. Mr. KELLY has undertaken to establish a Court of Criminal Appeal, in which we heartily wish him success. Lord BROUGHAM'S Privy Council Bill is not to pass. It will be seen that Lord CAMPBELL has introduced an extremely useful Bill to facilitate the recovery of debts from persons resident abroad. Some remedy has long been required.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT AND RATING.

TUESDAY, April 16.—Lord LYTTLETON also inquired whether it was the intention of government to propose any alteration in the law of settlement and rating?—Lord WHARNCLIFFE replied that it had been announced that permission would be asked of the House of Commons to introduce a Bill for the purpose of making an alteration in the law of settlement. He could not, however, state that government was prepared to introduce any such measure this session.

FRAUDULENT CREDITORS.

THURSDAY, April 19.—Lord CAMPBELL begged leave to lay on their lordships' table a Bill to enable actions to be brought against British subjects residing abroad, the cause of action having arisen in this country. In introducing such a measure, he believed he would not be suspected of harbouring any wish other than that of correcting what he conceived to be a very great defect in the law; and whatever might be his success, or whatever animadversions might be made on his conduct, he would continue to use his humble efforts to improve the laws of his country. With respect to the law of debtor and creditor, great improvements had taken place within the last few years, especially by doing away with imprisonment for debt on mesne process, and by compelling debtors, after a certain time, to make a statement of their affairs. Still, however, there was very great facility given, as the law now stood, to fraudulent debtors to reside abroad, and to cheat their creditors—and that facility had been taken advantage of to a very great extent. It was true, there was a provision in the bill under which, on representation being made to a judge that a debtor was in meditatione fugæ, he might be arrested. That provision was not, however, effectual in preventing the escape of individuals from the suit of their creditors; and unless process was served within the jurisdiction of the Court—if the debtor, which was in many instances easily effected, contrived to get beyond the jurisdiction of the Court—the creditor had no means of proceeding against him and recovering judgment. If the debtor had property in land, or in the funds, to the amount of 100,000*l.*, he had only to cross the Channel, and that property could not be reached by the law for the benefit of his creditors. They might proceed to outlawry against him, in which case his property was forfeited to the Crown. His creditors had no immediate remedy—no direct advantage from that proceeding. They might petition the Crown that a sufficient portion of the debtor's property might be appropriated for the payment of his debts. But here another most serious inconvenience might arise, namely, that, in the mean time, the statute of limitations might intervene while this proceeding was going on, and defeat the just claim of the creditor, who was thus deprived of all remedy. What he proposed by this bill was, to provide a remedy for the creditor in this way—namely, that, with the concurrence of the Court, on the application of the creditor, process might be served on the debtor abroad, and then, after it was satisfactorily proved that he permanently resided abroad, and that process had been duly served, the action might be brought as if he were within the regular jurisdiction of the court. The importance of a measure of this nature would appear evident if they considered the very large number of British subjects who resided abroad—many of them, it was to be feared, with the intention of eluding their creditors. By a return made by the French authorities of the number of British subjects domiciled in France in January, 1841, it appeared that the total amount was 66,000—of these there were in Paris alone 25,000; in Dieppe, 5,000; in Boulogne, 7,000; in Rouen, 4,000; in Marseilles, 2,500. This was exclusive of many thousands who were travelling. And it was calculated that the sum annually expended by those residents in France was not less than 5,000,000*l.* (Hear, hear.) Now if, instead of thousands, there were only 100 persons who chose to reside in France, for the purpose of defrauding their creditors, that would, he conceived, afford a sufficient ground and reason for the introduction of this bill.—The bill was then read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

Lord CAMPBELL gave notice that he would, on Friday se'nnight, move the second reading of the bill to "stay execution in prosecutions for misdemeanours, upon giving bail in error."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

QUARTER SESSIONS BILL.

TUESDAY, April 16.—Mr. HAWES said a Bill had been introduced on this subject, which the government did not pledge itself to support, but promised to take into consideration certain alterations which had been introduced in its provisions. He wished to know from the right honourable Secretary for the Home Department whether those alterations accorded with his views.—Sir J. GRAHAM: The alterations had been inserted in this Bill at his request. But since that, many representations had been made to him by recorders, well worthy of consideration. He had doubts as to the expediency of passing such a measure; for, under the Municipal Act, he found the Secretary of State for the Home Department was intrusted with powers with which it was now proposed to invest other parties. He thought it would conduce more to the public convenience to allow the responsibility to rest where it was. (Hear, hear.)

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 7 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

CAP. I.

An Act to enlarge the Powers of an Act of the Fourth and Fifth Years of her present Majesty, empowering the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods to raise Money for certain Improvements in the Metropolis, on the Security of the Land Revenues of the Crown within the County of Middlesex and City of London. (March 5, 1844.)

CAP. II.

An Act for the more speedy trial of Offences committed on the High Seas. (March 5, 1844.)

We copy this statute verbatim:—

Justices of Oyer and Terminer may try Offences committed on the High Seas.—Whereas, by an Act passed in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled "For Pirates," it was enacted, that all treasons, felonies, robberies, murders, and confederacies thereafter to be committed in or upon the sea, or in any other haven, river, creek, or place where the admiral or admirals have or pretend to have power, authority, or jurisdiction, should be inquired, tried, heard, determined, and judged in such shires and places in the realm as should be limited by the king's commission or commissions to be directed for the same, in like form and condition as if any such offence or offences had been committed or done in or upon the land; and such commissions should be had under the King's great seal, directed to the admiral or admirals, or to his or their lieutenant, deputy and deputies, and to three or four other substantial persons as should be named or appointed by the Lord Chancellor of England for the time being, from time to time and as often as need should require, to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of this realm used for treasons, felonies, murders, robberies, and confederacies of the same done and committed upon the land within this realm: and whereas it is expedient that provision be made for the trial of persons charged with offences so committed, without issuing any special commission in that behalf; be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That her Majesty's justices of assize or others her Majesty's commissioners by whom any court shall be holden under any of her Majesty's commissions of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery shall have severally and jointly all the powers which by any Act are given to the commissioners named in any commission of oyer and terminer for the trying of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and that it shall be lawful for the first-mentioned justices and commissioners, or any one or more of them, to inquire of, hear, and determine all offences alleged to have been committed on the high seas and other places within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and to deliver the gaol in every county and franchise within the limits of their several commissions of any person committed to or imprisoned therein for any offence alleged to have been committed upon the high seas and other places within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England; and all indictments found, and trials and other proceedings had, by and before the said justices and commissioners shall be valid; and it shall be lawful for the Court to order the payment of the costs and expenses of the prosecution of such offences in the manner prescribed by an Act of the seventh year of King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for improving the Administration of Criminal Justice in England, in the case of Felonies tried in the High Court of Admiralty."

2. Venue in Indictments.—And be it enacted, That in all indictments preferred before the said justices and commissioners under this Act the venue laid in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in the county where the trial is had; and all material facts which in other indictments would be averred to have taken place in the county where the trial is had shall in indictments prepared and tried under this Act be averred to have taken place "on the high seas."

3. Where offenders shall be tried. — And be it enacted, That the justice or justices by whom any information shall be taken touching any offence committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England under the provisions of an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intitled "An Act to enable Commissioners for trying Offences upon the Sea, and Justices of the Peace, to take Examinations touching such Offences, and to commit to safe custody Persons charged therewith," if he or they shall see cause thereupon to commit such person to take his trial for such offence, shall commit him to the same prison to which he would have been committed to take his trial at the next court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, if the offence had been committed on land within the jurisdiction of the same justice or justices, and shall have authority to bind by recognizance all persons who shall know or declare any thing material touching the said offence to appear at the said next court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, then and there to prosecute or give evidence against the party accused, and shall return all such informations and recognizances to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, at or before the opening of the Court; and every such offender shall be arraigned, tried, and sentenced as if the offence had been committed within the county, riding, or division for which such court shall be holden.

4. Not to affect Central Criminal Court, or prevent the issue of special commissions.—Provided always, and be it declared and enacted, That nothing herein contained shall affect the jurisdiction belonging to the Central Criminal Court for the trial of persons charged with offences committed on the high seas, and other places within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, or to restrain the issue of any special commission under the first-recited Act for the trial of such offenders, if need shall be.

5. Act may be amended.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. III.

An Act to stay proceedings for three calendar months, and till the end of the present session of Parliament, in certain Actions under the provisions of several Statutes for the Prevention of excessive Gaming, and to prevent any proceedings being taken under those statutes during such limited time. (March 5, 1844.)

This statute, after reciting 9th Anne, c. 14, 11th Anne, c. 1, 16th Car. 2, c. 7, 10 Wm. 3 (1),

Enacts (sec. 1) that proceedings commenced by common informers, or persons other than the actual losers, for penalties incurred by playing at or betting on certain games, to be stayed on application to the court in which they were commenced, or to a judge.

Sec. 2 gives the like remedy in cases where penalties may have been incurred under the Irish Acts.

Sec. 3 prohibits proceedings by any common informer or person other than the actual loser, his executors, and administrators, under any of the above provisions, after the passing of this Act, for any forfeiture or penalty under the above Acts incurred before the 1st of June next.

Sec. 4 enacts that actions shall not be brought without the consent of the Attorney-General.

Sec. 5 limits the duration of this Act to the last day of the present session of Parliament.

CAP. IV.

An Act for transferring Three Pounds Ten Shillings per Centum per Annum Annuities, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, into Annuities of Three Pounds Five Shillings per Centum per Annum, and New Three Pounds per Centum per Annum Annuities. (March 22, 1844.)

CAP. V.

An Act for transferring certain Annuities of Three Pounds Ten Shillings per Centum per Annum and Government Debentures into Annuities of Three Pounds Five Shillings per Centum per Annum, and New Three Pounds per Centum per Annum Annuities. (March 22, 1844.)

CAP. VI.

An Act to apply the Sum of Eight Millions out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-four. (March 22, 1844.)

CAP. VII.

An Act to Indemnify Witnesses who may give Evidence during the Session, before either House of Parliament, touching Gaming Transactions. (March 22, 1844.)

CAP. VIII.

An Act to facilitate the Recovery, by Summary Process, of Small Sums due to the Teachers of Schools in Ireland. (March 22, 1844.)

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.—This Bill has been printed, as brought down from the House of Lords on the 2nd of April, and preparatory to its provisions being discussed by the Lower House of Parliament. It is entitled "An Act to Consolidate the Jurisdiction and Improve the Practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Wales, and for otherwise altering and amending the Law in certain matters Ecclesiastical." The number of clauses contained in the Bill amounts to eighty-three. The Act is not to extend to tithes within the city of London, and its general provisions are exclusively limited to England and Wales. It is proposed to come into operation on the 1st of October, 1844.

CHARITABLE PAWN SOCIETIES. — A bill "to provide for the establishment and regulation of Charitable Pawn Societies," has been drawn up and introduced into the Legislature by Mr. Cowper and Mr. Hutt, the members for Hertford and Gateshead. It contains twenty clauses, and enacts that societies may be formed for raising among the members thereof a stock, or fund, for the purpose of advancing money on property taken in pledge or pawn, the rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent. per annum. The operation of the Bill is extended to Great Britain, Berwick, and the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, and Man.

REPEAL AGITATION, &c. (IRELAND).—Returns of all moneys paid to Mr. Frederick Bond Hughes, and others, on account of any communications made by them to Government, relative to the repeal agitation in Ireland, &c., have just been published. It appears that Mr. Bond Hughes was ordered to Ireland by Mr. Gurney on Michaelmas-day last, in order to report the repeal speeches for the information of the Goverment, and that Mr. Gurney's charge on that account, up to the 20th of October, was 234*l.* 18s. 6d., of which 45*l.* was paid to Mr. Hughes whilst in Ireland, "on account," to defray personal expenses, &c. Mr. C. Ross received 68*l.* for a report of the repeal meeting held at Donnybrook on the 3d of July last, which included his travelling expenses. Mr. Ross was also engaged by Government on the 21st of August, 1843, to report the various repeal meetings held in Ireland from that period up to the assembling of Parliament in 1844, with a remuneration of 350*l.* exclusive of travelling expenses, of which sum a balance of 105*l.* is still due to Mr. Ross. No instructions were ever issued, nor money paid, by Government to Mr. John Jackson, the newspaper reporter in Ireland connected with the Morning Herald. The sum of 301*l.* 8s. was paid to Mr. Bond Hughes for his attendance as witness during the late State trials in Dublin for sixty-seven days, at a guinea a day for maintenance, and three guineas a day for loss of time, exclusive of travelling expenses. Mr. Charles Ross obtained 97*l.* 14s. for thirty-seven days' attendance, at two guineas a day. Mr. Jackson received nothing.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.—An account of all the moneys received and disbursed by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty during the year ending on the 31st of December, 1842, has just been presented to the House of Commons (pursuant to Act of Parliament). We find that the gross total sum received amounted to 194,896*l.* 8s. 5d. and the gross total sum disbursed to 185,477*l.* 7s. 10d. leaving a balance of 9,419*l.* 0s. 7d. Of the amount received, 13,582*l.* was derived from "first fruits and tenths," 15,975*l.* from benefactions for the augmentation of livings, 38,519*l.* from dividends on Government funds, 45,673*l.* from the produce of stock sold for general purposes, 20,127*l.* from the interest on money advanced on mortgage to build, &c. glebe-houses, 25,261*l.* from instalments in part liquidation of moneys advanced on mortgage, 11,175*l.* from the net produce of sales of bounty lands, and 16,413*l.* from endowment trusts. Of the disbursements, 19,198*l.* were appropriated to the erection, &c. of residence houses, 65,187*l.* to loans on mortgage to build, &c. glebe-houses, 24,411*l.* to the purchase of stock for general purposes, 69,284*l.* to the clergy (being interest and dividends of money and stock appropriated to their livings), and 3,390*l.* to the salaries of the secretary, treasurer, auditor, clerks, &c. of the Bounty-office. There are, it further appears, no arrears of first fruits now due, and the yearly tenths at present in arrear only amount to 28*l.* 4s. 11d. The return is dated November 30, 1843.

PUBLIC PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.—The following is the total number of petitions presented on various measures up to the 8th inst. viz.:—Against a repeal of the corn laws 316 petitions, signed by 25,503 persons (the number having increased by upwards of 7,000 within a few days); against the union of the dioceses of St. Asaph and Bangor 28 petitions, signed by 2,424 persons; for a reduction of the duties on tobacco '48 petitions, signed by 25,712 persons; for an alteration of the new poor law 36 petitions, signed by 1,797 persons; for withholding the supplies until the grievances of the people have been investigated and redressed 46 petitions (all of which are presented by Mr. W. Sharman Crawford), signed by 35,540.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

CONFUSION has been carried into the offices of the Art-Union by the following letter from the Treasury:—

"Treasury, April 12, 1844.

"Sirs,—I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you that an institution called the Art-Union of London, having for its object the chance distribution of prizes of works of art, has been brought under the notice of their lordships, and that they are advised that it is illegal; and I am also to acquaint you that the further continuance of the same will render all parties engaged in it liable to prosecution.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"W. R. REYNOLDS.

"To G. Godwin and Lewis Pocock, Esqrs.
4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross."

A deputation has waited upon Sir George Clerk, to represent the awkward position in which the society was placed. This was his reply:—

"Sir G. Clerk, who had received the deputation with great courtesy, said that the attention of the Commissioners of the Treasury having been directed to the subject, they had submitted a case to the Attorney and Solicitor General, and that, in their opinion, the whole of the associations referred to were illegal, and that it was thought due to the committee to give them early intimation of the fact. Sir Robert Peel could not interfere in the matter; all he could do was to inform them of the law. He (Sir George Clerk) was himself a subscriber, and so were many others connected with the government; still, for the Treasury to give any sanction to further proceedings, although he fully admitted the difficulty of the position in which the committee found themselves, and the loss which would result to artists if the proceedings were stopped, was quite out of the question. If the opinions of the gentlemen were such as were stated, they could of course act on them if they pleased. The most prudent course, he thought, would be to postpone the meeting, giving the subscribers notice to that effect, and suspend proceedings until it could be ascertained whether or not the legislature would protect that and similar societies."

Sir G. CLERK was right. Mr. KELLY's opinion, which we published a twelvemonth ago, affirming the legality of Art-Unions, was clearly erroneous, and so think the law officers of the Crown; and, by the bye, it would have been a singular scene, had Mr. Kelly the good fortune to have taken his proper place in the recent changes, for him to have been engaged in the prosecution of a society which had acted upon the faith of his opinion of its legality.

But clearly the drawing cannot be permitted to take place, although the money is collected, and the artists are at work. There is no remedy but a legislative enactment, which we hope will be framed forthwith, legalizing, under proper regulations, the formation of societies similar to the Art-Union, when not established for individual gain. We are aware that the difficulty will be extreme, so to legislate as to permit the good and exclude the bad; but it may be surmounted by the ingenuity of a legislator who is at once a practical lawyer and a man of business.

IRREGULAR SOLEMNIZATION OF MARRIAGES.

The following letter has been addressed by the Lord Bishop of Chester to the clergy of his diocese:—

"Reverend Sir,—I have received so many complaints of the irregular solemnization of marriages in my diocese, that I desire to call your particular attention to the subject, which the recent changes in the law of marriage, and the frequent subdivision of parishes, may have tended to confuse.

"The prevalent evil, is the irregular publication of banns, and its consequence, clandestine marriages.

"The law requires (4 Geo. 4, 76, 2, and 3 Geo. 4, 72, 17) that no marriage be solemnized except in the church of the parish or district of a parish where one of the parties shall dwell; and that, if both of the parties do not reside in the same parish or district, banns shall be published in the churches of the place in which each reside, a certificate of which must be required by the officiating minister.

"The evasion of this law is notorious; so likewise are the evils arising out of such evasion—evils which must seriously oppress the conscience of any clergyman who has become, however unwittingly, the cause of them. Cases have been represented to me of bigamy; cases of incestuous alliance; cases of illegal unions formed under the name of marriage; cases where girls of a very tender age have been beguiled into the most unhappy connexions; all of which have arisen through a violation of the law, in consequence of false statements made by parties desiring to be married in places where they have not resided, and are, consequently, unknown.

"I may assume, without hesitation, that every clergyman will be most anxious to take whatever means the law and the circumstances in which he is placed admit, in order to escape the danger of being accessary to such proceedings, or so made 'partakers of other men's sins.'

"It is declared in the Marriage Act (4 Geo. 4, 76, 7):—

"'No parson, vicar, minister, or curate shall be obliged to publish the banns of matrimony between any person whatsoever, unless the persons to be married shall, seven days at least, before the time required for the first publication of such banns respectively, deliver, or cause to be delivered, to such parson, vicar, minister, or curate, a notice in writing, dated on the day on which the same shall be so delivered, of their true Christian names and surnames, and the house or houses of their respective abodes within such parish or chapelry as aforesaid, and of the time during which they have dwelt, inhabited, or lodged in such house or houses respectively.'

"I recommend that in every church where marriages are solemnized this practice be observed, that the intention of observing it be made as generally known as possible, and that every notice of banns to be published shall be given in the following form, to be preserved together with the register:—

"'NOTICE TO BE GIVEN SEVEN DAYS BEFORE PUBLICATION OF BANNS.

"'I request that Banns of Marriage be published in the ———, between

Names	Age	Residences.
A. B.		now residing at	in the Parish and
C. D.		now residing at	in the Parish

'Dated 18 . Signed

"The officiating minister will be able, by himself, or by agents on whom he can depend, during the seven days previous notice which the law authorizes him to demand, to ascertain the fact of the alleged residence of the persons described as being in the parish or district connected with the church.

"By reference to Vol. V. of the Ecclesiastical Gazette, pp. 221 and 271, it will be seen that two prosecutions, leading to conviction and penalty, have recently taken place against clergymen for celebrating illegal marriages, under circumstances like those to which I have alluded. And, in the event of such prosecution, I conceive that a clergyman's best defence would be, to shew that he had taken all reasonable precaution to prevent or discover imposition as to the facts which the law requires; and that such precaution as that I now recommend, and as the Act itself suggests, would not be considered as more than reasonable.

"I feel assured that you will earnestly co-operate with me in attempting to restrain a practice which, in its least aggravated form, converts a holy contract into an occasion of deceit and falsehood, and, in its worst and too frequent consequences, leads to heinous sin in individuals, and entails irreparable injury upon families.

"I remain, rev. Sir,

"Your faithful servant and brother,

"J. B. CHESTER."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

SOME of the changes hinted at in our last have been made. It is understood that others are to follow. Sir F. POLLOCK has been elevated to the dignity of Chief Baron of the Exchequer; but Mr. THESIGER has prevailed over Mr. KELLY in his claim for the post of Solicitor-General. The elevation of the late Attorney-General has given universal satisfaction, for he

Had borne his faculties so meek—had been So clear in his great office—

that he had indeed won "golden opinions from all sorts of men." We deeply regret to learn that the new Attorney-General is very ill, and, it is said, is about to repair to the Continent to recruit his shattered health. The good wishes of the Profession will attend him.

The business of the Term is lighter than usual. An unexpected difficulty in our arrangements in the Queen's Bench, has subjected us to an unwonted delay in the publication of the Reports of that Court. We hope, however, that the inconvenience will only be temporary, and that the place will be as efficiently supplied as before.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEJEUNE.

Monday being the first day of Easter Term, agreeably to ancient custom, the Lord Chancellor gave a breakfast to the several judges at his lordship's private residence in George-street, Hanover-square.

Lord Denman, Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench; Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls; Sir L. Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England; Sir N. C. Tindal, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; Baron Parke, Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Erskine, Baron Rolfe, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Justice Cresswell were the judges present. There was a numerous party of the different learned personages connected with the several minor courts, and also Queen's counsel, present, among whom may be named Sir Frederick Pollock, who attended for the last time in the official capacity of Attorney-General; Serjeants Andrews, Storks, Atcherley, and Talfourd; Messrs. Thesiger (Solicitor-General elect), Erle, Wakefield, J. Miller, G. Spence, T. Kindersley, T. J. Platt, R. Alexander, T. Starkie, C. T. Swanstone, J. Stuart, Bethell, Godson, W. Whatley, and Hon. J. Stuart Wortley; Mr. Commissioner Harlow; Masters in Chancery—Farrar, Wingfield, Sir Giffin Wilson, Senior, and Lynch; Right Hon. Sir George Rose; Messrs. Turner, Armstrong, Wilbraham, Koe, Teed, Walker, Parker, Russell, Anderton, Romilly, &c.

Sir Wm. Follett was unavoidably absent.

The usual ceremony of the learned judges partaking of "term cakes" and the cheer of the "loving cup" of mulled wine, in which all parties connected in the least degree with the various functionaries who attend join, distinct rooms being prepared for the assistants, such as clerks, &c., to the judges, having been gone through, confectionaries, with claret and choice wines, having been handed round, the circle broke up, and, according to their rank, proceeded, in company with the Lord Chancellor, in procession to open the courts of law at Westminster.

THE ESTATE OF THE LATE BARONESS DE FEUCHERES.

The long-protracted litigation arising out of the distribution of the succession to this estate is at length brought to a conclusion.

It will be, no doubt, recollected that in the month of July last an action between Messrs. Pinniger and Westmacott, solicitors, of Gray's-inn, and a Mrs. Clark, one of the heirs and next of kin of the late Baroness de Feuchères, came on for trial in the Court of Exchequer, before the late Lord Chief Baron, and that such cause was ultimately referred to the arbitration of Mr. Biggs Andrews, Queen's counsel.

In the report of this trial was given, at great length, an outline of the very extraordinary facts connected with the history and fortunes of the Baroness de Feuchères, and of the no less extraordinary exertions, ability, and perseverance of the plaintiffs, Messrs. Pinniger and Westmacott, who, in the face of enormous difficulties, had the courage to take the claimants to this succession by the hand, and, after an expenditure of upwards of 5,400*l.* incurred in supporting their rights before the French tribunals, besides enormous costs incurred in our own courts (not one farthing of which they could have ever hoped to recover in the event of their being unable to establish their client's rights), succeeded in recovering and distributing amongst the parties entitled, a sum of between 300,000*l.* and 400,000*l.* sterling.

After this money had been recovered, and the claimants had been put in possession thereof, it would appear that some disputes arose between the fortunate claimants and their attorneys, Messrs. Pinniger and Westmacott, as to the remuneration which the latter should receive in respect of their exertions in these matters; and the question having been referred to Mr. Amory, the eminent solicitor in the City, that gentleman awarded Messrs. Pinniger and Westmacott the sum of 7,000*l.* independent of the outlay of 5,400*l.* expended in the French courts and elsewhere in prosecuting the suit. Messrs. Clark and the other parties refused to abide by this decision, and the solicitors were compelled to resort to a court of law to procure payment of their costs.

The case, as we have stated, was referred to Mr. Andrews, who has within the last few days made his award, after, probably, one of the most extraordinary and expensive references which the history of legal proceedings furnishes. In this arbitration, in which no less than six eminent counsel were engaged for the one or the other side, the defendants offered the most determined resistance to the plaintiffs' claim, on the ground that the law recognised only one scale of remuneration for an attorney's services, and knew nothing of liberality, or of any distinction between a case of extreme difficulty involving great personal outlay and danger on the part of an attorney, and one of an ordinary description; and, in short, that no attorney was bound, under any circumstances, to give in his charges in detail, and submit them to taxation. The consequence of this defence was, that Messrs. Pinniger and Westmacott were compelled to review the entire proceedings in both countries, and to support them by evidence.

The result, however, has been such as to satisfy all parties of the propriety of Mr. Amory's decision, the present arbitrator having awarded the plaintiffs the sum of 6,344*l.* besides the costs of the reference, which have been taxed on the part of the plaintiffs at 3,800*l.* more; so that if the costs of the defendants be added, it will be seen that the expense at which they have reduced Mr. Amory's award by 656*l.* (and which award, it should be observed, was based on the footing of what he considered liberal, and not on the scale of strict legal costs) is not much less than 6,000*l.*

The actual sums received by Messrs. Pinniger and Co. for their services in these monster suits amount together to 15,500*l.* of which 5,453*l.* was for actual disbursements, ascertained by the Master without deduction; 6,344*l.* Mr. Andrews' award; 3,751*l.* 2s. 3d. for the plaintiff's costs of the reference.

The amount actually recovered and distributed among the heirs and next of kin of the Baroness de Feuchères was, as we have before stated, between 300,000*l.* and 400,000*l.*

THE NEW CHIEF BARON OF THE EXCHEQUER.—Sir Frederick Pollock was on Tuesday sworn in a serjeant at law, and having proceeded to the Common Pleas, and gone through the usual ceremonies there as serjeant, returned to the Lord Chancellor's room, and was sworn in as Lord Chief Baron, the Queen's Remembrancer having administered the oath of office, and the Clerk of the Crown the oath of allegiance, &c. The Lord Chief Baron did not take his seat in the Court of Exchequer during the day. The Court of Common Pleas was crowded on Sir F. Pollock's entrance; and in the course of his progress through the courts the learned gentleman received the congratulations of his friends.

REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.—A further reduction has been made in the taxation of suitors in the Court of Chancery. By a recent order, which reduced by one-fifth the charges for copies in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs, the charge to the suitors was diminished by more than 5,000*l.* a-year. Another order has been issued, in consequence, as we believe, of the compensation of the present Lord Abinger having ceased upon his accession to the peerage, by which the charge for office copies in the Examiner's office of the Court of Chancery has been reduced from 14d. per folio (of 90 words) to 8d. per folio, making a further diminution of charge to suitors to an amount exceeding 1,100*l.* a-year. Thus, in less than eighteen months after the passing of the "Act for the Abolition of certain Offices in the High Court of Chancery in England," reductions of fees have been effected to the extent of nearly 6,200*l.* a-year.

THE LAW OFFICERS UNDER GOVERNMENT.—The death of Lord Abinger having occasioned fresh changes in the law departments of the Government, it may not be uninteresting to many of our readers to give a list of those members of the legal profession who have occupied the situations of Attorney-General and Solicitor-General during the last ten or twelve years. In 1830, Sir J. Scarlett and Sir E. B. Sugden filled those important offices; from 1830 to 1833, Sir W. Horne and Sir J. Campbell; in 1834-35, Sir F. Pollock and Sir W. Follett; from 1835 to 1840, Sir J. Campbell and Sir R. M. Rolfe; in 1840, Sir J. Campbell and Sir T. Wilde; in 1840-41, Sir T. Wilde alone; and from 1841 to 1844, Sir F. Pollock and Sir W. Follett; and, now, Sir W. Follett and Mr. Thesiger. It will be remembered that the late Lord Abinger was elevated to the Chief Barony of the Exchequer in 1834 by Sir R. Peel's brief administration, the office having become vacant by the promotion of Lord Lyndhurst (then Lord Chief Baron) to the woolsack as Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain. It was on that occasion that Lord Brougham on being compelled to resign the Great Seal, of which he had retained the custody under the Grey and Melbourne Administrations, thought fit to make a formal application for the Lord Chief Barony to the Duke of Wellington, offering to discharge the duties of judge in the Court of Exchequer without any extra remuneration. The Duke of Wellington declined giving an answer till the return of Sir R. Peel from Italy, and Lord Brougham eventually withdrew his extraordinary request. The office of Lord Chief Baron was occupied by the present Lord Chancellor after his first appointment to the woolsack, and finally abandoned by him in 1834.

THE PUBLIC OFFICES.—In these days of rigid economy, any diminution, however slight, occurring in the expenditure of the various public offices and establishments will, no doubt, be viewed with considerable satisfaction. A Parliamentary paper, containing an abstract of the accounts of every increase and diminution which has taken place within the year 1843, the number of persons employed, and in the salaries, allowances, and expenses in all public offices or departments, pursuant to the Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4., cap. 24, has just been printed by order of the House of Commons. On examining this document, we find that whilst the gross total increase, which has occurred during the past year in the salaries and emoluments of the said public offices and establishments, amounts to the sum of 82,837*l.* 1s. 1d., the gross total diminution which has simultaneously taken place, amounts altogether to the sum of 24,686*l.* 18s. 9d., leaving a balance of net increase in the expenses entailed upon the public of 58,150*l.* 2s. 4d. The gross total increase in the number of persons employed amounts to 181, and the gross total decrease to 69, leaving a balance of net increase amounting to 112. The principal increase in the number of persons employed has occurred in the Post-office department, in which 114 additional hands have, it appears, been laid on. The largest increase, in a pecuniary point of view, is to be witnessed in the departments of the Custom-house, the Excise-office, the Post-office, the Stamp-office, and the Registrar-General's-office.

STAMPED LETTER PAPER.—The following notice has been issued by command of the Postmaster General:—"General Post-office, April, 1844.—Penny stamped half-sheets of paper being about to be issued for the purpose of postage, in addition to the postage envelopes and labels now in use, the following are the prices at which they will be sold to the public; viz.,

For half a ream, containing 240 half-sheets	1	2	3
For a quire, containing 24 ditto	0	2	3
For a single half-sheet	0	0	1¼

It being understood that these half-sheets when sold in parts of a quire, or in any quantity under a quire, will be charged at the rate of 1¼d. each, but that when purchased in half-reams or quires no advance will be made in the respective prices of 1*l.* 2s. 3d. in the former, and 2s. 3d. in the latter case. It is essential that these half-sheets should be folded that the stamps shall be above the address, and on the right hand side of the letter; and particular attention is requested on this point, as if the precaution is neglected, the letter will be probably charged with postage." The sale of the stamped letter-paper commenced yesterday.

THE LATE T. P. ACLAND, ESQ.—We understand that amongst other bequests, the will of the late Thomas Parker Acland, esq. contains the following charitable donations, to be paid free of all legacy duty and charges:—North Devon Infirmary, Barnstaple, 400*l.*; North Devon Dispensary, 400*l.*; the Blue Coat School, Barnstaple, 300*l.*; Bell's School, Barnstaple, 200*l.*; Eye Infirmary, Exeter, 300*l.*; St. George's Hospital, London, 100*l.*; Westminster Hospital, 200*l.*; Lunatic Asylum, Exeter, 100*l.*; to trustees, to be invested, and interest to be applied in purchasing Bibles, Testaments, and Common Prayer Books, to be distributed from year to year to the poor of Devonshire, with preference in favour of parishes wherein the testator had any property, 1,000*l.*; rector and churchwardens of Highbray, to be invested, and interest distributed to the poor at Christmas, 200*l.*; rector and churchwardens of Charles, ditto, 100*l.*; rector and churchwardens of Barnstaple, ditto, 100*l.* —Western Luminary.

IRELAND.—THE STATE TRIALS.

Dublin, Wednesday evening.

The Court of Queen's Bench continues in the present as in the two preceding terms, to be the great scene of attraction; the barriers in the Hall are still guarded by policemen, and the internal arrangements of the court remain the same as during the trial, except that the canopy which was put up over the jury box has been taken down. On Monday a rule for judgment, unless cause in four days, was entered against the traversers, and on the same day they were respectively served with notice, that on Friday next the law officers' of the Crown would move that they be called up for sentence.

Yesterday a notice of motion for a new trial (a copy of which is subjoined) was served on the Crown Solicitor on behalf of Mr. C. G. Duffy; a similar notice was also served on behalf of each of the other traversers.

QUEEN'S BENCH—CROWN SIDE.

Reg. v. Daniel O'Connell, John O'Connell, Thomas Steele, Thomas M. Ray, John Gray, Richard Barrett, and Charles Gavan Duffy.

SIR,—Take notice, that counsel on behalf of Charles G. Duffy, one of the traversers in this case, will move on Thursday, the 18th day of April instant, or the first opportunity after, to set aside the verdict had in this cause against the said Charles Gavan Duffy, and that a new trial be directed, or that a venire de novo be awarded upon the following grounds, that is to say, for that the jury lists, from which were framed the jurors' book, and special jury list for the present year 1844, were fraudulently dealt with, for the purpose of prejudicing the said traverser in his defence, and that by reason thereof the said traverser was in fact so prejudiced, as the jury who tried this cause was struck from the special jury list in 1844; and also for that John Jason Rigby, one of the jurors of the jury who tried the said cause, was sworn as John Rigby; and also, for that there is no such person as John Rigby, of Suffolk-street, in the county of the city of Dublin, as stated in the postea in this cause, but that the person who filled the office of juror is John Jason Rigby; and also, for that the said John Jason Rigby, prior to his having been sworn as aforesaid, informed the court of the true state of the facts, and said in open court he was not John Rigby, but John Jason Rigby. And also, for that there was no evidence adduced upon the trial in this cause to prove the fact of the alleged conspiracy, or any overt act thereof to have taken place or occurred within the county of the city of Dublin: and also for that there was no evidence of the existence of any of the alleged conspiracies imputed in the indictment; and also, for that the said verdict is against law and evidence; and also against the weight of evidence; and also upon the ground of the reception of evidence that ought to have been excluded; and also upon the ground that the trial of this cause was continued beyond the end of Hilary term, and did not terminate until the 13th day of February last, instead of its having been adjourned until the present Easter term; and for that during the trial of this cause, which continued from the 15th day of January till the 13th day of February, the jurors who tried the same were allowed on each evening to separate and return to their respective homes, and had, during the said trial, full opportunity of reading many articles which were published during the progress thereof, in the Evening Packet and Evening Mail newspapers, commenting on the evidence adduced against the said defendants, and calculated to influence the minds of the said jurors to find a verdict against the said defendants.

And also for misdirection of the learned Lord Chief Justice.

And also that the learned Lord Chief Justice misdirected the jury as to the effect of the evidence.

And also for that the learned Lord Chief Justice stated to the jury, with strong commentary against the traversers, the evidence offered for the Crown, and omitted to make any observations resulting from the evidence favourable to the traversers.

And also for that the whole current and bearing of the learned Chief Justice's charge was such as to express and signify to the jury a strong conviction existing in his own mind of the guilt of the traversers.

And also for that the learned Lord Chief Justice did not advert sufficiently to the evidence offered for the traversers, or direct sufficiently the attention of the jury to the effect of the said evidence, or to the inferences which they were at liberty to deduce therefrom.

And also for that in reading to the jury extracts from the speeches and publications given in evidence on the trial, the learned Chief Justice only read to the jury the extracts relied upon by the Crown, and omitted to read the extracts relied upon by the traversers in the said speeches and publications.

And also for that the learned Lord Chief Justice stated facts to the jury in his charge which were not in evidence.

And also for that the learned Lord Chief Justice did not state to the jury with sufficient clearness the application of the law to the particular facts of the case.

And also for that the learned Lord Chief Justice expressed his opinion on the facts of the case to the jury in such a way as was calculated to control their judgment and lead them irresistibly to a conclusion of guilt in the traversers, which said motion will be grounded on the affidavits filed in this cause, and the several documents therein referred to, and the affidavit of the said Charles Gavan Duffy, and the joint affidavits of William Ford, John M. Cantwell, Thomas Reilly, and the joint affidavit of the said William Ford, and John M'Namara Cantwell respectively, filed this day in the proper office, and the affidavit of Pierce Mahony to be filed and used in this cause, of which you shall have a copy, the authentic report of the learned Chief Justice's charge, the notes of the learned Chief Justice, and the postea, &c.

Dated this 16th day of April, 1844.

P. M'EVOY GARTLAN,
Attorney for the Traverser.

To Wm. Kemmis, Esq., Crown Solicitor.

*In case this motion be refused by the Court, it is said to be the intention of the traversers to rely upon other points, on a motion in arrest of judgment; and it will be perceived that the above notice, while it includes much other matter, yet omits mention of some of the points raised upon the trial; but if the Court should on both motions rule in favour of the Crown, a writ of error will be immediately sued out.

On the 15th inst., being the first day of term, the following gentlemen, having taken the oaths prescribed by law, were called to the bar:—Walter Atkin, Purefoy Bateman, William Gernon, Stephen P. Curtis, John Joseph Andrew Kirwan, Thomas Alexander Dwyer, Robert Taylour, James Thomas Farrell, Thomas Bourchier, William John Dundas, Thomas Donohoe, and Francis Roberts, Esqrs.

THE MAGISTRACY.—The Lord Lieutenant, on the recommendation of the Right Hon. Lord Rossmore, has been pleased to appoint Captain Dawson, of Fanagh, a Deputy Lieutenant of the county of Monaghan.

The Lord Chancellor has been pleased to appoint Alexander McCausland, Esq., of Fortlodge, Omagh, to be a magistrate for the county of Tyrone.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to appoint Edward Jenkins, Esq., a resident magistrate for the county Mayo, under the provisions of the stat. 6 Wm. 4, c. 13, to take temporary charge of the district of Castlebar, during the absence of P. G. Banon, Esq., employed at Ballincote.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

SUBSCRIBERS desirous of availing themselves of the advantages of pre-payment are informed that the subscription for the third volume is now due, and should be paid in the course of a few days, in order to entitle them to the large deduction allowed upon this mode of payment. The subscription, when pre-paid, is,

We hope it is understood that it is entirely at the option of our Subscribers whether they will thus pay in advance or not; but as it offers many conveniences, we encourage it by making a deduction of more than twenty per cent.—the cost, where credit is taken, being 27s for the half-year.

We care not which mode of payment the subscriber may prefer; but we desire it to be understood that the deduction can be allowed only where the subscription is really pre-paid, and not after the lapse of several weeks from the commencement of the half-year; for, in such case, the advantage, in consideration of which the boon is given to the Subscriber, is, of course, lost to us.

Subscriptions should be made payable to the Publisher, Mr. CROCKFORD, at the General Post-office.

The second volume will, of course, be bound in precise uniformity with the first, at the same cost—viz. 5s. 6d. if the numbers be transmitted to our office by the post, in three or four packets, tied with the ends open, and accompanied with a letter advising whence it comes, and how it is to be returned when bound.

A few copies of the First Volume, bound, may still be had to complete sets, price £1 7s. 6d.

TO OUR READERS.

THE Index continues to occupy a large portion of our space. It is made thus extensive in compliance with a very generally expressed desire that the subjects, as well as the names, of the cases reported should be indexed. This has been done, we hope satisfactorily, and a similar index to the cases in the first volume is in type.

This, and the business of the Term, together with the beginning of the reprint of the most important, and extracts of the other, Statutes of the present session, have compelled the omission of much interesting and useful material, and the curtailment of the usual editorial comment.

Another of Professor Carey's Lectures has been in type for some weeks, but we have been unable to find room for it, so much material of more temporary interest having crowded upon us. The long vacation will enable us to bring up our arrear in this as in many other particulars.

It is gratifying to be able to announce a steady increase of subscribers. Every post brings five or six, for the most part obtained through the kind exertions of readers in recommending the LAW TIMES to their acquaintances. A list of the new subscribers will appear in the next supplement.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

THE public has been considerably mystified by the extraordinary acquittal of a girl who was tried at the late Somerset assizes for the double murder of her father and her aunt.

The first indictment, for the murder of her father by poison, was perhaps scarcely maintained by the evidence, which, though it afforded a moral assurance of guilt, according to the generous rule of our law that requires a doubt to be given in favour of the prisoner, was not sufficiently decisive to justify a conviction, for it rested mainly upon a statement by an accomplice.

But the second indictment, for strangling her aunt, was sustained by proofs stronger than are usually found in cases of circumstantial evidence. And the proved facts of the case were confirmed by confessions made by the prisoner herself to many of her fellow-prisoners, in which she minutely detailed the circumstances of the hideous affair.

Yet, in the face of these confessions, the jury acquitted the prisoner!

The first exclamation of every person who heard, or who has since read the report of, these extraordinary trials, is, "How could the jury find such a verdict?" This has become a very serious question, and, therefore, we direct to it the attention of our readers.

All sorts of conjectures are hazarded. Could it be fear? Could it be favour? It was neither. It was the consequence of the aversion felt by the jury to the infliction of the punishment of death.

Those whom duty calls into our criminal courts cannot fail to have observed the growth of this feeling among juries and the public. If a man be charged with an offence that subjects him only to a secondary punishment, however severe, there is no difficulty in finding a prosecutor, a jury ready to convict on reasonable proof of guilt, a judge willing to punish, and a public approving the sentence, and having no sympathy with the offender. But if the crime be such that there is a possibility of capital punishment, this wholesome order of things is at once disturbed; nobody likes to prosecute; the jury will not find a verdict of guilty if they can possibly avoid it—that is, unless the case be so clear that a doubt cannot be suggested even by the ingenuity of counsel; the judge exerts his skill to find reasons for relieving himself from the terrible duty of condemning a fellow-creature to death; and the public feeling, reversing the natural order of affairs, sympathises with the criminal and rejoices in his escape, not from punishment, but from a punishment which a voice within tells them to be one from which humanity shrinks; forbidden by reason; certainly inconsistent with Christianity; and the very right to inflict which, is a question upon which the best and wisest men entertain considerable doubt.

We believe that the strange acquittal at Taunton is to be thus accounted for. We know that in the town there prevailed a general feeling of horror and aversion at the possibility of an execution taking place within it. We are not sure that this horror had not something to do with the result.

At all events, the fact is now palpable, that capital punishment operates as an obstacle to the administration of justice, and, consequently, as an encouragement to crime. A criminal who commits a capital offence materially increases the chances of escape with impunity. If he content himself with robbery, he is pretty sure to be convicted; but if he murder his victim, his chances of immunity are trebled forthwith.

Such a state of things must not be permitted to continue. The public mind has passed beyond our legislation, and being enlisted in hostility to death-punishment, prefers the entire escape of a great criminal, to the execution of a law from which its feelings and reason revolt. It has ceased to think that the way to prevent murder is to accustom men to look at death done scientifically, according to law. It is true that executions are few, but their very paucity is the cause of the aversion men feel for them. It is a spectacle, the taste for which grows by gratification. The heart ever becomes hardened by the sight of death; and it is a strange mode of deterring from murder to accustom men to murderous scenes. We hope that the case of Mary Sealey will open the eyes of those who yet question the propriety of the abolition of capital punishment, and that they will now see that it has become a serious impediment to the administration of justice, defeating the very object for which alone its maintenance is demanded.

PRACTICAL NOTES ON STATUTES.
No. XI.

WE have to thank several correspondents for drawing our attention to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 31; a statute which we must confess that we overlooked when writing the article on this subject, which appeared in the last number. By this statute it was enacted that, after the 1st of March, 1843, no poundage should be payable to the sheriff for taking the body of any person in execution, but only such fees as should be allowed by the judges, in pursuance of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 55 (note). By way of compensation for this diminution of their fees, sheriffs are by the same section freed from any liability for action for debt for escape, and are now only liable to actions upon the case for damages sustained by the person or persons at whose suit the debtor was taken. The inappropriateness of the position in the statute-book led to the omission on our part; which we observe also

Mr. Harrison, in his last digest, had made. Nor is any reference made to it in the index to the quarto edition of the statutes. Who would have thought of looking at the end of an Act to Amend the Laws concerning Prisons for such an important alteration in the rights of sheriffs and judgment creditors ? It may be quoted as another instance of the unskilful confusion and huddling together of subjects which disgrace our statute-book, and which have, more than any thing else, rendered a knowledge of our statute law so extremely difficult to acquire. One of the most grotesque illustrations of this want of arrangement is to be found in 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, in which may be seen enactments respecting the navigation of the Thames, the assize of bread, the prevention of the distemper amongst horned cattle, the regulation of attorneys and solicitors, writs in the counties palatine and against the hundred, and the affirmation of Quakers ! ! We trust the "Society for Promoting the Amendment of the Law" will direct their early attention to remedy this great evil.

New Books.

The Law relating to Simony considered, with a view to its revision. By WILLIAM FORSYTH, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law. London: 1844. Saunders and Benning. Pp. 35.

MR. FORSYTH commences his pamphlet by noting the tendency of legal prohibitions to produce a popular impression that the malum prohibitum is really a malum in se, a tendency remarkably exhibited in the case of Simony, which, though without moral taint in itself, has come to be considered as something wicked and corrupt. This prejudice he properly combats.

He first gives a brief sketch of the history of the English law relating to simony ; 2nd, the present state of that law ; and, lastly, he suggests alterations which would adapt that law to common sense.

The present state of the law relating to simony is so clearly set forth by Mr. FORSYTH, that this portion of his pamphlet may be advantageously transferred to our columns, both for the instruction of the student and for reference.

"At present, then, the following cases would fall within the legal definition of the offence, and would expose parties to forfeiture or penalties, or loss of some kind. 1. It is simoniacal to purchase ordination to the ministry, or induction to any spiritual office.

"2. It is simoniacal for a person, whether lay or spiritual, to purchase a presentation when the living is actually vacant, so that a patron cannot divest himself of the right to present to the existing vacancy. Yet the same patron may, when the living is vacant, convey away the inheritance of the advowson, so as to confer upon another the right to all the future presentations. The reason formerly assigned for this distinction was a mere technical subtlety, that the presentation, or turn itself, being a spiritual thing, annexed to the person of the patron, was not grantable, and that it was a thing in power and authority, a chose in action, as lawyers term it, the execution of the advowson, and not the advowson itself. But in the case of the Bishop of Lincoln v. Wolverstan(a) Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Wilmot both said, 'That the true reason why a grant of a fallen presentation, or an advowson after avoidance, is not good, quoad the fallen vacancy, is the public utility, and the better to guard against simony ; not for the fictitious reason of its having then become a chose in action.'

"3. It is simoniacal, as we have just seen, to purchase a right to present to an advowson actually vacant; but not so if the incumbent be alive, although in articulo mortis, and although it may be morally certain that the vacancy will occur before the purchase-money is paid. Formerly it was held to be simony to buy the next presentation when the incumbent was sick, 'and like every way to die ;'(b) but the law is now settled otherwise, and the case of Fox v. The Bishop of Chester(c) has decided that the sale of the next presentation, the incumbent being in extremis, within the knowledge of both the seller and the purchaser, but without the privity or a view to the nomination of a particular clerk, is not void on the ground of simony. The same point had been previously decided with regard to an advowson in fee in the case Barrett v. Glubb.(d) Yet one would have thought that the same mischief might be done by such a sale as if the advowson or presentation were actually vacant.

"In a case, decided in the reign of Elizabeth,(e) where a father, in the presence of his son, being a clerk, purchased the next advowson of a church, the incumbent being sick, and not likely to live, who soon after died, and the father presented his son, this was held to be simony within the statute 31 Eliz. c. 6; but it was said by the judges, that if this had been done in the absence of the son, it had not been simony, because the father is bound to provide for his son. Well might Sir Simon Degge, who cites this case in his Parson's Counsellor, add, 'Quære of the difference ?'

"4. It is simoniacal for a spiritual person to purchase a next presentation for himself, but the same person may purchase the advowson in fee, and so present himself to the next vacancy.

"5. It is simoniacal to resign or exchange any benefice with the cure of souls, in consideration of 'any pension, sum of money, or benefit whatsoever,' but an exchange of benefices between two spiritual persons may be effected. The mode of doing this is regulated by several statutes, the principal of which is 55 Geo. 3, c. 147.

"6. According to strict law, as laid down in former times, it was simoniacal and illegal for a person to purchase the next presentation to a benefice, while the church was full, with the intention to present a particular person, and afterwards to present that person. But an exception to this rule was allowed, in the case of a father buying a next presentation for his son ; and for this singular reason—because 'the father is bound by nature to provide for his son ; and, therefore, his buying an advowson, with an intent to provide for him, is not any simony,'(f)—as if a father could be bound to violate a canonical or statute law, if that law was founded on good sense and reason,—and as if cases might not occur, where the duty to provide for another might be just as strong as in the relation of father and son. Now, however, no presentation would be held void, on the ground that the patron, when he purchased the next turn, had the particular presentee in view.

"7. It is simoniacal for an incumbent to resign his benefice for any pecuniary consideration, although he may be a very old man, or in very infirm health, and quite unfit for the duties of his parish. A case of the following kind frequently does occur. An incumbent has the fee of the advowson, and wishes to sell it ; of course the purchaser is anxious to have the living vacant as soon as possible, and the incumbent is willing to resign at once, on receiving more for the advowson than he can get if the vacancy is to be postponed until his death. As the law stands, it would be simony in him to make any difference in price between the two cases."

He proposes that the law should sanction the sale of advowsons directly, as now it does indirectly ; that it shall be permitted to buy and sell a presentation when the living is actually vacant ; and that the oath which, by the 10th canon, must now be taken by every presentee, or other spiritual person who receives preferment, should be abolished.

The subject is one which well deserves consideration ; the present state of the law is manifestly absurd ; Mr. FORSYTH's suggested amendments are for the consideration of our legislators ; they appear to be reasonable enough.

Parish Settlements, and the Practice of Appeals ; with the Law and Evidence of each Class of Settlement, and the Grounds of Objection incidental to them. With forms. By JELINGER C. SYMONS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London, 1844. T. Blenkarn.

The contents of this volume are familiar to the readers of the LAW TIMES, in whose columns they were first given to the Profession ; and so universal was the approval expressed of the treatise that Mr. SYMONS has been induced to re-publish it in a distinct form, for the accommodation of those who require a complete manual of the Law of Settlement compressed into convenient size for reference out of the office. The volume is elegantly printed, at a very trifling price, and may be carried in the pocket to the court, the vestry, or the board-room. Of its merits it will not become us to speak ; but we may form some judgment of the estimation in which the treatise was held, from the number of requests received during its progress that it might appear as a distinct work. Mr. SYMONS has certainly produced one of the most valuable contributions of the season to the practical lawyer's library, and it has the advantage of containing the many recent decisions.

SMITH v. HENLEY.

Enforcing lost agreement—Evidence of payment of stamp duty—Secondary evidence—Specific performance—Parol agreement in part performed—Practice—Costs.

Where an instrument has been lost, the rule is to presume that it was duly stamped; and the onus of proving the contrary lies upon the party who objects that the lost document was unstamped; but where circumstances are proved which raise a strong presumption that the document was never stamped, the burden of proving it to have been stamped lies on the party adducing secondary evidence of the lost instrument.

Where a lost instrument is shewn to have been unstamped, secondary evidence of its contents cannot be received.

Where there has been a treaty and a subsequent written agreement, the parties cannot, after the loss of the written agreement, rely on the treaty and part performance, as a parol agreement in part performed.

When the plaintiff relies upon an agreement admitted in the defendant's answer, such admission must be distinct and clear, so that the Court can, with reasonable certainty, make out the terms of the contract it is asked to enforce.

The answer may be read on the question of costs, but evidence not used on the hearing cannot be looked at.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls; the suit had been instituted to compel specific performance of an agreement for a lease, which had been contracted to be granted by one Ede, under whom the defendant claimed, and to restrain an action of ejectment which had been commenced by the defendant to recover possession of the premises. Ede, the deceased landlord, had in 1836 employed Warren, an auctioneer, to let a messuage, paddock, and premises at Isleworth, who advertised the property. The plaintiff having applied by letter of the 8th of Feb. 1838, to know the terms, to which Warren replied that the rent was 80*l.* a year, and stated some other particulars, an agreement for a lease of twenty-one years was soon afterwards signed by Warren on behalf of Ede, and by the plaintiff, which was left with Warren. The plaintiff then took possession, and found that the premises were much out of repair, and he complained upon the subject to Warren, which produced a letter from Ede of 8th May, 1838, authorising the plaintiff to do the necessary repairs. The agreement, in the meantime, had come into the possession of Farnell, a solicitor, to enable him to prepare the lease on behalf of both parties. In August 1838, Ede called on Farnell, and obtained from him the agreement, stating his dislike to plaintiff, his determination not to grant the lease which had been agreed on, and his intention to destroy the agreement. Ede took the lease away with him; it had not then been stamped. Warren had been examined, stated the general terms of the agreement, and proved the previous correspondence with the plaintiff. The Master of the Rolls had decreed a specific performance of the agreement for a lease according to the terms stated by Warren; from that decree the defendant appealed.

Wakefield and Heathfield, for the appeal, objected that the agreement had not been stamped, and therefore secondary evidence could not be given.

K. Parker and Bacon, in support of the decree, cited and referred to Rippener v. Wright (1 Barnewell & Alderson), Owen v. Thomas (3 Mylne & Keen, 353); Huddlestone v. Bristol (11 Vesey, 583); Hart v. Hart (1 Hare).

The LORD CHANCELLOR, during the argument, said the onus of proving that the agreement was stamped is thrown upon the plaintiff. A written agreement was handed to Ede to be carried into effect; the parol agreement before, which is said to have been in part performed, was in the nature of a treaty. The parties treat together, and their agreement is reduced into writing, you cannot, under such circumstances, shew a parol agreement. I do not know what the parol agreement is; a second agreement in writing has been entered into,—it must be proved that they correspond. It is clear that an agreement was drawn up and signed, and to enforce such an agreement you must produce it, or give evidence of its contents. The other side say that the original was not stamped, and a case in the Court of King's Bench is referred to, to shew that it cannot be given in evidence. It is true, the onus of proof lies in the first instance on the party saying the instrument is not stamped; but here they prove that it was not stamped when in the hands of Farnell, or when taken away by Ede. That is enough to throw the onus on the plaintiff to prove that it was stamped. The general rule is, that a lost instrument is assumed to have been duly stamped, unless the contrary is shewn: here it is shewn. In Hart v. Hart the Vice-Chancellor lays down the rule, that an unstamped agreement, though proved, is not evidence. Here it is proved that Ede wished to put an end to the agreement, and took it away to prevent its being put in force. I come to the conclusion, that it never was stamped, and I am therefore in the same position as in the case in the King's Bench. I do not think a Court has any thing to do with the question of stamp; it is a positive law of revenue. You may stamp a copy, and then give evidence of its contents.

March 15.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Have you any cases in which stamped copies have been received in evidence? I may direct the cause to stand over to have an instrument stamped. If Mr. Warren can only state the substance, it can only be read as a copy; then he must be examined to state what the agreement was.

Bacon.—Mr. Warren states that it was a lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, the other provisions might be settled by the Master. (Sampson v. Bromley, 2 Vernon; Sayer v. Pierce, 1 Vesey, sen. 232; Whitfield v. Faussel, ibid. 387—389; Cole v. Gibson, ibid. 503; Shutterley v. Pooley, 5 Carrington & Payne).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot overcome the difficulty arising out of the Stamp Act; the Legislature says instruments shall not be received in evidence when unstamped. The only question, as it appears to me, is, whether it is proved that this deed was not stamped. I shall require very strict proof; I must be satisfied that it was not stamped. The onus rests on the defendant to prove it not stamped; but unless the plaintiff can prove his agreement, or give a copy or parol evidence of its contents, how can it be enforced?

Bacon.—We rely on the admission of the agreement contained in the defendant's answer.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There was some agreement relating to a piece of land, but the terms do not appear. It must be made out beyond reasonable doubt that it was not stamped, that the objection should prevail. Now what is the evidence? When in Mr. Farnell's possession it was not stamped; Ede, when he received it, said the plaintiff should never see it again; it is therefore impossible to presume that he intended to get it stamped, and I cannot come to the conclusion that he took it to be stamped. Then I must conclude that it never was stamped, and if so, a copy of its contents cannot be given in evidence. The plaintiff is therefore driven to rely on the admissions in the defendant's answer, and if I can make out an agreement from the answer with reasonable certainty, that would be conclusive. But the defendant's admissions are too vague and uncertain, and I should not be justified in decreeing a specific performance upon those admissions.

Wakefield asked that the bill might be dismissed with costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—As you have relied on the objection, and the party the defendants represent said the plaintiff should not have the agreement, there must be no costs. If the defendant will waive the objection as to the stamp, the case may be heard upon the merits. How can the defendant have the costs of the appeal when it was his fault that the same objection was not taken at the Rolls?

Wakefield proposed to read the cross examination of Mr. Farnell, the solicitor, to shew misconduct on the plaintiff's part.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You cannot read the cross-examination of a witness before his examination in chief has been used. I have always understood that the answer might be read with a view to costs, but I never understood that evidence might be so read. I never heard the attempt made before. The objection arises from a mere accident; Ede abstracted the agreement and prevented the other party from stamping it. The bill must be dismissed.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, March 29.

BELCHER v. WHITMORE.

Interlocutory application for an order to produce papers and make preliminary inquiries to ascertain the proper parties to the suit.

An order for preliminary inquiries as to parties, &c. will not be made unless it can be shewn that some useful purpose will be served thereby, and unless there appears primâ facie to be some foundation for plaintiff's claim; but where the defendant by his answer positively and directly denies the plaintiff's title, no such order will be made.

In this case Purvis (Prior with him) moved for an order upon the defendants to leave certain documents relating to the cause with the clerk of the records and writs, and also for a reference to the Master to inquire when Frances Whitmore died, and what children she had, &c. The plaintiffs are the assignees of Whitmore, Wells, and Co. bankers, against whom a fiat in bankruptcy was issued in 1841. The bill was filed against several parties claiming to be beneficially interested in, and against the trustees of, a policy of assurance for 5,000*l.* On the marriage, in 1819, of Edmund Whitmore, one of the partners of the firm, the sum of 10,000*l.* stock was settled to the use of himself, his wife and children, in the usual way, with a power of appointment among the children to the husband and wife, and survivor. In 1835, the policy in question was assigned to trustees on the same trusts as those of the marriage settlement. Mrs. Whitmore died, leaving, it was said, seven children. On the 11th of March, 1835 (six days after the assignment of the policy), Mr. Whitmore, on the occasion of the marriage of his daughter Caroline, executed his power of appointment over the stock and policy, and the moneys secured by it, and thereby appointed one-seventh of the whole to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement, without prejudice to any claims afterwards. The trusts of this latter settlement were in favour of the husband, and wife, and children, in the usual way. The bill sought to set aside the deed of assignment of the policy of assurance, as fraudulent against the creditors of the bankrupts, E. Whitmore being at the time insolvent, and as having been made for a voluntary consideration; and the motion now made had for its object to obtain an order for an inquiry as to who were the surviving trustees of the original settlement, the objects of the trusts of both settlements, &c. with a view to have all proper parties before the Court; that being necessary, inasmuch as their interests were sought to be affected. The production of certain documents was also asked and conceded, without opposition by the other side.

Kindersley, Turner, and Freeling, opposed the motion. The inquiry is, or may turn out at the hearing to be useless, and, at all events, it is not absolutely necessary that an inquiry should then be directed, so that it is premature. Besides, to entitle the plaintiffs to come here by an interlocutory application for an order of this kind, they should have made out a primâ facie case on which to ground it; but that they have not done, for the insolvency at the assignment of the policy is expressly denied in the answer, and as to the consideration for the settlement being voluntary, the contemporaneous settlement on his daughter by Mr. Whitmore, so far as concerns her and her children, is an answer to that allegation. The plaintiff, therefore, has no title and no foundation for his claim.

They cited Hawkins v. Hawkins (1 Hare, 543); Topham v. Lightbody (1 Hare, 289); Frost v. Hamilton (4 Beav. 33); and Breeze v. English (2 Hare, 118).

Purvis, in reply, contended that in Topham v. Lightbody the question between the parties was the very point in issue in the cause, and the same thing might be said of Frost v. Hamilton; but here the point is only collateral to the issue; in fact, being only sought with the view of accelerating the suit, by removing obstacles at the hearing, and preventing the necessity of a reference then, for the purpose of adding parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The plaintiffs' object by this motion is to accelerate the cause by rendering it unnecessary to direct at the hearing these preliminary inquiries, and to enable him to have all proper parties before the Court. Such inquiries, however, are not to be granted where no useful purpose is shewn to be thereby attained, nor where the plaintiff has failed to make out a foundation for the title under which he claims. Now here the foundation of the plaintiffs is the alleged insolvency of the settlor at the date of the assignment of the policy. This question is to be litigated, and the right cannot be determined till after the hearing. In the meantime it is absolutely denied by the answer; and as the inquiry must be directed, if at all, on the statements contained in the answer, it is obvious the motion in this case cannot be supported. It may possibly happen, indeed, at the hearing, that some of the defendants, who are now objecting to the motion, may urge an inquiry such as that now sought, upon the ground that all proper parties are not before the Court; but, then, how are they to obtain it? Why, only because it may be necessary in reference to the questions in issue between the parties, and because they may be able to shew, primâ facie, a good case for making the inquiries. But it may turn out quite otherwise, and no inquiry at all may be needed; for if the plaintiffs come to a hearing with their case insufficiently supported by evidence, and the defendants, on the other hand, denying his title, bring forward good evidence to rebut his, the bill will be dismissed, and there will be an end of the matter. I think, as the case stands, I ought not to make an order for these preliminary inquiries. The motion must be dismissed as to these; as to the production of the papers, it is conceded. The costs must be reserved till the hearing.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, April 17.

We subjoin, as we promised in our last, a note of the few cases disposed of on Wednesday the 17th and Thursday the 18th instant, in which any points of law were decided.

DOE dem. STARLING v. HILLIER.

What protected as a privileged communication.

Andrews, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of the improper reception of evidence. The question was, whether an account sent to the testator of the lessor of the plaintiff by the attorney of the defendant, at the desire of the defendant, but as the witness on his cross-examination said, with a view to a compromise, which was not effected, wherein an admission which established the title set up by the lessor of the plaintiff was made, was a privileged communication.

The COURT was of opinion that it was not.

Rule refused.

DIBB v. BURGESS.

Statute of Limitations—Payment.

J. Addison moved to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit. The action was in debt for goods sold and delivered, and on an account stated. Pleas, never indebted, and the Statute of Limitations. The plaintiff sued as surviving partner of Emanuel Dibb, who died in February 1839, for money due from the defendant, who was a publican, for liquors supplied to him. The evidence given for the purpose of taking the case out of the Statute of Limitations, was an entry dated June 1839, in the book of the publican, on the credit side of the account, for refreshment supplied to the son of Emanuel Dibb, who was clerk to the plaintiff, and his father; a mode of payment which had been made in the lifetime of Emanuel Dibb, and for the last time in the year 1833. The learned judge who tried the case (Rolfe, B.), left it to the jury to say whether the entry in question shewed a mutual credit or payment. It was submitted that this was a point of law for the judge to decide; and also that an acknowledgment of payment, after the death of Emanuel Dibb, was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute.

By the COURT.—A payment is sufficient; and payment may be made at any time and in any manner. The transaction of 1833 shews what was meant. The question was one of fact, and was rightly left to the jury. Rule refused.

DOE dem. BRICE v. BRICE.

If a deed be produced from the right custody, and possession has gone in accordance with its provisions for a great number of years, it will be presumed to have been duly executed, though the seals appear to have been torn off, and no explanation is given of the cancellation; nor will it be necessary after such a lapse of time to prove seisin in the original grantor.

This was a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and to enter a nonsuit, or verdict for the defendant. The points were, first, whether the production from the custody of the family attorney of a lease and release, being the settlement under which the plaintiff claimed, and from which the seals had apparently been cut off, but without any explanation of the cancellation, coupled with evidence of possession for a hundred years, in accordance with the provisions of these indentures, was sufficient evidence that these deeds were duly executed; and secondly, whether it was necessary to prove seisin in the original setlor.

Rule refused.

On two other points, Rule nisi.

LEVIEUX v. BARFIELD.

Statute of Limitations—Construction of the exception in favour of plaintiffs beyond seas.

This was an action by a banker at Calais, to recover the sum of 6,650 francs for principal and interest. The defendant pleaded inter alia the Statute of Limitations, to which the plaintiff replied, that at the said time, &c., he resided, and always since hath resided, and still does reside, beyond seas. The verdict was for the plaintiff.

Platt, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, or to reduce the damages, on the ground that the plaintiff had sued for and recovered more than legal interest; on which ground the Court granted a rule nisi. He also moved to arrest the judgment, on the ground that the exception in the Statute of Limitations extended only to cases where the plaintiff was temporarily absent beyond the seas at the time at which the action occurred, and not to the case of a plaintiff who was permanently resident abroad. Rule refused.

Thursday, April 18.

DOE dem. BAKER v. RAWLINS.

Production of title-deeds in evidence.

Barlow moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence.

The plaintiff claimed as mortgagee under an indenture of mortgage executed in 1843. The defendant was in possession as tenant under an elegit in 1843, and derived title under a marriage settlement, in the trustees of which settlement it was contended the legal estate was outstanding. For the purpose of proving this, an attorney of the name of Tilson, who was a trustee of the settlement, was called to produce the deed in question; but the plaintiff objected that it was part of his title, and that the witness held it as trustee and solicitor for him, and that he ought not, therefore, to be compelled to produce it. The learned judge who tried the cause told the witness that he could not be compelled to produce it, as it was part of his (the witness's) title-deeds; and the deed was not produced, although the witness had not previously objected to produce it. It was submitted that this evidence ought to have been received. No doubt the witness had been solicitor to the lessor of the plaintiff, but he held the deed as trustee for the defendant, and ought, therefore, to have been compelled to produce it.

Where a brief was delivered after a cause had been taken out of its turn as an undefended cause, the Court refused a new trial.

Hurdlestone moved for a new trial. The cause stood sixth in the cause-list, and a brief had been delivered to counsel in the forenoon of the first day for the trial of causes on behalf of the defendant. The brief was delivered in the Crown Court, but the learned counsel immediately proceeded to the Nisi Prius Court, when he found that the cause had already been taken out of its turn as an undefended cause, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff. It must be admitted that it was not sworn that the brief had been delivered before the cause was tried; but, if the cause had not been taken out of its turn, it would have been delivered in time. Rule refused.

If a memorandum be produced to refresh a witness's memory, the counsel for the party against whom it is produced may cross-examine upon it, and submit it to the jury, for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the witness, without entitling the opposite party to a reply.

Flood moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial.

A witness for the defendant had referred at the trial to a book of accounts to refresh her memory; and the counsel for the plaintiff, in his reply to the jury, had commented at great length on this book, which had been subsequently submitted to the jury. He submitted, that if the book was put in evidence at all, it became the evidence of the plaintiff, and that he, the learned counsel, ought to have been permitted to address the jury upon it.

By the COURT.—A memorandum produced to refresh a witness's memory is not evidence for all purposes, but the counsel for the opposite party has a right to cross-examine upon it, and comment upon it, and submit it to the jury for the purpose of examining its fitness for this purpose, and testing the correctness of the witness; and he does not, by so doing, entitle the counsel producing it to address the jury in reply to his observations. Rule refused.

Construction of contract.

Baines, Q. C. moved for a new trial, or to reduce the damages, on the ground of misdirection.

The question was upon the interpretation of a contract, made by the plaintiff, to furnish the defendant with certain quantities of salt, at any part of the year 1843, at the rate of nine shillings per ton, but the defendant to have the benefit of the market price for the time when he should order the salt, if it should be less than nine shillings. It was proved that the only sales which had taken place for a month before were at six shillings per ton; but it also proved that those sales were very small, and that there had been a general disinclination and refusal among the salt-dealers to sell at that sum. The learned judge (Coltman, J.) told the jury that they might calculate the real value at the time to be something above the price at which those sales had been effected, and the jury accordingly found a verdict for the plaintiff calculated at seven shillings per ton. It was now contended for the defendant, that the actual sales of salt were the only standard upon which the amount could properly be computed.

Martin, Q. C. then applied to the Court only to grant the rule upon 423*l*. for which judgment had been allowed to go by default, being paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

Right of way—Co-existence of public with private way.

The Solicitor-General moved to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved on those issues found for the defendant at the trial, before Wightman, J. at the last sitting in London.

The action was on the case for obstruction of a right of way which the plaintiff claimed as appurtenant to a house of the plaintiff in Buckingham-street, Strand, along Buckingham-street, and through a certain iron gate on to and along a certain terrace on the banks of the Thames.

The way claimed by the plaintiff was a private way, and as that part of it which passed along Buckingham-street was a public highway, it was contended that the way alleged was not made out.

Lord DENMAN mentioned a case in which it was held that a private way having existed before the dedication of a road to the public, might continue to co-exist with it. (Allen v. Ormond, 8 East, 4.)

The evidence of the dedication of Buckingham-street was much more recent than that of the private way. Rule nisi.

S. Temple, on behalf of the defendants, against whom the verdict had been found at the trial, moved for a new trial.

The case was tried before Rolfe, B. at Liverpool, and a verdict found for some of the defendants, and against the rest. It was an action for the infringement of a patent for improvements in the construction of windlasses for ships. It was contended at the trial on the part of the defendant that the invention of the plaintiff was merely the application of old principles to new purposes, and that in order to constitute the subject of a patent, both the principle and the purpose must be new.

The learned judge did not coincide in this view of the law, and the jury, under his direction, found for the plaintiff against several of the defendants. (Saunders v. Aston, 3 B. & Ad. 881; Losh v. Hayne, 1 Webster's Cases on Patents.) Rule nisi.

AIKIN and ANOTHER v. FAITH and ANOTHER.

Admissibility of witness—Privity of contract.

Martin, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of improper reception of evidence and misdirection.

The plaintiffs are ship-brokers in Liverpool. The action, which was tried at the last assizes at Liverpool, was assumpsit for commission. Defendants were part owners of a vessel, called the Taglioni.

In 1840, a merchant in Liverpool desired the plaintiffs to charter a vessel for him to proceed to the East Indies. After considerable negotiation with the firm of Chapman and Willis, the ship-brokers, at Liverpool, of the owners of the Taglioni, she was chartered for the voyage. She was subsequently sold to the merchant. No application was made for the commission until October 1843, when, after some correspondence, defendants offered to pay plaintiffs half the commission. At the trial, Mr. Willis, one of the brokers of the defendants, was called for the plaintiff. On the voire dire he stated, that by the custom of Liverpool, the whole of the commission was paid by the shipowner to the broker of the merchant, and that afterwards half the commission was paid by the merchant's broker to the shipowner's broker. He also stated that if the plaintiffs succeeded in this action, he would be entitled to such half, and that if he did not succeed, he should get nothing. It was then objected that Mr. Willis was a person on whose behalf the action was actually brought, and, therefore, within the exception in Lord Denman's Act, and was still, even since that Act, an incompetent witness. The learned judge, however, admitted the evidence. Mr. Willis then proved the facts, and it appeared that the plaintiffs were employed by the merchant only, and not at all by the defendants; but that by the universal custom of Liverpool the plaintiffs would be paid by the defendants as above stated. It was contended for the defendants, that there was no privity of contract between them and the plaintiffs; but that, on the contrary, it was the duty of the plaintiffs to act adversely to the defendants by getting the vessel chartered at as low a rate of freight as possible. The defendants did not live or carry on business at Liverpool, and were not shewn to be cognizant of the custom. Rule nisi.

FOPPING v. HAYTER.

Bill of sale—How far fraudulent against future creditors.

Knowles, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The action was for goods sold and delivered, to which the defendant pleaded, first, never indebted; second, that the goods were the goods of one W. J. whose agent the plaintiff was for the purpose of selling them, and that W. J. was indebted to defendant in a greater amount than the sum in which defendant was indebted in respect of the goods, and that defendant offered to set-off and allow to W. J. and the plaintiff as his agent the amount of the said goods. The plaintiff, by his replication, denied that they were the goods of W. J.

The cause was tried at Carlisle before Rolfe, B. It was proved that in 1839 W. J. was a tenant of the plaintiff at Port Carlisle; that his goods were seized by an execution creditor, that the plaintiff gave notice of rent due to him; and that the creditor in consequence withdrew his execution; that W. J. then persuaded the plaintiff not to distrain, but to take a bill of sale of the goods; and that W. J. then continued to occupy the plaintiff's house as a ready-furnished one. The defendant did not become a creditor until after these transactions. Rolfe, B. directed the jury that if they thought the bill of sale a fraudulent one, it conveyed no property to the plaintiff, and that they must find for the defendant. For the plaintiff it was contended that the verdict was against evidence, and also that the judge should have told the jury that the defendant, having bought the goods from the plaintiff, was estopped from saying that they were not his; and also that even if the bill of sale was fraudulent, as against the creditors existing at the time of its execution, it was not void as against those who only became so afterwards.

Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5 was cited. In the course of the case Lord Denman cited Carr v. Hinchcliffe (4 B. & C. 547). Twyne's case, 1 Smith's Leading Cases, was also cited. Rule nisi.

BUNNETT v. BREES.

Alexander moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, surprise, and verdict against evidence.

The case was tried before Wightman, J. at the last sittings at Guildhall, and a verdict found for the defendant. Action for goods sold and delivered.

Plea, non-assumpsit.

The question was, whether certain plate-glass and iron shutters had been supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant, or to a person named Couchman, who had made some alterations in the defendant's shop. There was some slight difference in the evidence between the facts which applied to the glass and those which related to the shutters, but the only question made to the trial was, whether the defendants were or were not liable for the whole. After the jury had been out of Court for an hour, they returned and asked the judge whether they might find for the plaintiff for part of the demand. The judge told them, in the presence of the plaintiff's counsel, that the only question between the parties seemed to be, whether there was any liability. The counsel said nothing. This was the misdirection now complained of.

Alexander contended that the judge should have pointed out the difference in the evidence.

WIGHTMAN, J.—That was as the case was treated by the counsel on both sides. The counsel were present, and they had always said that there was no other question. I took your sitting quiet as an assent.

Lord DENMAN.—When the jury come in and say, "Are we bound to find for the whole or not?" if the counsel sits by and says nothing, it is to be presumed that he is satisfied with what is done. It does not follow that the jury would have found that way at all.

Alexander.—It would have been most unseemly and indecorous in me to interfere.

Lord DENMAN.—Not at all. I do not think so. Counsel often, in the excitement of a cause, interrupt judges in summing up when they had better not do so, but in this case you would have been perfectly justified.

The rule was then granted on the two other grounds.

The clause in the Court of Requests Act (48 Geo. 3, c. 110), which provides that no person shall act as commissioner unless possessed of certain property "above all charges and incumbrances," and that "proof of such qualification shall be on the defendant," means merely that he shall prove affirmatively that he has such property.

Godson, Q. C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection and improper rejection of evidence.

It was an action brought under the Stafford Court of Requests Act (48 Geo. 3, c. 110), to recover penalties for acting as a commissioner of the court without a qualification. The clause provided that no person should act as a commissioner unless he was possessed of certain real or personal property, as therein mentioned, "above all charges and incumbrances whatever:"—

"And in every such action the proof of such qualification shall be on the defendant, and it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that the person had acted as a commissioner in the execution of this Act."

PARKE, B. before whom the cause was tried, and a verdict found for the defendant, refused to permit a witness to be asked whether the defendant's firm had not debts exceeding their property. He told the jury that the statute provided that the defendant must possess certain real or personal property above charges or incumbrances; but that those words must be construed strictly, and did not mean just debts.

Lord DENMAN.—It may mean mortgages, but not debts.

PATTERSON, J.—Possibly judgment debts might be within the meaning.

Lord DENMAN.—It appears to me that the judge was quite right. Charges and incumbrances mean specific charges on the property which he is shewn to possess. How is a man to perform an impossibility? If he has no debts, how could he prove it?

PATTERSON, J.—The clause which throws the onus on the defendant must mean merely that he shall prove affirmatively that he has that property.

Lease—Covenant to insure.

James moved to enter a verdict for the defendant or a nonsuit, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial.

The action was tried before Lord Denman at the last assizes for the county of Kent. The plaintiff sought to recover the property in question from the defendant, who held it by a lease from the former owner, from whom the plaintiff had bought the reversion. The lease contained a covenant to insure the property in a particular manner, which had never been strictly observed or insisted upon by the original lessor; but immediately upon the plaintiff's becoming entitled to the reversion, he sought to avail himself of this as a forfeiture of the defendant's term. For the defendant it was contended that as the strict performance of the covenant had been dispensed with by permission of the lessor, he had a right to some notice before the omission could be taken advantage of.

DENMAN, C. J.—I thought it a most cruel advantage to take at the trial; but my impression was, that as it was insisted upon, it was in strictness a forfeiture. Rule nisi.

The cause was tried before Tindal, C. J. at the last assizes at Lincoln, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. The defendant called as a witness one of the lessors of the plaintiff, who was objected to on the part of the plaintiff, but admitted by the judge.

Miller.—There are a great many cases as to the admissibility of a party to the suit who has allowed judgment to go by default. I can, however, find no instance where an existing party to the suit has given evidence. It would be contrary to the policy by which parties to the suit are excluded from giving evidence on either side, and would subject them to the very temptations which the law, by their exclusion, seeks to avoid.

On the 12th May, 1842, the rent was altered to 242*l.* A notice to quit was given to end 12th May, 1843. It was contended for the defendant that the increased rent in 1842 was an alteration of the contract in a material part, and created a new tenancy from year to year from that time, which could not be terminated by notice until two years after its commmencement.

PATTESON, J.—The contrary of that has been decided. I think there is a decision to that effect.

Udall.—It has been distinctly stated by this Court, and by the Exchequer, that any alteration in a contract makes it a new one.

The action was tried before Denman, C. J. at Guildhall, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 40s. Plaintiff had made use of violent threats to an officer of the society, and had refused to apologize. Every opportunity was given to him to do so before any step was taken. At last, the matter was brought before the committee who resolved that a motion should be laid before a general meeting of the society for his expulsion. The motion was made and carried. The plaintiff was not present at the committee meeting; but at the general meeting he was heard both by himself and his friends before the resolution passed. By one of the society's rules, the committee had the sole power of determining upon what proposals shall be laid before the general body, and no business can be done by the society which has not first emanated from the committee, but the acts of the latter not to be valid till confirmed by the society. Godson, Q. C. moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection and a verdict against evidence.

This was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, tried before Parke, B. at the last assizes at Gloucester. The plaintiff claimed title to the locus in quo through one W. Marshall, from whom he had bought it in 1840. The defendants were the steward and servants of Lord Sudeley, the Lord of the Manor.

Anthony Marshall, the father of William, had been put into a cottage by the parish, about forty years ago. While he lived there, his son William enclosed this piece of land, which was near, but not immediately adjoining, the cottage. William was a gardener, and made use of the land as a nursery garden. The father died thirty-one years ago. More than twenty years ago William left the cottage and went into another parish. He subsequently came back, and built himself another cottage on the common, at some little distance, but he continued thoughout to occupy the piece of land in question. Gurney, B. told the jury that if they thought that William, who was under age at the time when he originally enclosed the land, had taken it in as appurtenant to the cottage in which his father lived under the parish, the enclosure must be taken to have been on their behalf, and through them on behalf of Lord Sudeley, whose tenants they were, and that if he originally occupied under the parish, he must be taken to have continued to do so, and to have gained no title to the land.

The jury found for the defendants, but said they thought Lord Sudeley ought to pay 20*l*. for the land.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF BEDINGHAM.

A complaint in writing, upon which an order of removal is obtained, purporting to be the complaint of one overseer, is nevertheless good, if the complaint was in fact made by him on behalf of all the parish officers.

Where a father and his children are removed to their father's settlement, it is not necessary, for the examination and the order of removal, to state affirmatively that the said children have not gained any settlement of their own, if they shew that the children are settled in the father's parish.

The examination, after setting forth a settlement by hiring and service, set forth several acts of relief to the pauper whilst residing out of the appellant parish, and, among others, attendance on his wife during her confinement with her four children. The ages of the children were given, but not the dates of the several acts of relief. Held, that the statement of relief was sufficiently given.

The examination stated a settlement by hiring and service, and the subsequent administration of relief whilst the pauper was residing out of the parish, the grounds of appeal stated that the pauper did not gain a settlement in the appellant parish, at the hearing, the respondents gave no evidence of the hiring and service, but relied on the relief administered. Held, that the appellants were entitled, under the above ground of appeal, to shew that the relief was administered by mistake.

This was an appeal against an order for the removal of a man, his wife, and their four children, whose ages were given in the examination and order, in which the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court.

The examinations set out a settlement gained by the husband by hiring and service, and subsequent relief administered to him and his family at several times, by the parish officers of the appellant parish, whilst he was residing out of the parish, and, inter alia, attendance by the parish surgeon on his wife during her several confinements with her four children, but no mention was made in the examinations of the date of the service, or of the dates at which the relief was given.

The grounds of appeal relied upon were—

1st. That no sufficient complaint had been laid before the removing magistrates to give them jurisdiction.

2nd. That the said husband did not gain a settlement in the appellant parish.

3rd. That the examinations and the order of removal were insufficient, so far as regarded the children who were above seven years of age, for not stating that they had not respectively gained any settlement of their own.

4th. That the examinations were insufficient, for not shewing the date of the hiring and service, and the dates of the several acts of relief.

At the hearing, it appeared that the complaint was made in writing by one of the overseers, in his own name only; but it was admitted that he, in fact, acted as the agent and with the authority of all the parish officers; the order itself professed to be made upon the complaint of all the parish officers.

The sessions overruled the objections of the appellants, subject to the opinion of this Court.

At the hearing of the appeal the respondents did not give any evidence of the hiring and service, but rested their case on proof of the relief administered to the paupers whilst residing out of the parish. The appellants then tendered evidence for the purpose of proving that the relief in question was administered to them under a mistake. This evidence was objected to by the respondents, as not being admissible under the grounds of appeal delivered by the appellants. The sessions overruled the objection, admitted the evidence, and quashed the order of removal, subject to the opinion of this Court.

Held by the COURT, that the sessions were right on all the points; that the complaint, which need not have been in writing at all, was clearly made on behalf of all the parish officers, though nominally made by one only, and was stated to have been the complaint of all in the order of removal; that the relief was set out with sufficient certainty, as it appeared to have been relief given from time to time since the marriage of the adult paupers, inter alia, at the times of the births of their several children, which were definitely fixed, as the ages of the children were given; that the examination and order were perfectly good with regard to the children above the age of nurture, as they stated them to be settled in the appellant parish, and it was unnecessary to allege affirmatively that they had not gained any settlements of their own; and that the evidence that the relief was administered by mistake was properly received under the ground of appeal, that the said father had not gained a settlement in the appellant parish; the effect of such evidence being to explain the evidence upon which the respondents relied in support of their settlement, and to shew that the evidence of the respondents did not, in fact, establish such settlement.

In proving a settlement by parish apprenticeship since the 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, the order for the apprenticeship and allowance of the indenture by the magistrates must be proved. It is not sufficient to prove the execution of the indenture by the parish officers and the master.

This was an appeal against an order of removal.

The settlement relied upon was by a parish apprenticeship since the 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, and the question was, whether it was sufficient to prove the execution of the indenture of the apprenticeship by the parish officers and the master, without proving the order for the apprenticeship and allowance of the indenture by the magistrates. The sessions decided that it was sufficient, and confirmed the order of removal, subject to the opinion of this Court.

This was an appeal against an order of removal of Ann Ford and her children. The examination of the said Ann Ford, after shewing the settlement of herself and her children in the appellant parish, proceeded as follows:—"I and my said children are inhabitants of the said (respondent) parish, and are chargeable to the said parish." Another witness on his examination stated, "I am one of the relieving officers of the union of B.; I administered the relief ordered for the said Ann Ford on account of the said respondent parish. The said Ann Ford and her four children are now chargeable to the said parish."

The grounds of appeal stated that the examinations did not contain any sufficient evidence that the paupers were chargeable at the time of the making of the order to the said respondent parish.

The sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court as to the sufficiency of the evidence of chargeability in the examinations.

Cur. adv. vult.

Monday, April 22.

BROOKS v. BOCKING.

Watson, Q. C. moved to enter a nonsuit, or to arrest the judgment.

The action was tried on Saturday before Coleridge, J. in the Bail Court, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. The question was whether, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, a bill for work done before the Act, and containing no items which before the Act would have been taxable, must, under the provisions of that Act, be again delivered as therein required, and a month allowed to elapse before any action can be brought, or whether a delivery before the passing of the Act is sufficient.

Rule nisi.

In the same case Platt, on behalf of the plaintiff, subsequently applied for a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto, on account of the badness of the plea, which, in substance, raised the defence above stated.

Rule nisi.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF SURREY.

Wallinger and Corner shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

The sessions had held that the notice of appeal was not sufficiently signed by a majority of the parish officers. There were, in fact, two churchwardens, two overseers, and one guardian in the appellant parish. The guardian was elected by the parish to act for the union generally, under the provisions of the New Poor Law Act. The notice purported, in its commencement, to be given by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of All Hallows. It was signed by two of th overseers; by one W. H. "on behalf of W. P. H. churchwarden;" and by John Elsley, guardian.

PATTESON, J.—There is no such thing as a guardian of a parish under the New Poor Law Act; he is the officer of the union elected by the parish.

It was contended, on behalf of the appellant parish, that either the signature on behalf of the absent churchwarden must be presumed to have been by his authority, or that the guardian was a parish officer, and that he and the two overseers constituted a majority.

DENMAN, C. J.—I think that the justices were right in refusing to receive this notice of appeal. If an Act of Parliament requires it to be under the hand of the majority of the parish officers, they ought to see that it is so. If one man signs for another, it does not appear that he had any authority to do so: and even if the deliberation of the parties before they sign is the really important thing, and the signature is only the evidence of that deliberation, then it may have been the deliberation of him who signs, and not of him for whom he purports to sign. As to the guardian, we do not think him a parish officer.

PATTESON, J.—The 81st clause does not say that it shall be signed by the majority of the parish officers, but by the majority of the overseers, or by the guardians, or any three or more of them. I cannot find that, within the meaning of this Act, there are any guardians of this parish. The guardian under it is an officer of the union, not of the parish, except under the 39th section, which does not apply here.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I think, in order to make the signature that of the person on whose behalf it purports to be, there should be evidence of his authority, and no presumption can be made in favour of it. I do not think this guardian was an officer of the parish, nor was he at the time acting under any authority given him by the Act.

Irregularity—Declaring without appearance.

Pearson moved to rescind an order of Coleridge, J. and to set aside the declaration and subsequent proceedings.

A writ had issued against the defendant and had been served, but no appearance had ever been entered either by the defendant or under the statute. A declaration was afterwards delivered, and interlocutory judgment signed for want of a plea. Upon an application to Coleridge, J. to set aside the proceedings, he dismissed it with costs. This was the order sought to be rescinded. The application had been made to Wightman, J. in the Bail Court, on the third day of Term, and he referred it to the full Court.

Penal action—Venue—Arrest of judgment—Allegation, contra formam statuti.

Erle, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained, to enter a nonsuit or a verdict for defendant, or to arrest the judgment.

The action was upon the statute 1 & 2 Philip & Mary, c. 12, for taking above fourpence for poundage upon a distress. The rule was obtained on two points: first, that the action was local, and that the venue should have been in the county where the offence took place; and, second, that notice of action should have been given; and also, in arrest of judgment, that the declaration did not conclude contra formam statuti.

It was contended, for the plaintiff, that this was an action by the party grieved.

A distinction has been taken between action by the party grieved and by common informers, or popular actions. Formerly a question arose, as to costs in actions where the right was given by a penal statute. The Court then took the distinction, that if the action were by a party grieved, he should have his costs, but a common informer should not. It has been held, that the statute of James, by which the venue is made local in actions on penal Acts, does not extend to subsequent statutes. With respect to the point in arrest of judgment, it was submitted, that it sufficiently appeared on the face of the declaration that the offence was against the statute, without a formal allegation. The objection could only prevail on special demurrer.

Taprell, contrà.—First, the venue is local. It is a penal action. In Earl Spencer v. Swannell it is decided, that an action for not setting out tithes is penal. It is submitted, that the statutes 31 Eliz. c. 5, and 21 Jas. c. 24, apply to all penal actions, whether by the party grieved or party popular. Although the latter Act is entitled, "An Act concerning common informers," yet the title is immaterial in construing it, and cannot restrict its enactments.

The second section enacts, that any declaration or information at any time to be tried or exhibited under any penal statute, shall not be tried in any county except where the cause of action shall have arisen.

No language can be more general or comprehensive than that is. The statute uses the words, "all penal actions;" and the question is, what is the plain construction of those words. The fourth section provides that that statute shall not extend to certain actions, some of which must be brought by the party grieved. Why should these special exceptions be made, if all actions so brought were excluded from the previous clause? 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5, only extends to certain classes of penal statutes. With respect to the point in arrest of judgment —— Here he was stopped by the Court.

DENMAN, C. J.—As to the point for a nonsuit, or verdict of not guilty, the Court will take time to consider. We think the rule should be made absolute to arrest the judgment, for want of the allegation that the offence was against the statute.

BELCHER v. SAMBOURNE.

Platt, Q. C. and E. James and Lush, shewed cause against a rule for a new trial obtained by Erle, Q. C.

The action was for money had and received by defendant to the use of the plaintiff, as assignees of a bankrupt estate.

Pleas, non-assumpsit, and plaintiffs not assignees.

The points upon which the rule was granted were misdirection and misreception of evidence. The act of bankruptcy relied upon, was the paying the very money which was now sought to be recovered. The defendant had himself struck a docket, and issued a fiat against the bankrupt, and had made use of his standing in that position towards him to procure from him payment in full of his debt, when the bankrupt was not in a position to pay the same amount to his other creditors. This was made an act of bankruptcy by 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8, and by the same statute it is provided that the assignees of a second fiat may recover back the money paid, and that the creditor shall forfeit his debt.

Upon the trial, the fiat issued by the defendant was tendered in evidence. It had not been registered pursuant to 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 114, s. 8. It was received by the judge, and he directed the jury that the act of bankruptcy was made out. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

For the plaintiff, it was now contended that the act of bankruptcy was made out, and that the fiat was properly received; but that, even supposing it ought not to have been received, that it was unnecessary, for that the proof of striking a docket would have been sufficient to bring the parties within the statute. The fiat only requires to be entered to give it validity in the proceedings in bankruptcy; but it may be put in without, as a mere piece of paper, in order to prove the fact of its having been issued.

Erle, Q. C. and Cowling, contrà.—This rule ought to be made absolute for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no evidence of an act of bankruptcy, or, at all events, for a new trial, on the ground of the improper reception of this fiat in evidence. The fiat cannot be used for any purpose unless duly entered of record. The language of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 114, s. 8, is almost verbatim that used in the Stamp Acts.

PATTESON, J.—But a document may be used in evidence without a stamp, if it be part of a fraudulent transaction, for the purpose of shewing the fraud; so here, perhaps, if this be a fraudulent fiat, it may be admissible in order to prove that fact itself. [There was no fraud suggested.] But there is no act of bankruptcy proved. This is not a question with which a court of common law can deal. The Legislature did not intend that this should be an act of bankruptcy for all purposes, but only that the Court of Review might treat it as such, if they pleased. In Davis v. Holden, this Court seems to have the same impression.

Cur. adv. vult.

Tuesday, April 23.

DOE d. m. —— v. SMITH and OTHERS.

This was a special case, stated for the opinion of the Court. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled through a person named Mary Shearman, deceased. The defendants were churchwardens and overseers, and claimed title under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, by virtue of their possession of the cottage and garden in question for more than twenty years.

Mary Shearman purchased the property in 1770. She died in 1816, and left the part of it now in question to one John Shearman, by her will. John Shearman died six weeks afterwards, and left a son, John Shearman the younger, who was then a minor, and came of age in 1833. Old John Shearman had been present at the reading the will of Mary Shearman; and upon hearing the devise to him, he asked a person called Wilde, who was then in possession of the whole premises, and to whom another part had been devised, for a spade. Wilde, who was offended at the whole not being left to him, refused him one, and the old man then went into the garden, and declaring that he took possession, turned up some earth with his stick, and went to the door of the cottage, and, finding it locked, struck upon the lock once or twice. He never took possession in any other way. A person named Blundell had, during the life of Mary Shearman, occupied this part of the cottage, and the parish officers had paid her one shilling a week rent on his behalf. They continued to pay that rent after her death, and the wife of old John Shearman received it more than once during his life. Soon after the death of old John, his wife applied to the parish for relief for herself and her son. Before they would give her relief, they asked her, in order to see that she had no resources of her own, "What about the old house?" to which she replied, "Oh, that is my son's when he comes of age." Nothing was done with respect to the right of John Shearman the younger till 1833, nor was any rent received after the old man's death. The parish had substantially repaired the cottage. He then employed an attorney and a law-surveyor, and went over with them to the place in question. They then found by the devise, and by measuring the land, that Wilde, who had continued to occupy the other part of the premises, had built a pig-sty upon the part belonging to John Shearman. They then told Wilde of it, and that it must be removed, and accordingly a great part of it was pulled down. They did not enter the cottage. In 1840 Blundell, on being asked whose tenant he was, said, 'The property is John Shearman's; I am his tenant."

Erle, Q. C. contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the entry of old John Shearman was, under the circumstances, a complete taking possession of the premises, and that young John having been a minor when the right fell upon him by the death of the old man, the statute would not begin to run against him till 1833, when he came of age; but that, at all events, supposing the statute to have begun to run immediately upon the right of the old man accruing, the acts of John Shearman the younger and the declaration of Blundell would take it out of the statute.

M. Smith, contrà.—The argument on the other side is, that there was a disability arising from the infancy of John Shearman the younger, at the time when the right of entry first accrued; but we say that the right of entry accrued to old John during his life, and that there never was any actual possession by him. There was a mere entry; and the statute provides that no mere entry shall be deemed possession.

PATTESON, J.—That section applies to cases where some one else is in adverse possession; but in this case no one was in possession when John Shearman entered. The right was cast upon him, and no one was in possession.

DENMAN, C. J.—Were the parish ever in possession? If they relieved Blundell, by paying his rent for him, then he, and not the parish, was the tenant.

But if they took the house, and put him into it, he was their servant. After the death of Mary Shearman, rent was paid for some time to Wilde; and that would be a wrongful receipt of rent, and a discontinuance of possession by the present plaintiff.

Erle, contrà.—There is nothing in the argument on the other side. These parish officers have taken possession of the house, because they have paid considerable sums by way of relief to different members of the family. Even if the plaintiff has been out of possession, yet Wilde and Blundell, the only persons who had possession, have given up all claim; and it cannot be said that if a person occupies for a number of years, and then goes out, that any intruder who has entered, and completed the twenty years, has gained a title against the owner. It must be assumed that Wilde and Blundell gave up possession in favour of Shearman.

EVANS v. GWYNNE.

Prohibition—Jurisdiction of Ecclesiastical Court.

This was a demurrer to a declaration in prohibition. Mr. Gwynne, the now defendant, had taken proceedings in the Consistory Court against Mrs. Evans, for certain verbal slander, spoken of him in the Welsh language, which imputed to him some matters only cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Courts, but also some other matters punishable temporally, and especially some facts amounting to an indecent assault. Judgment had been given, and sentence passed in the court below before proceedings were taken in prohibition.

Bovill, in support of the demurrer.—Unless the want of jurisdiction is quite clear, the Court will not interfere after sentence, but will assume every thing in support of jurisdiction. It appears here that some of the acts complained of were within the jurisdiction of the Court. The terms of the judgment below are such, that it does not necessarily appear that it passed upon all the matters complained of; and that being so, the Court, at this stage of the proceedings, will assume that it passed upon those only upon which it might properly pass. These proceedings are pro salute animæ only, and not for damages.

V. Williams, contrà.—The Spiritual Court had no jurisdiction in this case. If the prohibition is not to go here, it would be difficult to suppose a case in which the Court would grant it after sentence. The principle is undeniable, that no defamatory words are cognizable in those Courts, except such as impute an offence exclusively cognizable by them.

Bovill was heard in reply.

DENMAN, L.C.J.—This is a suit in prohibition from the Consistory Court in respect of a suit by Rev. — Gwynne, for defamatory words spoken of him in Welsh by Mary Evans. Those words clearly import a temporal offence, and therefore, primâ facie, are not the subject of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. A great number of authorities are collected in Com. Dig. tit. Prohibition, shewing that in such cases prohibition goes if part of the words are actionable, though the rest are only subject of spiritual cognizance. I think, therefore, these proceedings might have been prohibited in the first instance. The question, then, is, whether the plaintiff in prohibition makes it distinctly appear that the sentence was in respect of words actionable at common law. If the judgment had merely said, as it was in a case cited, that the words had been proved "for the most part," then the Court might have assumed, after sentence, that the words for which judgment was given were those only over which they had cognizance. But I think this judgment cannot be so construed. It says that several scandalous and defamatory words have been proved. I think that clearly proceeds upon all the words previously mentioned. It is quite necessary that there should be some limit to the extent to which these courts exercise jurisdiction. By only coupling actionable words with others not actionable, they might, if Mr. Bovill's argument prevailed, have jurisdiction over every thing, and this Court could not interfere after sentence. I think we should see that the sentence in such cases clearly appears not to have been passed for the whole. In this case I think it does apply to the whole, and the demurrer must be overruled.

The rest of the Court concurred.

ROBINSON v GORE.

Coverture—Liability of the wife during outlawry of the husband.

Outlawry of the husband does not render the wife liable for debts contracted by her.

Declaration in assumpsit. First count alleged in substance, that the plaintiff lent to the defendant 400*l*. for which she gave her promissory note, the defendant then being a feme covert; and that afterwards, defendant's husband was outlawed in a civil action; and that afterwards and during the life of her husband, and while he was so outlawed, and while the said money was so due and owing, the defendant promised to pay the amount of the note.

Second count, account stated.

To the first count, demurrer.

To the second, plea of coverture.

Joinder in demurrer.

Replication to the second plea, that the husband of the defendant was, at the time of the stating the account, an outlaw, and had departed beyond the seas; and that the defendant had separate property settled to her own use.

Demurrer and joinder.

In support of the demurrer, it was contended that the separate maintenance made no difference in the defendant's liability. It was true that a class of cases might be found in which, where a lady had a separate maintenance and had herself incurred debts, the Courts have refused to discharge her out of custody when taken on a writ of capias under the old law; but these are quite distinguishable. It has never been held, that at common law she would not, on that account, avail herself of the plea of coverture. There is no instance in which the Courts have recognized a right to sue a married woman. As to the outlawry, unless the husband is civiliter mortuus at the time when the cause of action accrues, no action will lie against the wife. This is not the case here. A person under civil outlawry is not exempt from any process of the Court. He has no immunity from these debts. The other side must shew that the effect of the outlawry is to suspend the matrimonial contract. If this were so, the wife might marry again, which is absurd.

Willes, contrà, contended that the action would lie against a feme covert under these circumstances. The wife of a convict sentenced to be transported may sue or be sued. The person outlawed can maintain no action. His outlawry might be pleaded in abatement. If the argument on the other side be correct, if Mrs. Gore were run over in the street and seriously injured, she must sue in the name of her husband, and his outlawry might be pleaded; so that she would be deprived of her remedy altogether.

PATTESON J.—I really cannot think that there is the slightest doubt about this case. The authorities shew that a person who is outlawed in a civil proceeding is not civiliter mortuus: and unless this lady's husband was so, the wife could not bind herself. It may be in an action of trespass there might be, as has been suggested, a plea in abatement. I do not see that we can stretch the law to say that he is civiliter mortuus. Even in one of the cases where the husband was an alien enemy, it was held that when once he had been in this country and left his wife here, she is in the same position as an Englishwoman. We do not think there are any facts stated on this record which put the defendant in the same position as if she were not married.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF STAFFORDSHIRE.

DENMAN, C. J. delivered judgment in this case, of which we are obliged to defer the full report until next week. The rule nisi which had been obtained for a mandamus was discharged.

REG. v. MAYOR OF GLOUCESTER.

A mandamus will issue to a town council to pay the costs incurred by constables, and the fees of the clerk to justices acting under the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act.

Chilton and Francillon shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus obtained by J. W. Smith. The facts were as follows:—

The Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, in section 76, directs the appointment of a watch committee, and the appointment by them of constables whose duties are regulated by the subsequent sections —their salaries, wages, and allowances by section 82. By section 98 the Crown is empowered to create borough justices; by section 100 a police office is to be provided, and by section 102 a clerk to the justices is to be appointed, the amount of whose fees, according to section 124, is to be regulated by the table therein mentioned; section 92 directs what sum may legally be charged upon the borough fund. In the borough of Gloucester there had been constables appointed by the watch committee during the time in question in this case who, during the continuance of their offices, brought the offenders before the justices, by whom their cases were disposed of, with the assistance of the clerk, who made out the commitments, warrants, &c. and supplied the necessary stationery. In many such instances he has not received his fees, sometimes because the parties were unable to pay, sometimes because the proceedings were under Acts of Parliament not specifically imposing the payment of costs on any one. The complainants, the constables, have not been furnished with money to discharge any of the clerk's fees. There was a table of fees, as directed by section 124, during the time in question in this case.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the payment of these fees by the corporation could be enforced by mandamus.

By the COURT.—It appears to us that these expenses are within the Act. We think the town council are authorized, when there is no money coming from the persons punished, to pay the fees themselves to the party who ought to receive them. It has been objected, that they may not have funds sufficient without laying a retrospective rate. But there may be sufficient money in hand to pay this sum, and if there is not, that will be a good return to the mandamus when it issues. Rule absolute.

REG. v. ST. GILES, MIDDLESEX.

Payment to a pauper of a shilling per week for several weeks, and his removal to a parish asylum, is not evidence of relief for the purpose of settlement.

This was a case stated by the sessions for the opinion of this Court. The pauper had applied for relief to the parish of St. Giles. He received a shilling a week from them for several weeks, and was afterwards sent by them to an establishment of theirs at Islington, and subsequently to the Surrey Asylum, at both which places he was maintained for some time by the parish of St. Giles. The question was, whether this was such evidence of relief as amounted to a settlement by relief.

Townsend, for the respondent, contended that there was sufficient evidence. There was evidence of relief out of the parish. Before the parish of St. Giles can maintain that these houses at Surrey and Islington are to be considered for this purpose as parts of their parish, they must shew that they have complied with the statutes respecting workhouses. In this case it is a mere contract by the parish with strangers for their own convenience. They do not shew, either by the present Act or by any local Act, any right to treat these houses as part of their parish. But even if that is not so, the relief given in the parish was not given as to mere casual poor. It was continued for a long time, and after inquiries had been made as to the settlement of the paupers. This of itself, without explanation, is evidence of a settlement in St. Giles's.

By the COURT.—It appears to us that the sessions have very properly submitted to us the question, whether there was any evidence at all. We are of opinion that there was none. The examinations merely state the fact that the pauper has received relief, which is nothing, as he may have received it as casual poor. If we were to hold this as evidence of a settlement, parishes would be deterred from doing that which, in common humanity, it is their duty to do. In this case, it is the same thing as giving relief within the parish. They are parish houses. It is immaterial whether the relief lasted for a long or a short time. If we were to hold that such relief can grow up into evidence of settlement, it would be impossible to define where such evidence should begin, or whether one, two, or ten weeks should be sufficient.

THE NEW TRIAL PAPER.

HARVEY v. BURGESS, Executor.

Executor de son tort—what constitutes liability of.

This was a rule to set aside a nonsuit and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 60*l*. The action was in debt

Pleas—Ne unques executor, and plenè administravit.

The evidence was, that the widow of the deceased, who died intestate, had upon his death carried on his business through the agency of her son, the defendant, who was proved to have been the person who, de facto, managed the business, and to have received certain sums on account of the estate, for which he had, however, duly accounted to his mother. Letters of administration had been subsequently granted to testator's mother, but long after the commencement of the suit.

The question was, whether the defendant was liable as executor de son tort.

Byles, Serjt. and Couch shewed cause.

Biggs Andrews, Q. C., and Gunning, contrà, were not called upon.

By the COURT.—This case must not be considered as an authority that a mere servant, or labourer of an executor de son tort, renders himself liable as an executor de son tort, by meddling with the estate of the deceased; but here the son held himself out as the person lawfully acting with the property. He is, therefore, clearly liable as an executor de son tort, and the rule must be made absolute.

Byles, Serjt. then submitted that the rule would only be absolute for the amount which defendant was proved to have received as assets.

Andrews, Q.C. contrà, submitted that he was entitled to judgment for the whole amount sought to be recovered, as the defendant had pleaded a plea false within his own knowledge.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF CHIPPING BARNET.

Godson, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to the defendants to pay out of the highway rate certain costs of a prosecution under the Highway Act, which had been allowed by Gurney, B. at the trial.

The order was merely to pay the costs, but no sum was mentioned, nor were they in any way taxed or ascertained by any officers of the court. The defendants contended that this ought to have been done during the assizes, and that there was no power in any one to do it afterwards.

They also contended, that in any case a mandamus was not the remedy.

Kelly, Q. C. contrà, Bramwell with him.

In all the statutes giving costs in cases of felony or misdemeanor, there is some means pointed out by which the costs are to be ascertained. By this statute there is no such means pointed out, and the power is given not to the Court, but to the judge of the court individually, so that there is no taxing officer who has jurisdiction, or to whom it can properly be referred. The amount can only be ascertained by process of law, and by the court in which it is sought to enforce the claim.

PATTESON, J.—I do not see how the law is to ascertain the amount.

Kelly.—Supposing a law to exist, as it does in many countries, that when a stranger died at an inn, the overseer of the parish should pay to the landlord his reasonable funeral expenses; if they refused to pay him he might have his action, if they were private persons, but against overseers he must apply to this Court for a mandamus to them, to pay what he should swear to be the just and proper amount. Cause would be shewn by the other party, who would swear that it was an exorbitant sum. This Court would have to satisfy itself on the affidavits, and so in this case. Whenever the law directs the payment of sums of money, and points out no other way of obtaining them, this Court must interfere by mandamus.

By the COURT.—These clauses are calculated to produce great difficulty, and, in fact, they place the Court now in a disagreeable position. Undoubtedly this is a case where the parish are within the intention of the statute and ought to pay these costs; and the only question is, whether they have been properly called upon? We are of opinion that the meaning of the Act is, that the amount of the costs should be ascertained by the judge himself, or that they shall be placed in the usual course of taxation by the proper officer of the Court. In this case the judge has ordered the costs to be paid by the parish, but he has done so in general terms, without ascertaining the amount or putting it in train to be ascertained, and we are now called to require the surveyor to pay costs which have not been in any way found to be due; and therefore the costs would still be to be ascertained if we issued our mandamus. There [illegible] to which it could apply if it issued. The learned judge who tried the cause thinks he has no longer any power to do any thing, and if so the case must fall to the ground. The statute in giving costs meant such costs as the judge to whom the power was given should think reasonable and should fix. It was never meant to give an uncertain sum.

Rule discharged without costs.

REG. v. GEORGE MILNER and ANOTHER.

Quo warranto—Time for moving.

Bliss shewed cause against a rule for a quo warranto, obtained by Addison against two persons named George and William Milner, calling on them to shew by what authority they exercised the office of burgesses of the borough of Richmond, in Yorkshire. The affidavits stated that the revision at which the Milners were inserted in the list took place in October; that an election for councillors took place in November, and that the Milners voted. They had been on the burgess list for three years previously for the same qualification, and the prosecutor had also been for several years on the list; and that the prosecutor had attended before the mayor and objected to them in October. It was intended, in the first instance, to have moved for a rule absolute at once. Notice was given to the defendants on the 20th January, and the rule was moved for on the 31st. It was then objected, for the defendants, that the case was not one which came within the statute 6 & 7 Vict., and that there could only be a rule nisi, which was granted accordingly.

Bliss now shewed cause, and cited Rex v. Hodson, to shew that the application was now too late.

Addison, contrà, contended that the delay was the fault of the defendants, who had objected at first, and also that the Municipal Act gave a year for the making the application.

PATTESON, J.—According to Rex v. Hodson, you were too late even on the 20th January. The statute does not give a year for the application, but says it shall not be made after a year.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF KESTEVEN, LINCOLNSHIRE.

A case granted by the sessions for the opinion of this Court should contain a final point for their decision.

If the sessions refuse to hear an appeal because they think the grounds of appeal insufficient, this Court will not interfere by mandamus.

Miller shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal. At the sessions, the appellant parish admitted the settlement in their parish, which was by apprenticeship, but wished to set up a subsequent settlement in a third parish by apprenticeship. The third parish was in London, and the master was a builder, employing a great number of persons. The grounds of appeal did not state the house in the third parish in which the apprentice resided. It was objected at the sessions that this was insufficient, as it did not give the respondents sufficient information. The sessions decided that it was insufficient, and refused to go further into the appeal, but they granted a case which was drawn up in the alternative that if the Court thought the sessions right, their order was to be confirmed: but if they thought them wrong, the case was to go back to be re-heard.

For the respondents, it was now contended that the appellants having elected at the sessions to take a case, could not now ask for a mandamus.

Whitehurst, contrà, argued on the other side, that the case was defective for not stating some final point for the decision of this Court, and therefore it could not have been brought up by certiorari, and therefore that the only remedy was by mandamus.

The COURT, after hearing this point argued called upon Miller to proceed with the rest of the argument.

It was then contended for the respondents, that the sessions had not, in fact, declined any jurisdiction, but having heard and decided the question of the sufficiency of the grounds of appeal, they had, in fact, heard the appeal itself, and given judgment upon a point of law which was within their jurisdiction; and that this Court was not a court of appeal, and would not interfere by mandamus with their decision, even where they themselves might have come to a different conclusion.

On the other side, it was contended that the decision of the sessions amounted, in fact, to a refusal to hear the appeal at all.

By the COURT.—It is unnecessary to decide the question, whether the sessions were right in holding the grounds of appeal insufficient upon the objection taken before them. It is satisfactory that it must now be understood, that the Court of Queen's Bench will not decide upon a case for the mere purpose of putting the inferior court in motion. When a case is submitted to this Court, it must contain some final point for decision. The sessions might have heard this case to the end and decided upon the whole facts, subject to the opinion of this Court upon the point as to the grounds of appeal; that would have been the proper course. What remains for us is not quite so satisfactory. We are bound to overrule some cases in which we all seem to have concurred. We think the case of Reg. v. Justices of Carmarthenshire wrong; and if the expression may be used, Reg. v. Justices of the West Riding is more wrong than the other. It is quite clear that there the Court took upon themselves to say that the sessions had gone wrong by not giving effect to the evidence. If the sessions refuse to hear an appeal upon some supposed point of practice which is an improper one, we are bound to set them right, and to obtain a hearing for the parties by our mandamus. But if, in the course of a preliminary objection, they decide a matter of fact, we are bound by it. The sufficiency of the grounds of appeal is purely for the consideration of the Court below. They may be guided in their decision by a variety of circumstances of which we can know nothing, and of which they are the only competent judges. There was a case decided last term which does not differ at all from this. When the Court is convinced that it has been wrong, it must say so.

Whitehurst, on behalf of the appellants, then applied for leave to bring up the case, which was refused.

SKILBECH and ANOTHER v. GARBECH.

—— moved for a new trial or to reduce the damages. The case was tried before Coleridge J. last Tuesday, and a verdict found for the plantiff for 26*l*. damages.

The action was debt, for work and labour as an attorney.

The defendant had pleaded that no bill had been delivered, pursuant to the new Attorneys and Solicitors Act, and the plaintiff replied that a bill had been so delivered.

The evidence was, that several bills had been sent at different times, some before and some since the Act. The only evidence of the latter bills being sent was, that they had been delivered to the bellman. Upon the question whether this was a sending by post, leave was reserved to move to reduce the damages. The other questions were, whether the issue was distrib table, and whether a fresh bill must be sent in under the new Act, for work done before it passed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

EASTER TERM.

Thursday, April 18.

PHILLIPS v. IRVING.

Where seeking freight from Bombay to England under a policy of insurance, a vessel has leave "to touch, stay, and trade at any ports and places on this or the other side of the Cape of Good Hope." The detention for a reasonable time must be allowed for seeking freight at any of the ports and places, and whether the time is reasonable or not, must be determined by the state of things existing at the time at the port where the ship happened to be.

TINDAL, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Court.—This was a rule for entering a nonsuit on the first issue. The action was upon a policy of insurance, with leave to touch, stay, and trade at any ports and places on this or the other side of the Cape of Good Hope. The defendants pleaded, first, that the ship having arrived at Bombay, remained there an unreasonable time; that the assured did not prosecute the voyage insured, and were thereby guilty of a deviation. The facts applicable to that plea were withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, and it was agreed that the Court must decide whether the liability of the insurers were discharged by such delay. The Court had therefore read the evidence of the captain and the mates of the vessel as to the circumstances under which the ship remained at Bombay. There was nothing to shew that, so far as the interest of the owners was concerned, the delay at Bombay was improper, but it was contended that, with regard to the underwriters, the delay was improper, and equivalent to a deviation; and that as the concurrent circumstances which rendered freights at Bombay low were unusual, it could not be said that the voyage was prosecuted in the usual course. It was not, nor could it be, denied that the ship might be detained for some time, in order to obtain a cargo at a reasonable rate of freight; but it was said that such detention could not, without discharging the underwriter, be extended beyond the time usually required for such purposes. It appeared, however, to the Court that no such rule could be laid down; that detention for a reasonable time, for the purposes of the adventure of the insured, must be allowed, and that whether the time was reasonable or not must be determined, not by an arbitrary rule, but by the state of things existing at the time at the port where the ship happened to be. It might be collected from numerous cases, that delay before or after the commencement of a voyage by the insured was not equivalent to a deviation unless it was unreasonable, and they thought that no certain and fixed time could be said to be reasonable or unreasonable for waiting for a cargo in a foreign port, but that the time allowed must vary with the varying circumstances that might render it more or less difficult to obtain such cargo. Judging by the facts of this case according to that principle, it did not appear that the delay at Bombay was unreasonable; and the verdict found for the plaintiff ought not to be disturbed. Rule refused.

FISHMONGERS' COMPANY v. ROBERTSON and OTHERS.

New trial.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had passed for the defendants on the first plea of non assumpserunt, should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the plaintiffs for 1,000*l.*; or for the sum of 1s.; or why there should not be a new trial.

POTT and OTHERS v. BEVAN.

Verdict against evidence—Interest—Overcharge.

Murphy, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had passed for the plaintiff for 392*l.* 18s. 6d. should not be set aside, on the ground of being against evidence; or failing in that, to reduce the amount by the sum of 41*l.* 18s. 6d. charged as interest, but which, it was contended, was an overcharge.

The action was tried before Rolfe, B. at the last summer assizes at Liverpool.

Declaration in assumpsit: there were counts for debt before bankruptcy; after bankruptcy, during the lifetime of certain partners, money lent, money paid, and an account stated.

The only plea was non assumpsit.

To consult with Rolfe, B. before granting the rule.

FRASER v. BAGLEY.

New trial—Verdict against evidence.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this case should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

SURPLICE v. FARNSWORTH and OTHERS.

Use and occupation—Unfitness of premises.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or a verdict entered for the defendant on the point reserved.

This was an action for use and occupation, tried at the last assizes at Nottingham; verdict for the plaintiff, 12*l.* 10s.

The only plea was the general issue, non assumpsit.

The defendants had entered into possession of the premises in November 1838, at an annual rent of 25*l.* In September 1842, notice to quit by the tenants had been given, to expire at the ensuing Lady-day; at the trial it was not shewn the notice expired at the proper time. Throughout the tenancy, when any repairs had been done to the roof of the premises, the landlord had allowed the expense. The roof ultimately became in very bad order; so bad, that in November 1842 the tenant was compelled to leave. The jury found, "We are of opinion that the premises were not fit for malting from the 24th of March, 1843." The damages were for the rent intervening between March and November of the same year. The defendants were entitled to leave the premises, and were not bound to pay the rent. (Edwards v. Hetherington, R. & M. 268; Collins v. Barrow, 1 M. & R. 12; Smith v. Marrable, 11 M. & W.; Hart v. Windsor, 13 L. Jour. 129, Exch.; Salisbury v. Marshall, 4 C. & P. 65.)

Rule nisi, may be taken in the alternative, but not with costs.

LACKINGTON v. ELLIOT.

Nonsuit—Money had and received—Right defendant.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had passed for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered pursuant to leave reserved at the trial.

The declaration was for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff as assignee of one May.

Plea: non assumpsit.

The Court, at the trial, expressed some doubt as to whether the right defendant had been sued. The sum sought to be recovered was the surplus proceeds of a distress for more than a year's rent, under the 74th section of the 6 Geo. 1, c. 10.

TURNER v. WHEATMAN.

Order at chambers—Judgment.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Erskine, J. and judgment signed thereon should not be set aside. The application was made on behalf of the defendant's creditors. The defendant having signed without being conscious of the nature of the document, and being desirous to have the matter investigated. Rule nisi.

BROWN v. COPLEY and OTHERS.

Trover—Liability of sheriff.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a verdict for the defendant, or why not a new trial.

The action, which was in trover, was tried before Coltman, J. at the last York Assizes. The defendants severed in their pleading. The defendant Copley pleaded not guilty generally. The two other defendants justified pleading a justification under an attachment to compel appearance, issuing out of the county court of York. The plaintiff new assigned, setting out a supersedeas on the part of the attachment, and alleging a refusal by the two other defendants to deliver up the goods, which was the conversion complained of.

SMART v. NOKES.

Misdirection—Unstamped bill—Account stated.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial.

The action was tried before Coltman, J. and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 246*l.* The rule was moved for on the ground of misdirection as to the effect of certain documents introduced at the trial; or if the Court should think there was no misdirection, then that the verdict was against evidence. The action was in debt, money lent on interest, and on account stated.

Pleas, never indebted, and payment.

The original sum lent to the defendant in 1840 by the plaintiff was 420*l.* This had been swelled up by interest to 1,000*l.* The defendant had paid on one occasion 510*l.* At the time this payment was made, a bill was given for the balance on an insufficient stamp. This bill is not evidence on the account stated. The material documents were the bill of exchange, and a paper containing some entries in the defendant's handwriting—namely, "500*l.* cash, 500*l.* bill, 33*l.* 6s. 8d. bill for 533*l.* 6s. 8d. at four months' date." There were some words in the corner in the plaintiff's handwriting. The only evidence in support of the account stated was this document. But it does not appear by whom the account was stated, nor with whom. Without the bill is receivable in evidence, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on the account stated, nor on the count for money lent, because it was proved that 420*l.* had been lent, and 510*l.* had been paid. It does not appear that the jury were told not to look at the bill for the purposes of the trial.

Rule nisi, on the ground the verdict against evidence.

Friday, April 19.

GOSLIN v. BIDDER.

New trial.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had.

The cause had been tried before Rolfe, B. at the last assizes at Liverpool. The action was brought for rent and money lent.

Pleas: never indebted, and payment. Rule nisi.

JARRELL v. JERVIS.

New trial—Warranty.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had.

The action had been brought on a breach of warranty. Rule refused.

VALLANCE and ANOTHER v. DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

Order—Taxation of costs.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the taxation of the Master, under an order of Erskine, J. should not be reviewed, and the sum of 87*l.* 10s. be struck out; and why an order of Coltman, J. should not be rescinded, as far as relates to the Master's certificate being paid.

The bill when taxed amounted to 1,428*l.* 8s. 8d. and the defendant was satisfied with the Master's report, except as to 80*l.* 10s. The order of Coltman, J. was made under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 43, which enables the parties to turn the Master's allocatur into a judgment. The Duke of Brunswick's affidavit stated that the sum charged (80*l.* 10s.) was not for any personal business done by the plaintiffs, or either of them. The consequence of the order standing would be to fix the defendant with the whole of these charges, and deprive him of the benefit of contribution from Vallance, the first defendant. Rule nisi.

DEAN v. SUTTON.

New trial—Verdict against evidence.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

The action had been tried before the sheriff of Middlesex, and a verdict passed for the plaintiff, damages 6*l.* 10s. Rule refused.

GOSLIN v. CORRY.

Where, in an action for libel, evidence of special damage subsequent to the commencement of the action is admitted by the defendant's counsel, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the judge at the trial did not strictly charge the jury; that they were to exclude that evidence from their consideration, and find damages only for the libel before action brought.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of misdirection.

The action had been brought for a libel contained in a letter sent by the defendant to the Hue and Cry, and which letter charged the plaintiff with felony, offering a reward for his apprehension. The ground of the present motion was, that special damage being alleged in the declaration, there was no proof of special damage, except at a date long after the commencement of the action. The counsel for the defendant had at the trial admitted evidence; which admission otherwise would have been the ground of a motion for a new trial. It was submitted the jury should have been told that although the counsel for the defendant had not thought proper to exclude that evidence which went to shew special damage three weeks after the date of the declaration, it was not, properly speaking, damages before action brought.

The COURT said, that when the counsel for the defendant admits evidence which must otherwise be excluded it must be taken to be for the advantage of the client. By admitting this evidence a second action was avoided; and it was sometimes an advantage to the defendant for the jury to assess damages, with the certainty that no second action will be brought. In this case the jury were not directed to find damages at all hazards. The evidence of subsequent special damage could not be excluded from their consideration, and there was no reason why the verdict should be disturbed. Rule refused.

CURLING and OTHERS v. ROBERTSON.

The managing owner of a ship cannot pledge the credit of the other owners, who may appear to be the legal owners on the register, but who have, in fact, parted with all their beneficial interest in the vessel.

Channell, Serjt. moved to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 1,398*l.* 14s.

The action was tried at Guildhall, at the last sittings, and a verdict found for the defendant. The plaintiffs were shipbuilders, and the claim arose for repairs done to a vessel called the Ferguson, which repairs were commenced in July 1840, and completed in August of the same year. The defendant was the registered owner of ten sixty-fourth shares between the 19th March, 1839, and the 9th Sept. 1840. On this date, the defendant appeared to have transferred her shares. One Bishop acted as the ship's husband and managing owner, giving directions and ordering repairs. The account for repairs was made out in the name of Vertue and the owners of the ship Ferguson. The credit was eighteen months; and just as that period expired, Bishop became in embarrassed circumstances; and credit having been given to the owners, and the plaintiff being at the time of the repairs the registered owner, the action was brought. A contract was said to have been entered into in the May or June of 1840, on the part of the defendant's brother, to sell his own and the defendant's shares to one Vertue, and the defendant's brother took a bill for his sister, drawn by himself and accepted by Bishop, for the honour of Vertue for 1,000*l.* Afterwards the bill of sale was executed to Bishop for these ten shares. Still the defendant was the legal owner by continuing on the register, and was liable. (Dowson v. Leake, D. & R. N. P. 52.)

TINDAL, C. J.—The present case falls within that class where the legal owner has parted with the beneficial ownership. There was no evidence to shew that Bishop had any authority from the defendant to bind her for the repairs in the month of June, before which month the defendant parted with all her beneficial interest, and could not claim to participate in the profits of the vessel. The principle is laid down in Jennings v. Griffiths (R. & M. 42).

The other judges concurred. Rule refused.

CLOSE v. PHIPPS.

Nonsuit—Reduction of damages.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered according to leave reserved, or why the damages should not be reduced. Rule nisi.

BLOODWORTH v. GRAY.

Words in the present tense, charging the plaintiff with having a contagious disorder which makes him unfit for society, are the subject of special damage, although such special damage is not proved at the trial.

Byles, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave at the trial, for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered.

The action was tried before Gurney, B. at the last assizes in Leicestershire, and was for words spoken. No special damage was proved. The question was, whether the words were actionable in themselves. They were set out in the declaration:—"He (meaning the plaintiff) has got the French pox, otherwise the venereal disease, &c. These words are not actionable. (Comyn's Dig. tit. Act. Defamation, Lit. D. 29; Carslake v. Mapledoram, 2 T. R. 475.)

By the COURT.—The words here are in the present tense. Rule refused.

CAMACK v. WARRINER.

New trial—Misdirection—Verdict against evidence.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of misdirection and against evidence.

The action was brought on a bill of exchange for 125*l.* 11s. and was tried before Gurney, B.—verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded as to the sum of 1*l.* 14s. payment into court; and as to the residue, that there was a failure of consideration, articles having been supplied, which were wholly unfit for the purposes for which they were warranted.

NEWTON et Uxor v. ROE and ANOTHER.

Writ of execution—Irregularity.

Newton applied in person to set aside a writ of execution for illegality and irregularity. The writ of ca. sa. was tested on the 7th of July, 1843, and delivered to the sheriff of Gloucestershire on the 15th Feb. 1844, and was directed against both the plaintiffs. There was no case in the books where the wife is liable to execution against her person where the husband and wife are jointly sued. (Black. Com. 3, 413, Chitty ed.) After the issuing of this writ, the defendants took out another writ of execution against the husband only, upon which he was imprisoned and discharged. All that took place between the testing of that writ and delivery to the sheriff by the authority of the defendants was irregular.

By the COURT.—If the writ which issued against the two plaintiffs is void, the remedy is by writ of error. Rule refused.

TINDAL, C. J.—A separate investigation will relieve the Court from some doubt as to the party who made the proposition respecting the assignment in this case. Rule absolute on the usual terms.

BARNWELL v. WILLIAMS.

Detinue—Pleading lien.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. applied for leave to add a plea of lien.

The action was in detinue, and the learned judge, before whom the summons to plead had been heard, allowed the defendant only to plead non-detinet and not possessed. In addition to these pleas, the defendant, however, desired to be allowed to plead specially the lien, in consequence of the Court of Exchequer having recently held, in Mason v. Farnell (reported in 1 Dowl. & Lowndes, but not yet published), that in the action of detinue, under the plea of not possessed, a lien cannot be given in evidence. Rule nisi.

HUDSON v. FAWCETT.

Debt—Plea pleaded to portion of debt and not to the damages—Semble, where a promissory note is made payable with interest, the interest up to the time the note becomes due is recoverable as a debt, and not merely as damages.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wilde, Serjt. to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of 2s. 6d.

The declaration was in debt. The 1st count was on a promissory note for 40*l.* payable on demand, with interest. The 2nd count, for money lent, and a count on an account stated. The defendant pleaded, as to the said debts in the declaration mentioned, except as to the sum of 5*l.* parcel of the money in the first count, payment to the plaintiff of a sum of 150*l.* and acceptance of the same by the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the said debts, except as aforesaid, and of all damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the non payment thereof. There was also a plea of set-off, except as to the said sum of 5*l.* and as to that sum a plea of payment of money into court.

At the trial, the defendant proved satisfaction of all that was due to the plaintiff, with the exception of a sum of 2s. 6d. for interest; thereupon, under the direction of the learned judge who tried the cause, the verdict was found for the defendant, leave being given to the plaintiff to move to have the same entered for him for the 2s. 6d. the amount of interest.

It was now urged by Byles, Serjt. that, according to Henry v. Earl (8 M. & W. 228), the plea of payment being pleaded only to a portion of the debt, and not to the damages, and interest in an action of debt being recoverable only as damages, the plea was proved on shewing payment of so much of the debt as was due to the plaintiff, exclusive of interest and the money paid into Court; and that as to the interest, the plaintiff ought to have signed judgment for that as damages. Gray v. Pindar (2 Bos. & Pull. 427), and 1 Wm. Saund. 28, note 3, were cited, and also Watkins v. Morgan (6 C. & P. 661).

The COURT, however, thought that the last case cited was an authority that, where interest is payable under a contract, the non-payment of it is a debt; but that, whether the interest was included as part of the debt or not, the issue taken on this plea being, whether the money was paid to and accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction of the debts and damages, the defendant could not, after having gone to trial on such issue, take advantage of his plea being not properly pleaded to the damages as well as the debts. Rule absolute.

GRANT qui tam v. MATTHEWSON.

New trial—Arrest of judgment.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wilde, Serjt. calling upon the plaintiff to shew why a new trial should not be had, or why judgment should not be arrested.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. contrà.

Cur. adv. vult, except as to the arrest of judgment, which the Court allowed.

ROBSON v. JONASSOHN.

Messenger—Assignees.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, why the verdict in this cause should not be increased to 27*l.*

The plaintiff had been appointed a messenger by the commissioners under a fiat in bankruptcy, and claimed for services subsequent to the appointment of assignees, to enter and take possession of the bankrupt's property. When the assignees were chosen, they gave the plaintiff notice that they had no further occasion for his services, as they had a right to do.

Byles, Serjt. contrà. Rule discharged.

SHARPE v. HANCOCK.

Prescription—Drain under an award—Right of easement.

Talfourd, Serjt. Byles, Serjt. and Whitehurst, in support shewed cause.

The ground of complaint on the part of the plaintiff was, that the defendant and himself being occupiers of adjoining closes, and there being a drain awarded under an enclosure Act, which drain skirted along the side of the plaintiff's close, and afterwards flowed through the close of the defendant. That the defendant had neglected to cleanse and keep that portion of the drain open, by which the water overflowed the plaintiff's land, and did the injury complained of. The plaintiff had made a small sub-drain, but that alteration could not apply where the right could only be claimed by having had twenty years' enjoyment. The drain is called a "sough," but it might with equal propriety be called an under-drain. The easement of an ancient ditch would not be affected by any improvement. There was evidence to go to a jury, who found the defendant was bound to repair the drain, and that the plaintiff was injured to the extent of 5*l.* A decision against the plaintiff will be in effect to say, that improved systems of drainage must be subject to the more burdensome easement.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. with Channell, Serjt. contrà.

At the time of the award the improved system of under-ground drainage was not known; and the cost upon the occupiers of land would, in some counties, be more than the value of the estate. The awarded drain was insufficient to carry off the increased water occasioned by the plaintiff's improvements. There was no cause of action of any kind.

The COURT, in giving judgment, said, that the plaintiff had failed in making out his case; that the plaintiff's evidence in support of his right, as alleged in the declaration, rested entirely upon the award of the commissioners, inasmuch as he had neither shewn a right from time immemorial, or twenty years' user, or by grant. Neither did the award give any such right as that claimed. That the liability imposed by the award, of cleansing and maintaining the drain, was imposed on those only through whose land the drain passed; and the duty, therefore, appeared to be cast on the plaintiff himself to keep the drain clear; but that, even if it were otherwise, still the duty that would be imposed on the defendant by the award would only be to keep the drain in a proper state to carry off the water which the commissioners intended the drain should receive, and not such additional quantity as might flow into it by reason of the sub-drain which had been made by the plaintiff long after the award had been made. The rule for a nonsuit must therefore be made absolute.

LACKINGTON and OTHERS v. ATHERTON and ANOTHER.

Vendor and purchaser—Stoppage in transitu.

The unpaid vendor of goods standing in a warehouse in the name of a prior vendor may stop in transitu, though he has given the purchaser a delivery order, if such delivery order is inoperative by reason of its not being signed by the prior vendor, in whose name the goods were standing.

Byles, Serjt. and Beetham, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs for 250*l.* 13s. 4d.

The declaration was in trover, by the assignees of Messrs. Paul and Son, bankrupts, against defendant Atherton, the other defendant, Congreve, having died after action brought. It appeared in evidence at the trial, before Mr. Justice Cresswell, at the Middlesex sittings after last Michaelmas Term, that a cargo of timber, consigned to one Tindal, was, in July 1839, landed from the vessel, the Sir William Bensley, and deposited in one of the warehouses of the West India Dock Company, and there entered in the name of the consignee Tindal. Tindal subsequently sold the cargo to the defendants, Congreve and Atherton. In September 1839, the same cargo was sold by the defendants to the bankrupts, Messrs. Paul and Son. The goods were invoiced to the bankrupts, and the latter gave their acceptance for the amount of sale, but which acceptance was never honoured. The following delivery order was also given to Messrs. Paul on the occasion of the sale:—

"To the Superintendent of the West India Dock Company.

"Deliver to Messrs. Paul and Son, ex Sir William Bensley, Quebec, 4th July, 1839—yellow deals, first quality.

"Signed by procuration,

"WILLIAM CONGREVE."

The dock company refused to deliver up the timber on this order, inasmuch as the timber was still then remaining in their books in the name of Tindal. The refusal of the company to act on the delivery order was given on the 12th of October, 1839. On the 30th of the same month the fiat in bankruptcy was issued against Paul and Son. On the 11th of November, in the same year, the defendants, by means of a delivery order from Tindal, obtained possession of the goods, claiming them under a right of stoppage in transitu. The plaintiffs, who sought, as assignees of Paul and Son, to recover the value of this timber, were nonsuited at the trial, leave being reserved to them to move to enter the verdict for them for the sum of 250*l.* 13s. 4d. Dixon v. Yates (5 B. & Ad. 313) and Townley v. Crump (4 Ad. & Ell. 58) are relied on as authorities in point.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule, cited Harman v. Anderson (2 Camp. 243), Withers v. Lyss (4 Camp. 237); and Lucas v. Dorrien (7 Taunt. 278); and submitted that between the defendants and the bankrupts Paul, the former were estopped, after they had sold the timber, from setting up the non-delivery of the timber, by reason of their not having given the bankrupts Tindal's delivery order, or previously got the timber transferred into their own names.

The COURT held that the present case was not to be distinguished in principle from that of Dixon v. Yates. That there was here no delivery to the bankrupts of the timber either actual or constructive. For as the dock company were neither the servants nor agents of the defendants, but of Tindal, the delivery order from the defendants was in effect no order at all; and that the defendant Atherton was not estopped from this defence, inasmuch as by the sale there had been no alteration of the situation of the parties, the goods not having been paid for, nor the rights of third persons affected. Rule discharged.

STEPHENSON v. RUDGE.

Wages—Railway shares—Contract.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Murphy, Serjt. for setting aside the verdict which had been found for the defendant, on the ground of its having been against evidence. The action was brought to recover the plaintiff's salary as secretary to an intended railway company, called the Evesham, Birmingham, and Gloucester Junction Railway. The company was, in fact, never formed; and the jury had found that the defendant, who had agreed to take some shares in the company, had not entered into any contract with the plaintiff, express or implied. The Court refused to disturb the verdict.

Rule discharged.

SPECIAL PAPER.
TODD v. SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.
Rateability—Exemption.

Talfourd, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—The question before the Court really was, whether an exemption from rating, contained in a clause of an Act of Parliament, was a local exemption applying permanently to the land subject to that exemption; in which case, if held to be so, the action could not be maintained; or whether, if the whole or any part of the farm ceased to be a farm, or be devoted to other purposes, the general liability should attach. There were many cases which support that principle. It was contended that the exemption did not include arable and pasture land, but merely the messuage dwelling-house called Burton Farm, and the land within the curtilage.

The COURT, without calling upon Wilde, Serjt. said that upon the finding of the special case it was impossible to say that the land does not fall within the exemption mentioned in the first clause of the 11 Geo. 3, as the messuage dwelling-house, and grounds thereunto belonging, called and known by the name of Barton Farm. The Court could not see that the exemption was limited.

Judgment for the defendants.

MARSHALL v. BRAITHWAITE.
New trial—Affidavits—Hearing.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be granted. The action was tried before Maule, J. on Friday last; verdict for the plaintiff, 12*l.* 13*s.* The ground of the application was, that the only witness who proved the case on the part of the plaintiff came upon the defendant by surprise. Affidavits were put in, one by the defendant, contradicting distinctly the evidence of the witness and others, stating the witness to be a person of bad character, and unworthy of belief.

The COURT said the affidavits offered, with the exception of the defendant's attorney, brought forward only matters of hearsay, and the defendant's affidavit could not be received for the purposes of a new trial.

Rule refused.

WITHAM, Administrator of Alice Hutchinson, v. LAMB.
New Trial.

B. Andrews moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, on the ground, 1st, that the action being founded upon a covenant with the intestate, her heirs, executors, and administrators, should have been brought in the name of the heir, instead of the administrator; 2ndly, that the land in question having been devised by the will of Stotely Hutchinson, the husband of the intestate, to the use of his sons in fee, subject to the following declaration,—"And it is my will and desire that my said wife shall have the use and occupation, or annual increase thereof, at her pleasure, during the minority of my said sons, she keeping them in order," the intestate had merely an estate for her life in the lands in question; and therefore, although the sons had not attained their majority, her estate was determined by her death, and the action should consequently have been brought in the name of the executor of Stotely Hutchinson, the husband: citing 2 Leon. 221.

A surrender of copyhold lands may be proved by an unstamped examined copy of the court-roll—Tenant by sufferance—Demand of possession.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, on the ground that it was not competent to the lessor of the plaintiff to prove the surrender of copyhold premises by means of an unstamped examined copy of the court-roll, citing Doe dem. Bennington v. Hall (16 East, 208, 55 Geo. 3, c. 155, tit. Copyhold); Rosc. N. P. Ev; and, secondly, that the defendant having been in possession for twenty-three years, during the first six of which he held under a written agreement, was entitled to a demand of possession before action brought.

The COURT held the evidence clearly admissible, and that the provisions of the Stamp Act only apply to copies of court-rolls given out and signed by the steward; and, further, that the defendant was clearly a tenant at sufferance, and not entitled to a demand of possession.

Rule refused.

DIXON and ANOTHER v. DIXON.

In debt for work and labour and materials under a written contract, the defendant may, under the general issue, prove that he has supplied the plaintiff with materials which have been used in performing the contract, and they are not the subjects of set-off, but deduction.

Jervis moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs and to enter it for the defendants.

Debt, for work and labour, goods sold, and materials.

Pleas: except as to 40*l.* never indebted, and payment of 40*l.* into court. The particulars gave credit for 10*l.* The action was brought to recover the price of certain machinery made by the plaintiff for the defendant, for which he claimed the sum of 67*l.* The defendant, in answer, put in a written contract, by which the plaintiff agreed to do the work for 55*l.* and to cover the remaining 5*l.* beyond the 40*l.* paid into court, and the 10*l.* credited in the particulars, he proved that after the contract was made, the defendant purchased some old machinery, which he sent to the plaintiff, who used it up in the work done under his contract. The judge thought this ought to have been pleaded by way of set-off, and rejected the evidence. It was submitted that the rejection was erroneous, citing Turner v. Draper (1 M. & G. 241); Cousins v. Paddon (2 C. M. & R. 547).

The COURT held it could not be the subject of set-off, as there never was any liability on the part of the plaintiff in respect of it.

Rule granted.

Stamps—Assignment of mortgage with a further charge.

Jervis moved to set aside the verdict for the lessors of the plaintiff, and to enter the same for the defendants, or to limit the verdict to one of the estates recovered.

This was an action to recover two estates, one called Crosy Marion, the other Penny Marion, which had formerly been mortgaged to Parry for 1,000*l.* who afterwards assigned to the lessors of the plaintiff upon their advancing the further sum of 6,700*l.* The mortgage deed, when produced, had a 12*l.* stamp, which was the proper ad valorem stamp; but it was contended that it required a 35*s.* stamp in addition, as being a transfer of a mortgage; 2ndly. That an assignment of an outstanding term for a nominal consideration was wrongly stamped with a 35*s.* stamp, but should have had an ad valorem stamp in addition; and, 3rdly. That there was an outstanding term relating to Penny Marion, and therefore the verdict must be limited to Crosy Marion.

The COURT held the stamps sufficient, but granted a rule upon the third point.

Stamp—Agreement.

Ryland moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, or to arrest the judgment.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of 12*l.* upon an agreement reciting that when he should come of age, he and two other parties would be equitably entitled to a share in the profits of a certain house, and that in consideration of their receiving the sum of 12*l.* each, they had agreed to sell to the defendant.

Pleas: the general issue, and that no notice had been given by the plaintiff, since his attaining the age of twenty-one, that he was ready to give up the house. The instrument, when produced, had no stamp, and it was submitted that it was a joint agreement, respecting a matter exceeding the sum of 20*l.*; and that the second plea had not been answered.

WARD v. CLARK.
Where a contract for the letting of parish lands is made by the parish officers, their successors in office can only sue upon that contract in their corporate capacity, under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, and must, therefore, so describe themselves in the declaration.

Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant and to enter the same for the plaintiffs, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

This was an action for the use and occupation of a piece of land, called the Town Meadow, from the 18th July, 1842, to the 25th November, 1843, the date of the commencement of the action. It appeared that the land in question was vested in the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Hawleigh; and that by an agreement dated 18th July, 1842, between James Ward and Joseph Pawsey, the then churchwardens, and Francis Baker and John Wingood, overseers, of the one part, and the defendant, of the other part, it was agreed that the defendant should take the land in question in exchange for so much of a certain field of his, called the Shoulder of Mutton Piece, as should be equal in value to the meadow, and should pay 25*l.* as the rent thereof to Michaelmas then following. In pursuance of this agreement the defendant entered into possession of the town meadow, mowed the hay, and occupied the land up to Michaelmas 1842, and fed his cattle upon it up to Christmas of the same year. In March 1843, the same churchwardens continued in office, but Denny and Greenwood became overseers. In consequence of the agreement of the 18th July, 1842, not being carried out, the present action was commenced. At the trial it was objected that the action ought to have been brought in the names of Ward, Pawsey, Baker, and Wingood, instead of Ward, Pawsey, Denny, and Greenwood; and that if the plaintiffs relied on 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, as vesting the land in them as churchwardens and overseers, they ought to have declared in their character of churchwardens and overseers, and not in their private capacity. But it was submitted, that the plaintiffs having proved an occupation from March 1843, which would be in the time of the present plaintiffs being in office, were, at any rate, entitled to a verdict for that portion of the time; and therefore, although it was admitted that the plaintiffs did not shew that any of the hay, &c. was on the premises at that time, still the direction of the learned judge, "that there was no tenancy under the holding, and that the question for them was, whether there was any direct evidence of an occupation from Lady-day 1843," was erroneous: citing 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17; Howard v. Shaw (8 M. & W. 118).

The Court held that the only contract to be inferred was in the character of churchwardens and overseers; and therefore, as no direct contract could be proved to have been made with the plaintiffs to entitle themselves to sue upon a contract made by their predecessors, they ought to have described themselves as churchwardens and overseers, and therefore the learned judge's direction was correct.

Rule refused.

Whitmore and Others, Assignees, &c. v. Green and Cottam.

Trover by assignees of a bankrupt, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29; 6 Geo. 4, c. 108.—Warrant of attorney—Secret act of bankruptcy.

Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and to enter the same for the defendants, or for a nonsuit.

This was an action of trover, brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, named Lawton, against Green as the sheriff of Cambridge, and Cottam as the execution creditor, under a certain judgment, on which the defendant Green entered and seized certain goods of the bankrupt. The declaration alleged a conversion in the time of the assignees; and it appeared that Cottam had sued out execution on a warrant of attorney, not in a hostile action, and that the fieri facias issued on the 26th of May, 1843. The act of bankruptcy consisted of the execution by Lawton, on the 26th or 27th of May, of a bill of sale of all his effects for the benefit of creditors, but the seizure under the fieri facias took place after the act of bankruptcy, and notice of the act of bankruptcy was given to the execution creditor before the sale. It was submitted that the prior act of bankruptcy being secret, was wiped away by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 and therefore that the execution creditor, according to Godson v. Sanctuary (4 B. & Ad. 255), was not a creditor, having security for his debt within the 108th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and was therefore protected by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29: citing 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 81; Whitmore v. Robertson (8 M. &. W. 469); Ramsay v. Eaton (10 M. & W. 21); and Skey v. Carter (11 M. & W. 571). He next submitted that trover was not the proper form of action.

The Court held the latter point to be altogether settled by Cheston v. Gibbs (13 L. J. Ex. 13), and refused the rule on that point, but granted it upon the first.

Peacock, for the execution creditor, moved to set aside the verdict as against him, and to enter a verdict or nonsuit; and submitted that all the execution creditor had done in the present case was to take the money which the sheriff had paid him in consequence of having applied for an interpleader rule and the judge directing him to pay the proceeds of the sale to the execution creditor; against him, at any rate, trover would not lie.

Rule on both points.

Harry v. David.

New Trial.

E. V. Williams moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and for misdirection.

This was an action of trespass brought against the defendant for seizing the plaintiff's goods, and it appeared that there had been a judge's order commanding the sheriff to hand over the proceeds of the goods to the plaintiff; the present action was brought to recover the actual value of the goods and the amount paid over by the sheriff; and the question was, whether the defendant, by going with the bailiff into the plaintiff's fields, and pointing out some cows and a rick of hay, saying they were the execution debtor's property, and telling him to sell as quick as he could, had made himself a trespasser.

Cur. adv. vult.

Wheldale v. Northern and Eastern Railway Company.

Liability of Railway Company—Master and servant.

Crowder moved to set aside the verdict for the defendants, and to enter the same for the plaintiff.

This was an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff against the defendants for wrongfully detaining him for not paying one shilling; and it appeared that the plaintiff had taken his place at Edmonton, which is a station on the defendants' railway, to come to London, and had paid one shilling for his fare; but upon arriving at the terminus at Shoreditch, upon his not producing his ticket, he was detained by a servant of the Eastern Counties' Railway Company. The defence was, that the action should have been brought against the Eastern Counties' Railway Company, and not the defendants; but it was submitted that inasmuch as the defendants had contracted to convey the plaintiff to London, they could not relieve themselves from that responsibility; and, consequently, the man at the terminus at Shoreditch must be considered as their servant, so as to make them liable in this action: citing Randleson v. Murray (8 A. & E. 109); Bush v. Steinman (1 B. & P. 404); Laughter v. Pointer (5 B. & Ad. 547); Quarman v. Burnett (6 M. & W. 499); Wenn v. Nelkins (Holt N. P. 229, note, cited in Storey on Agency); Brady v. Giles (1 M. & R. 495); The King v. Gutch (Mo. & Mal. 437).

The Court held that the man who committed the trespass was himself liable in the first instance; and that as it did not appear he was the servant of the defendants, but of the Eastern Counties' Railway Company, the defendants could not be liable for his wrongful act.

Geddes v. Stapleton.

New trial.

Ball moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground that a dispensation from compliance with the terms of a written contract, required to be in writing, under the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, must also be in writing: citing Goss v. Lord Nugent (5 B. & Ad. 58), Marshall v. Lynn (6 M. & W. 109), Cuff v. Penn (1 M. & Sel. 21).

Emblin v. Dartnell.

Arrest of judgment.

Hurlstone moved to arrest the judgment on the first count of the declaration, and also to enter judgment for the defendant on the second issue.

This was an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, which was stated in the declaration to be payable at No. 2, Philpot-lane. It was submitted that the declaration was bad, because it contained no averment of presentment at that place; and secondly, because there was no breach of promise alleged in that count, but merely a general breach to that, and the count upon the account stated: citing Sanderson v. Bowes (14 East, 500); Halstead v. Skelton (2 Dowl. N. S. 69; and in error, 2 Law T 228); Williams v. Waring (10 B. & C. 2).

Whitmore and Others, Assignees, v. Gilmore.

Nonsuit—Reduction of damages—Bankruptcy.

E. James moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs, and to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages.

This was an action for work alleged to have been done by the assignees. The fiat issued on the 23rd of June, 1841, and the choice of assignees on the 6th of July following. The bankrupt was called, and proved doing work to the amount of 20*l.* previously to his bankruptcy, and 6*l.* 10s worth of work between those two periods. It was now submitted either that the plaintiffs must be nonsuited, or the verdict reduced to the sum of 6*l.* 10s.

Chanter v. Dewhurst and Another.

New trial.

Peacock moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial.

This was an action to recover from the defendant the sum of 31*l.* 10s. for a license to erect and use a certain patent invention, called Chanter's Furnace. The patent, when produced, was found to contain a clause prohibiting any person from using the patent without a license under the plaintiff's hand and seal, but the license, when produced, was under hand only. Three other points were made, but overruled by the Court, and the rule was granted on the first point only. Case cited: Chanter v. Dickinson (6 Scott, N. R. 182).

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Alsager and Another, Assignees, &c. v. Currie and Another.

Special case.

A party has a right to set off the amount of a bill of exchange which he has discounted for a bankrupt before his bankruptcy, but which does not fall due until after action brought, and of which the bankrupt was only an indorser—Mutual credit, within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50.

This was an action of indebitatus assumpsit, to recover a balance of 179*l.* 19s. 11d. alleged to be due to the bankrupt from the defendants, as his bankers; Plea, non assumpsit. Under a justice's order, the defendants were at liberty to give in evidence any matter in bar of the action, and the question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the defendants, as such bankers, were entitled, by way of mutual credit, to set off certain bills which they had discounted for the bankrupt, and which bore his indorsement, but were not due at the time of the commencement of the action, but of the dishonour of which due notice had been subsequently given.

The action was commenced on the 2nd Nov. 1843, to recover the sum of 179*l.* 19s. 11d. admitted to be in the defendants' hands as the balance of the bankrupt's account; but the defendants claimed to set off against that sum a part of the amount of certain bills of exchange which they had discounted for the bankrupt, but which did not fall due before the 4th Jan. 1843. At the time of the transaction the bills were regularly entered to the credit of the bankrupt, and he was at the same time debited with the discount on them.

Peacock, for the plaintiffs, submitted that this was not a case of mutual credit within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50; that the discounting of a bill of exchange raised no credit against the indorser, but was in the nature of a purchase of the bill; and that mere indorsement of a bill was not such a debt or demand as is provable under the commission within the meaning of that section: citing Rose v. Hart (8 Taunt. 499); 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 28; Young v. Bank of Bengal (1 Moore, Priv. Council R. p. 150, S. C.; 1 Deac. Bk. Ca. 622); Arbouin v. Tritton (Holt, N. P. 408); Oliver v. Smith (5 Taunt. 56); Emly v. Lye (15 East, 7); Starey v. Barnes (7 East, 435); Collins v. Jones (10 B. & C. 777); Gibson v. Bell (1 N. C. 754); 7 Geo. 1, c. 21; Rose v. Sims (1 B. & Ad. 521); Abbott v. Hicks (5 N. C. 578).

J. W. Smith, for the defendants, was not heard.

The Court held that this was clearly a debt provable under the commission, and within the case of Starey v. Barnes (7 East, 435); consequently there was a mutual credit within the meaning of the 50th section of the Bankrupt Act, and therefore the defendants were entitled to set off the amount against the plaintiffs' claim.

Judgment—Non obstante veredicto.

Butt moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and to enter up judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered, and the defendant pleaded, that the goods were, before the time of the sale, parcel of the estate and effects of John Allen, who died intestate; that the plaintiff, pretending to be executor of the goods and chattels of the said John Allen, sold and delivered the goods to the defendant; but that the plaintiff was not the executor of the last will and testament of the said John Allen, and had no right to sell the goods; and that after the sale letters of administration were granted to George Newman, who thereupon became entitled to the said sum, and thereupon demanded it of the defendant who paid the same.

EARL OF HARDWICKE v. LORD SANDYS.

Special case.

Money had and received will not lie by the purchaser of a manor to recover back from the vendor the amount of a fine received by him subsequently to the day on which the purchase-money was to have been paid, but in respect of an admittance to which the tenant was entitled long before such day of payment.

This was an action for money had and received, brought by the plaintiff, to recover from the defendant the amount of a fine alleged to be payable to the plaintiff as lord of a certain manor. It appeared that the manor in question had been sold by the defendant to the plaintiff, and, by the terms of the contract, the purchase-money was to have been paid on or before 24th of June, 1843; but in consequence of some delay taking place in preparing the conveyance, the time for payment was postponed, at the plaintiff's request, to the 24th of July, but interest was to be calculated and payable thereon from the 24th of June. The purchase was not completed before the end of August, and the deed of conveyance not executed until the 8th of September following. It appeared, that nearly two years prior to the 24th of June, a party of the name f Westcomb had become entitled to admittance as tenant to certain copyhold tenements, part of the manor in question, but at the request of the tenant, no admittance took place until the 1st of July; but the fine, the amount of which was sought to be recovered in the present action, was not paid to the defendant until the 8th of December following, viz. after the conveyance was executed and possession delivered to the plaintiff.

Kelly (Cleasby with him) submitted, first, that a lord of a manor has no right nor power to demand a fine until the admission of the tenant takes place; consequently, as the admission did not take place before 1st of July, the fine did not become payable before that period; and as the plaintiff would be considered, at any rate in a court of equity, to be the owner of the estate from the 24th of June, he was entitled to recover back this fine from the defendant, as money had and received to the plaintiff's use. Secondly, that the conditions of sale contained a clause "that on the completion of the respective purchases, the purchaser should be entitled to the rents and profits of such parts of the lands as were let;" and that this fine must be considered to be within that condition, as being either rent or profits of a part of the estate which is let; otherwise, no part of that condition could apply to the lot in question; and that, at any rate, the condition was ambiguous, and must be construed in favour of the purchaser.

Erle, for the defendant, was not heard.

The COURT held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on either ground: not on the first, because the fine was payable at the time the tenant became entitled to admittance, which in the present instance was long before the 24th of June; and not upon the second, as the fine could not be considered to fall within the meaning of that part of the conditions of sale.

Judgment for the defendant.

BREWER v. DEW and ANOTHER.

Where a plaintiff obtains judgment on demurrer, and goes down to trial on other issues, which are found for him with one shilling damages, and the judge refuses to certify, he is entitled to the costs of the judgment on the demurrer, but not to the general costs of the cause or of the issues found for him.

Peacock moved for a review of taxation. This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, and seizing and carrying away his goods.

The defendants pleaded that after the commencement of the action the plaintiff became bankrupt. The plaintiff demurred, and obtained judgment upon the demurrer, and afterwards went down to trial on certain issues of fact, on which he obtained a verdict with one shilling damages, but the judge refused to certify.

Upon the taxation of costs, the Master refused to allow the plaintiff any costs whatever. It was now submitted that he was entitled to the general costs of the cause, and of the issues found for him, notwithstanding the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24; but that at any rate he was entitled to the costs of the judgment upon the demurrer; citing 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24; Taylor v. Rolfe and Others (13 Law J. 39, Q.B.)

The COURT held that the plaintiff having only recovered a verdict of one shilling, and the judge having refused to certify, was not entitled to any costs at all on the trial of the cause, but was clearly entitled to the costs on the judgment on demurrer, inasmuch as judgments on demurrer are not affected by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24. Rule nisi.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

Mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

Howorth applied for a mandamus commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal. The application was made on behalf of a ratepayer of St. Pancras' parish, who had been assessed to a paving rate made under the authority of the Southampton Paving Act, 41 Geo. 3, c. 131 (local), and others. The question was, whether the appeal clause in the above Act is taken away by that of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 27 (public local). The justices had held that it is, but nevertheless advised this application, with the view of getting the decision of the Court on the conflicting appeal clauses of the two Acts. Rule nisi.

HAY v. THE EARL OF CHARLEVILLE.

Where a peer of Ireland has a residence in London, but is staying in Ireland, the Court will not grant a distringas to compel an appearance, it not appearing that he is keeping out of the way to avoid service.

Webster, on a former day, applied to the Court for a distringas to compel the appearance of the defendant, on an affidavit that stated that repeated applications had been made at the town residence of the noble defendant with the view of serving him with the writ herein, but that the answers were that he was in Ireland; that letters had been directed to him at his residence in Ireland, and that no answers had been returned; and that his solicitors had also been ineffectually communicated with upon the subject. (Snape v. The Earl of Waldegrave, 2 Dowl. N. S. 401.)

His LORDSHIP now declined to grant the writ, on the ground that there was nothing to shew that the defendant was keeping out of the way to avoid the process, since he is a peer of Ireland, and has a residence in that country, and that the proper course would be to sue him in that kingdom. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF KENT.

Mandamus to justices to compel them to issue a warrant to levy the amount of compensation awarded by them under a local Act.

Henderson moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus commanding the above justices to issue a warrant of distress to levy on the treasurer of the commissioners appointed under the Dartford Creek Act (3 Vict.), the sum of 24*l*. 11*s*. 3*d*. being the amount of assessed compensation and costs. Under the above Act the commissioners were to make compensation for injuries done to private individuals; and the 34th clause provides that where the compensation shall be disputed, and shall be under 20*l*. that resort shall be had to two justices, who are to award the amount to be levied on the treasurer. In this case proceedings had been taken under this clause, and the justices had decided in favour of the applicant, whereupon the commissioners applied to the Court of Queen's Bench to remove the conviction by certiorari, with the view to its being quashed; in this they failed, and the applicant then applied to the justices for their warrant of distress to levy the amount of compensation and costs. An indemnity had been offered, but the justices declined (under advice) to issue the warrant unless by the authority of this Court. Rule nisi.

BANFIELD v. DARRELL.

Distringas against lunatic to compel an appearance.

Lush moved for a distringas to compel an appearance against the defendant, who is a lunatic. The affidavit disclosed that several calls had been made at the residence of the defendant, but that the answers were, that he could not be seen; that he resides with his father, and has a keeper, neither of whom could be met with. The process was left with the servant. Rule granted.

FORD v. JONES.—Wordsworth moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why this case should not be tried by a common jury after this Term, unless he would consent to the appointment of another arbitrator. This case had been referred to Mr. Serjt. Bompas, in consequence of whose death the reference had gone off. Rule nisi.

HATTON v. MACREADY.—Charnock moved in this case, which had been tried before the under-sheriff, when a verdict was returned for the defendant, to set aside the writ of trial, on the ground that the cause was not within the Act, it being for unliquidated damages. DOE dem. —— v. ROE.

Judgment against the casual ejector—Sufficiency of date of declaration.

Petersdorff moved for judgment against the casual ejector. The declaration had been duly served, but was headed Hilary Term, 8th Victoria; the date of the demise, however, was the 27th March, 1844, and the notice was to appear in next Easter Term; the service was in March last. DOE dem. —— v. ROE.

Judgment against the casual ejector—Sufficiency of service.

6th of March last, the servant of the tenant was served with the declaration. On the 1st of April the deponent saw a Mr. Hine, a solicitor, who stated that he was the attorney for a Mrs. Smithers, who claims to be landlady, and who had received the declaration from the tenant. Rule nisi.

BENN v. HUTCHINSON.

Application against the sheriff to refund money improperly demanded and received by his officer.

Lush moved for a rule calling upon the sheriff of Durham to shew cause why he should not refund to the defendant the sum of 7*l.* 10s. and pay the costs of the application.

It appeared that the defendant, apprehending that a fi. fa. would be levied on his property, sent his son to the officer to inquire if such a writ had been received, as he would pay the amount without the necessity of a levy. On the 5th of February he received a message that a warrant had been obtained, whereupon he attended at the office of the sheriff's officer, and found that the warrant was for 94*l.* 0s. 6d. and 3*l.* 0s. 6d. costs, which amounts he caused to be paid. On the 10th of February he received a message that a sale would that day take place of some of his sheep under the execution, and, on his attending to know how this was, he saw the officer's wife, who said that the sum of 7*l.* 10s. was due for poundage and costs, and that unless that amount was paid, the sheep would be sold. Upon this the defendant paid the amount, under protest, on the same day, and took a receipt. It was now contended that the demand and reception of this latter sum (there being no levy) was an extortion. (Walls v. Coates, 11 Ad. & Ell. 826.) Rule nisi.

Where an application is made under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, s. 5, for an order to compel a witness to attend under a commission issued by a Scotch court, the rule is not absolute in the first instance.

Barstow moved for an order to compel one James Alexander to appear before a commissioner, named in a commission issued in a cause now depending in the Court of Session, and to produce certain documents.

This application was made under the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, the fifth section of which provides for the examination of witnesses in England in causes depending in other parts of the Queen's dominions, and which points out the course to be pursued in the event of the party's refusal to attend; viz. by application to one of the superior courts for a rule or order to compel his appearance.

It was suggested, that this would be a rule absolute for the order in the first instance; but the learned judge thought that the party should be at liberty to shew cause if he thought proper. Rule nisi.

DATTON v. MACREADY.

Application to set aside a writ of trial on the ground of the demand being for unliquidated damages—What are not unliquidated damages.

Charnock, on a former day (Monday), applied on behalf of the plaintiff to set aside the writ of trial herein, on the ground that the damages were unliquidated, and therefore not the subject of a trial before the sheriff. The plaintiff claimed a sum of 19*l.* odd; and the amount was made up of certain sums which the plaintiff claimed as due to him for having performed on an emergency a character at the defendant's theatre—for compensation (the amount of a week's salary), in having been turned off from his engagements without notice, and also for certain deductions made in his salary on nights when the theatre was shut. At the trial a verdict was returned for the defendant, and it was now contended that these claims were in the nature of unliquidated damages, and not, therefore, the subject of a writ of trial.

COLERIDGE, J. in refusing the rule (this day) said that the various claims were not in his judgment in the nature of unliquidated damages; and that in particular the claim for performing the part was in the nature of a quantum meruit, and that the case was similar to all those in which a demand is made for work and labour. His lordship distinguished this case from those cited in the motion (see report). Rule refused.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF MERIONETHSHIRE.

Mandamus to justices to hear an appeal.

Welsby moved for a mandamus commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal. On the 1st of January an order of removal was made, and suspended on the 10th; on which day notice was given to the appellant parish, who, therefore, gave a notice of appeal, and subsequently served their grounds of objection. On the 29th of March, the respondents obtained a supersedeas of their order, and served the same on the appellant, but made no tender of any costs. On the 1st of April the respondents obtained a fresh order of removal, which they served on the 9th, when they tendered 2*l.* which the appellants refused as too little, and went to the sessions with their appeal, which the justices refused to permit to be entered. Rule nisi.

BICKNELL v. WETHERELL.—Phinn moved to discharge the defendant out of custody, on the ground that the ca. sa. had been amended by an order of court, and not resealed, and on other grounds. Rule refused.

REG. v. FRAMPTON.—Cockburn, Q. C. moved that the defendant, who had been found guilty on an indictment for the non-repair of a road, should be discharged from the same on payment of a nominal fine, the road having been put in repair, and there being the certificate of two justices to that effect. Application granted.

PRYOR and ANOTHER v. SWAYNE.—Chambers shewed cause against a rule obtained by Fitzherbert to set aside a warrant of attorney, the judgment, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground of there being no attorney present at the time of the execution nominated by the defendant. At the conclusion of his argument, Mr. Justice Coleridge intimated that he would not at present call upon Mr. Fitzherbert in reply.

Thursday, April 25.

THE MARQUIS OF AYLESBURY v. CODDICK.

Where a notice of declaration cannot be delivered to a party on account of his having left his former place of abode, the Court should be applied to for its permission to substitute a service, before any substituted service has, in fact, been made.

Sir J. Bayley moved for leave to fix the notice of declaration up in the office, on the following facts:—The defendant had been served with the writ of summons on the 1st of April, at her house. On the 16th an application was made at the same house, with the view of delivering the notice of declaration, when it was ascertained that she had secretly removed, and it could not be learnt to where she had gone. Upon this a copy of the notice was stuck on the door, and one thrust under it.

COLERIDGE, J.—You must do that over again with the leave of the Court which you have done without it. The notice of declaration may be delivered again in the same way, and then you may affix the notice up in the office. Application granted.

Ex parte DEARDON, re FERRAND.

Application against an attorney, who was formerly steward of a manor, to deliver up manorial documents.

Henderson moved for a rule calling upon Mr. Thomas Ferrand, an attorney of this court, to shew cause why he should not forthwith deliver up to James Deardon, esq. lord of the manor of Rochdale, or to Mr. Samuel Lomax, the present steward of the said manor, all the rolls, records, muniments, books, and documents of the said manor, now in the possession of the said Thomas Ferrand, which have come to his hands as steward of the said manor. These documents had come to Mr. Ferrand's possession whilst steward of the said manor, which office he no longer holds, and it was suggested that he refuses to deliver them up, on the ground of his having a lien as the attorney of Mr. Deardon. On the part of the applicant, it was contended that he had no right, on such a ground, to detain manorial writings, and which have come to his hands as steward. (3 T. Mandamus to a railway company to issue a warrant to impannel a jury to assess damages for an injury occasioned by their works.

E. V. Williams moved for a mandamus commanding the directors of the above company to issue their warrant to summon a jury to assess the damages done to the coal mines of Messrs. Fryer.

It appeared that in the course of the execution of the works of the company, the coal mines of the above parties had been drowned by the escape of a large body of water, and that the company, on an application to them, had refused to make compensation. Rule nisi.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

WALTERS v. WHALLEY.—J. W. Smith moved for a rule referring the case to the Master, to ascertain what had been paid for principal and interest herein, on the writ of elegit, and that 100*l.* now in court might be paid out to the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

ARCHBELL v. WALKER and OTHERS.—Pashley moved for a rule calling upon an attorney of this court to deliver up the postea in this cause to the plaintiff's attorney. Rule nisi.

MARSHALL v. SYMMONDS.—Hughes moved to set aside the issue and notice of trial herein, for irregularity, the issue not specifying the date of the writ of summons. Rule nisi.

BENNETT v. DUNCAN.—Johnson shewed cause against a rule obtained by Hance for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after Term.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Monday, April 22.

Ex parte BARNETT, re ALLEN.

Mortgage—Trust for sale—Lord Loughborough's Order.

An assignment upon trust for sale for the purpose of securing a debt is not a mortgage within the meaning of Lord Loughborough's Order.

By deed, bearing date the 13th day of July, 1839, the life interest of Mary Allen and of the bankrupt, in certain property, was conveyed to one Mountford, in trust to sell for the purpose of securing a sum advanced to the bankrupt, and by the same deed a policy of assurance upon the life of the bankrupt was also assigned to Mountford. Subsequently to the bankruptcy, which occurred in February 1843, Mountford's interest was assigned to Barnett, the petitioner. On the 13th of March last, an order was made by the commissioner for the sale of the bankrupt's interest in this property, and this petition was presented for the purpose, amongst other things, of obtaining liberty to bid at the sale.

Bacon, for the petitioner.

Russell, for the respondents.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—Is this a mortgage? The only word used in Lord Rosslyn's Order is "mortgagee." This deed appears to me only a trust for sale, and not a mortgage. It is not every security that is a mortgage.

Russell mentioned that there was an express decision that such a deed was not a mortgage, and referred to Ex parte Pettit, in re Houghton. (Powell on Mortgages, vol. i. p. 153, n.)

The CHIEF JUDGE.—My own impression certainly agrees with that decision.

The petition was subsequently, upon other grounds, directed to stand over, with liberty to amend, upon the petitioner's paying the costs.

Wednesday, April 24.

Ex parte DANIELL, re DANIELL.

Assignee out of the jurisdiction—Conveyance of bankrupt's estate—1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, sects. 25, 26.

This was a petition presented by creditors under a fiat issued in 1835, for the removal of Sir William Daniell, one of the assignees, at present in command of the Ringdove, in the West Indies. The object was to effect the sale of certain real estates of the bankrupt, and to enable Mr. Turner, the other assignee, to complete the conveyance alone. A difficulty, however, arose in consequence of the 25th & 26th sects. of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, not providing for the case of an assignee's being removed without a new choice being made.

Swanston, for the petitioners.

The CHIEF JUDGE thought that one mode of effecting the purpose of the petitioners would be for them to take an order, declaring that it would be for the benefit of the estate that Sir William Daniell should be removed from the assigneeship, and that Mr. Turner should remain sole assignee; and ordering that Sir William Daniell should make the necessary conveyance; and then application might be made by the petitioners to the Court of Chancery for a conveyance, as in the ordinary case of a trustee out of the jurisdiction. His Honour, however, under the circumstances, considered that it would be better to have a new choice, and accordingly, upon Mr. Swanston's assenting, it was so ordered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

BANKRUPTCY.

MONDAY, April 22.—Mr. SCOTT wished to know from the right honourable gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to introduce any measure for the appointment of a taxing-officer in bankruptcy. In the Bankruptcy Bill, which had passed two years ago, there had originally been a clause appointing a taxing-officer in bankruptcy; how the clause had disappeared he knew not, but he wished to know if it was now intended to appoint a taxing-officer.—Sir J. GRAHAM had not received the notice which the honourable gentleman had been kind enough to give him of his intention to put the question until after he had entered the House. If the honourable gentleman would be kind enough to put his question to-morrow, he would make the necessary inquiries in the mean time, and be prepared to give him an answer.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM said he was anxious to state the course which he intended to pursue with regard to the County Courts Bill. He had given his best attention to a Bill which stood upon the paper for a second reading that evening, for the recovery of small debts, and which had been brought in by the honourabl and learned member for Chester (Mr. Jervis) and the honourable and learned member behind him (Mr. Watson); and the result of his consideration had led him to think that that measure contained some salutary reforms. To the greater portion of that measure, therefore, he was disposed to give his assent; and so far from looking upon it as a rival of the County Courts Bill, he thought, with some slight modifications in the former, they might proceed pari passu together, and together pa. into law. Up to the 25th clause, he (Sir James Graham) had no objection to the honourable and learned gentleman's Bill. To the 25th clause he saw some objection. That clause provided for the appointment of new judges, in the shape of assessors. Now, he would suggest that the judges appointed under the County Courts Bill should be the judges to perform the duties of the assessors under the Bill of the honourable and learned gentleman. The summary jurisdiction he proposed to limit to cases where the amount claimed did not exceed 15*l.*; under the Bill of the honourable gentleman he saw the summary jurisdiction was extended to a higher amount, viz. 20*l.* It was open to the House to say whether the higher amount should be substituted. The course he proposed was, that the Government Bill should go through committee pro formâ, in order to enable him to introduce certain alterations, and that it should then be printed in its improved form. He would now move that the report of the money clause should be brought up, in order to its being incorporated in the bill, and he would then move that the House resolve itself into committee, pro formâ.—Mr. JERVIS had no objection to the course proposed.—Mr. WATSON remarked, that the Bill of his honourable and learned friend the member for Chester provided for the trial of issues in the superior courts. He was of opinion that the criminal business of the country required some persons of station and character presiding at quarter-sessions. There were many offences that were now sent to the assizes which might be tried before the chairman of quarter-sessions, and thus a great saving to the county rates would be experienced, and the prisoners would be tried with but little delay instead of being confined in gaol six or seven months previous to trial. At present there was no appeal from the decisions of courts of quarter-sessions. This was a point to which he trusted some consideration would be given.—Mr. W. ELLIS said he had given notice of some amendments to the County Courts Bill, the object of which was, that where a defendant in an action above 15*l.* made an affidavit that he was advised by his attorney, and believed he had a good defence, the case might be removed within seven days to one of the superior courts. And he proposed further, that when the defendant made such an affidavit, and failed in making good his assertion in the case, he should be compelled to pay the costs; and he also proposed to extend the jurisdiction, in undisputed cases, to 50*l.* He was anxious to know whether the right honourable gentleman had turned his attention to the amendments of which he had given notice.—Sir J. GRAHAM said his attention had been called to the honourable gentleman's amendments, and he understood the object was to extend the jurisdiction in cases where there was no defence to 50*l.* He (Sir J. Graham) was not disposed to extend the jurisdiction of the county courts to any such amount. But the question of amount would more properly arise in committee on the honourable and learned member for Chester's bill.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hawes,—Sir J. GRAHAM said he had no intention of incorporating the Bill of the hon. and learned member for Chester with that of the government.—Mr. CRIPPS said the objection to the Bill was, that it did too much and too little. The machinery for recovering small debts (such as might be recovered in Courts of Requests) was more extensive and more complicated than was necessary. It would be desirable that the courts were more nearly assimilated to the Courts of Requests. In all cases where summary decisions were necessary, in these small cases, it was desirable to avoid calling in a jury.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

Dr. NICHOLL moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, passed by the House of Lords. He gave a short history of the fate of former Bills, and explained that the present measure proposed to abolish all peculiar jurisdictions, thereby getting rid of about 300 courts; but to retain the diocesan courts, and to treat every place and every benefice as within the archdeaconry, diocese, and province of its actual locality; to take away ecclesiastical jurisdiction in matters of tithe and defamation; to make certain provisions for the introduction of vivâ voce evidence and trial by jury; and to invest the ecclesiastical judges with powers of enforcing their own judgments. The Bill proposed, also, to give compensations, assessable by the Treasury, to those officers whose emoluments should have been taken away or greatly reduced by these changes.—Sir G. GREY considered the principle of this Bill to be essentially different from that of the Bill of last year, and quite inadequate to meet the evils against which it professed to be directed. Many clauses contained in the former Bill, carrying out the recommendations of the ecclesiastical commissioners, were omitted in the present, particularly the clauses for abolishing the diocesan courts, those acknowledged nuisances so distinctly and strongly condemned by the commissioners. This measure would not secure such judges, or such a bar, as the country had a right to require: the principle of the former Bill, which concentrated the jurisdiction in one superior judge, was wholly abandoned in this, and the jurisdiction was to be distributed among thirty-five courts, and administered by as many inferior judges. These judges, too, were to be armed with large powers of commitment for contempt; which were powers of a nature very dangerous in the hands of inferior judges, especially when not checked by the attendance of a bar. The present measure left untouched the whole evil of bona notabilia. What price was to be paid for this plan, in the shape of salaries to judges, the house had not heard; but this he knew, that if the proposed Bill were once passed, with its judgeships and salaries, there was an end to all chance of any further reform. He thought himself justified, therefore, in moving that it should be read a second time on that day six months.—Sir R. INGLIS vindicated the ecclesiastical courts against the imputations very generally cast upon them. Though this Bill went further than he thought necessary, still, if it was intended by Government to be final, he would vote for it. But if it was to be only an instalment, a step to yet further changes, he could not consent to it. He suggested that the suitor might have an option allowed him between the diocesan and the prerogative courts, which would unite the conveniences of vicinity and of centralization. He would recommend also an index of legacies as well as of wills, for now there were many legatees, he was persuaded, who never heard of the bequests they were entitled to. He disapproved the principle of restricting the bishops to the selection of their chancellors from the bar. The great objection which he had entertained against the Bill of last year did not apply to this; he referred to the alienation of the ancient jurisdiction from the church which was attempted in that Bill, but not in the present.—Lord R. GROSVENOR opposed the Bill. He was wholly adverse to the continuance of the diocesan courts. He wished for a universal registry, not only of wills but of deeds; the machinery for the former would serve also for the latter.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in reference to what had been said by Sir R. Inglis, avowed that he still preferred the centralizing principle of last year's Bill; but declared that, if the present measure should pass, he did not believe, after the experience he had had of such Bills, that he should ever propose another upon this subject. The suggestion of an index to legacies had been considered and inquired into, but the result of the examination was, that there were disadvantages which would overbalance the benefits. He admitted that the evil of bona notabilia was not entirely removed by this Bill; but it was diminished in the proportion which the thirty or forty retained diocesan courts bore to the 300 abolished peculiars. He referred to several of the clauses as introducing undeniable advantages; and, though he did not think this measure so perfect as that of last year, he recommended it to the House as a decided improvement on the existing system.—Lord J. RUSSELL adverted to the high tone in which the Ministers had asserted the principles of last year's Bill; and taunted them with the humiliating position in which he said they had placed themselves by their present abandonment of those principles. He contended that there was no ground of reason why the administration of the property of deceased persons should belong to the church. It was a mere usurpation, made in the dark ages. The commissioners had expressed it as their decided opinion that the diocesan courts ought to be abolished: this Bill went counter to that opinion. Thus the evils of bona notabilia were kept alive, and questions of the greatest importance left to come on before judges almost without experience, who would take the salary, but give very little learning in return for it. The two Houses of Parliament might concur in an address for the removal of any of these judges upon misbehaviour; but there was no power of compelling the bishops to act upon that address. It could not even be said, in defence of this Bill, that it was a concession to the sense of Parliament; for the sense of Parliament had never been fairly taken upon it.—Mr. ELPHINSTONE complained that most of the important recommendations of the commissioners were neglected in this Bill, particularly the recommendation to abolish the diocesan courts. He enlarged on the inconvenience of their localities as compared with that of a court in the metropolis.—Mr. WATSON supported Sir G. Grey's amendment. He condemned the retention of the diocesan courts on several accounts, but particularly on the ground that there ought to be one central testamentary jurisdiction for all property, real as well as personal. The business of the diocesan courts would be now increased by the abolition of the peculiars; and thus, if hereafter it should be proposed to abolish the diocesan courts, the claim for compensation would be so much the larger.—The House divided, when there appeared—

Majority	99

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, after the division upon the amendment, renewed the debate upon the main question. Last year the First Lord of the Treasury had vowed that the Bill of that year was an honest one. How, then, could this be an honest one, which so widely varied from the other? Sir R. Inglis, who wished to preserve all old abuses, was no doubt consistent in supporting this Bill, by which all old abuses were preserved. For his own part, he wanted no ecclesiastical courts, no canon law.—Sir R. PEEL adhered to what he had said last year. He had then said that the Bill was an honest measure, because he knew that the Ministers, who conscientiously promoted it, would be opposed upon it by their own general supporters. He still preferred that bill, and avowed that if he had thought it could be carried now, he would have advised Sir J. Graham to repeat the experiment of it; but believing that this could not be effected, he thought it better to secure a minor benefit—the abolition of peculiars—than to allow the attempt at a broader legislation to fail again in this year, as it had failed for the twenty years preceding. He strongly felt the importance and utility of legal reforms; but they were always attended with great difficulty, from vested interests, and from claims for compensation. He felt no humiliation in the course the Government had taken; they were doing what, on the whole, they believed to be safest and best. The noble lord had reserved to himself the right of changing his opinion on the matter of the factories, from the purest motives, he doubted not; but let the noble lord make that same allowance for the integrity of others.—Mr. C. BULLER said, that if last year's Bill was honest in including much which might provoke the opposition of the supporters of the Government, the present Bill, which omitted every thing that could provoke such opposition, could have very little claim to the epithet of honest. The Bill was then read a second time.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

ATTENTION is directed to many decisions of considerable importance, especially to one in the Queen's Bench, Reg. v. Justices of Kesteven, in which it was decided, that if the Quarter Sessions hold the grounds of an appeal to be insufficient, and refuse, on that account, to allow the appellants to go into their case, it amounts to a decision on the merits, and a mandamus will not issue to compel the sessions to hear the appeal, overruling the cases of Reg. v. Carmarthen, and Reg. v. The West Riding of Yorkshire.

From the London Gazette, Friday, April 19.

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 17th day of April, 1844; present, the Queen's most excellent Majesty in Council.

This day the Right Hon. John Hope, Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland, and the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Pollock, knight, Lord Chief Baron of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, were, by her Majesty's command, sworn of her Majesty's most hon. Privy Council, and took their respective places at the board accordingly.

Her Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. William Earl of Lonsdale to be Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, his lordship this day took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

Her Majesty in Council was this day pleased, upon the representation of the Right Hon. the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education, to appoint the Rev. H. Walford Bellairs, the Rev. Frederick Watkins, and Joseph Fletcher, esq. to be three of her Majesty's inspectors of schools.

WHITEHALL, April 17.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto William Chambers, of Glenericht, in the county of Perth, esq. Companion of the most hon. Military Order of the Bath and colonel in the army.

April 19.—The Queen has been pleased to present the Rev. John Lees, D.D. to the church and parish of Stornoway, in the presbytery and isle of Lewis, and county of Ross, vacant by the transportation of the Rev. John Cameron, late minister thereof, to the church and parish of Edderton, in the presbytery of Tain.

Office of the Poor-Law Commissioners,
Somerset-house, April 18.

In pursuance of an Act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 4th and 5th years of the reign of his late Majesty King William IV. cap. 76, entitled "An Act for the amendment and better administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales;"

This is to give notice, that the Poor-Law Commissioners have appointed Colonel Thomas Francis Wade to be an Assistant Commissioner of Poor-Laws; and that the said Colonel Thomas Francis Wade, on this present 18th day of April, 1844, took the oath required by the said Act, before the Hon. Mr. Justice Wightman, at Westminster-hall.

Signed, by order of the Board,
GEORGE COODE, Assistant-Secretary.

The Marquis of Bute will, we hear, be again requested to represent her Majesty as Lord High Commissioner at the forthcoming General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, for the third time.

REGULA GENERALIS.

Easter Term, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of Queen Victoria.

It is ordered, That for the future it shall not be necessary to have a warrant of attorney to acknowledge satisfaction of a judgment, or a judge's fiat thereon, but that it shall be requisite only to produce a satisfaction piece similar to that in use in the Court of Queen's Bench, except that in all cases such satisfaction piece shall be signed by the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or their personal representatives, and such signature or signatures shall be witnessed by a practising attorney of one of the Courts at Westminster, expressly named by him or them, and attending at his or their request to inform him or them of the nature and effect of such satisfaction piece before the same is signed; and which attorney shall declare himself in the attestation thereto to be attorney for the person or persons so signing the same, and state he is witness as such attorney; but any judge at Chambers shall have power to make an order dispensing with such signature of the plaintiff or plaintiffs or their personal representatives, under special circumstances, as he may think right: and that in cases where the satisfaction piece is signed by the personal representative of a deceased plaintiff, he shall prove his representative character in such way as the Master may direct.

Registered Electors in Great Britain.—Mr. Hume has procured, by order of the House of Commons, abstract returns of the number of electors on the register for each county, city, &c., in England, Wales, and Scotland, in the years 1839 40 and 1842-43, distinguishing their different qualifications. We subjoin the following interesting and important statistical information. The total number of electors on the various registers of all the English counties in the year 1842-43 was 479,530, exhibiting an increase of 20,254 over the number registered in 1839-40. Of these 479,530 electors, 312,873 were freeholders, 26,275 copyholders and holders by customary tenure, 22,722 leaseholders for a period of years or for lives, 106,736 50*l.* occupying tenants, 1,686 trustees, &c., 1,996 office-holders, &c., and 6,853 holders of joint qualifications, &c. In Wales the total number of county electors in 1842-43 amounted to 38,657, exhibiting an increase of 2,207 over the year 1839-40. Of this number, 21,580 were freeholders, 29,255 50*l.* occupying tenants, and 6,450 lease-holders. The total number of electors on the registers of the various cities, towns, and boroughs in England amounted in 1842-43 to 328,686, exhibiting an increase of 9,290 over the year 1839 40. Of these 328,686 city and borough voters, 244,066 were 10*l.* householders, 52,161 freemen and liverymen, 6,187 freeholders or burgage tenants, 82,127 scot-and-lot voters, 3,630 potwallers, 54 office-holders, and 16,051 holders of joint qualifications. The number of freemen has hardly fluctuated at all; but the 10*l.* householders have increased by 13,323. The total number of borough voters in Wales amounted in 1842-3 to 9,665, showing a decrease of 365 since 1839-40; of these 9,655, 6,068 were 10*l.* householders, and 2,581 freemen. Crossing the Tweed, and proceeding to Caledonia, we find that the total number of county electors in Scotland amounted in 1842-43 to 48,820, shewing an increase of 1,314 since the year 1839-40; of these 48,820 voters, 18,126 were sole or joint proprietors, 2,679 life-renters, 23,853 leaseholders (including sole or joint occupants, &c.), 650 in right of wives, 1,175 office-holders, 507 joint qualifications, besides 2,087 who have been transferred from the old to the new roll of freeholders. The total number of electors on the registers of the various cities, towns, and burghs of Scotland amounted in 1842-43 to 36,424; and in 1839-40 to 35,680; 12,012 were proprietors, 22,663 occupiers, 295 life-renters, 497 in right of wives, and 1,988 joint qualifications. It thus appears that the gross total number of electors (both county and borough) in Great Britain amounted altogether in the years 1842-43 to 941,782, showing a gross increase within three years of 83,394. Taking the total population of Great Britain at 18,000,000, it will be seen that 1-19th portion of the people exercise the elective franchise, which is nearly 5¼ per cent.

The Northern Circuit.—At the conclusion of the present assizes, on Saturday last, Mr. Baron Rolfe, after sitting at Liverpool for nearly three weeks, observed to Mr. Wortley that it was almost more than human nature could endure to go through the labours of the northern circuit.—Leeds Mercury.

First Sunday in Term.—Sunday last being the first Sunday of Easter Term, agreeably to established custom, the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, together with the Lord Mayor, the sheriffs, and other civic functionaries, attended divine service at St. Paul's Cathedral, in the afternoon. Shortly after three o'clock there entered Lord Denman, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Gurney, Mr. Baron Rolfe, Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Cresswell, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, Aldermen Farebrother, Wilson, T. Wood, Gibbs, Johnson, Hughes Hughes, Mr. Sheriff Musgrove, and Mr. Sheriff Moon, the Common Serjeant, and Commissioner Bullock. About twenty common councilmen were also present. The Bishop of London, the Bishop of Llandaff (Dean of St. Paul's), and Archdeacon Hall, occupied their respective seats. That portion of the edifice devoted to divine service was crowded to excess, and great anxiety prevailed to obtain admission. All the judges and the other distinguished persons mentioned were habited in their robes of office. Full cathedral service was performed, during which the Lord Bishop of London ascended the pulpit, and preached from the second chapter of Saint Paul's epistle to the Philippians, 12th and 13th verses. The discourse, which had reference entirely to the immediate text, was a very appropriate one, and was heard with the deepest attention by all present. At the conclusion of the sermon, the remainder of the church service was performed, and the Lord Mayor, judges, Recorder, and the other functionaries, left the church in the same order in which they had entered. It was expected that the new Chief Baron (Sir F. Pollock) would have attended, but the learned judge, to the great disappointment of several, was not present.

Will of Sir Francis Burdett.—The will and codicils of the late Sir Francis Burdett have been proved in Doctors' Commons by Sir Edmund Antrobus, E. Antrobus, jun. E. Marjoribanks, and W. M. Coulthurst, esqrs. the executors. The deceased gives to his wife, Lady Burdett, his mansion in St. James's-place, plate, 2,500*l.* per annum, money at his banker's, carriages, horses, and money secured on estates amounting to a princely income (which, alas! she never enjoyed); to his two daughters, Miss Burdett Coutts and Mrs. Cave, 10,000*l.* each; to a Miss Meredith, living with Miss Coutts, 500*l.* as a token of his esteem. To his nephews and other relatives several legacies are given. He gives to his steward 250*l.* and recommends his family to continue him in their service. To his butler, grooms, and gamekeeper, annuities varying from 20*l.* to 50*l.* per annum for life, and all servants one year's wages and a suit of mourning. To one of his grooms, named Howard, he gives an annuity of 30*l.* coupled with a request that he will take special care of a terrier dog (which, during Sir Francis's life, was a great favourite). The residue and bulk of his property is given equally between Lady Burdett and his son. The property is sworn under 160,000*l.*

Will of Lady Burdett.—The will of this lady has been proved, by the sole executor, John Parkinson, esq. of Lincoln's inn-fields. The amount of personal property is sworn under 10,000*l.* Her ladyship bequeaths her large silver inkstand (the gift of her mother) to Sir Francis Burdett. To Mrs. Otway Cave, the whole of her plate bearing her (Lady Burdett's) initials. To Miss Burdett Coutts, all papers and boxes sealed and locked in Skelton-street and the Strand, together with the portrait of her "dear husband," by Shee. Her jewellery and trinkets to be divided between her daughters. The cash at her banker's to be divided among Lady North, Viscountess Sandon (children of her "late beloved sister"), Mrs. Cave, and Mrs. Trevanion (her daughters), subject to a legacy of 50*l.* to Miss Meredith (living with Miss Coutts), and other legacies to god-sons, god-daughters, servants, &c. It may be necessary to observe that the above property was her ladyship's private property, she not having lived to enjoy the large fortune left her by her husband, which accounts for the comparatively small sum under which the personalty has been sworn. The will is dated as lately as October 1843.

Middle Temple, April 20.—The undermentioned gentlemen, upon taking the customary oaths before the benchers of this hon. society, were thereupon called to the degree of barrister-at-law:—Thomas Charles Thompson, only son of Thomas Thompson, esq. deceased, of Bishopwearmouth, in the county of Durham; and Ernest Charles Jones, only son of Major Charles Jones, late aide-de-camp to the King of Hanover.

We understand the benchers of the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple have determined upon enforcing a more strict course of examination of its applicants for admission to the bar than has hitherto existed, and that with a view of effecting the same, the benchers have appointed, in addition to two of the former examiners—John Leycester Adolphus and Edward Bullock, esqrs.—Robert Ingham, Henry Davison, and Gerard W. Lydekker (of the common law bar), and William Henry Harrison and Thomas Henry Haddan, esqrs. (of the Chancery bar), examiners of the qualifications of the law students of the Inner Temple previous to their admission to the bar. The present Lord Abinger was one of the examiners at the same time with Mr. Adolphus and Mr. Bullock, and his lordship resigned directly after his accession to the peerage.

That spirit of competition which we are apt to consider as the soul of trade, was vehemently censured by a parliament of Edward III. What would a modern auctioneer think of an Act, like the 33 Ed. 3, relating to the sale of herrings, which recites, 'that they were sold at a most unreasonable price," occasioned "by many merchants, as well labourers as servants, coming to the fairs, and every one by malice and envy increasing the price upon his competitor, so that, if one bids fourpence, another offers tenpence more, and so every one surmounteth the other in bargaining."

IRELAND.—THE STATE PROSECUTIONS.

Dublin, Wednesday Evening, April 25th.

At a late hour on Saturday evening, just before the Court rose, the Attorney-General came into the Queen's Bench, and requested the Court to allow the motions in the case of Reg. v. O'Connell to stand over to a future day. He stated that he had deemed it his duty, in consequence of the charges contained in the affidavits filed in support of the traversers' notice of motion for a new trial, to call on the clerks of the peace, and Mr. Mc Grath, the chief clerk in their office, who had acted as registrar to the recorder in the late revision of the jury lists, to answer the matter of those affidavits, or to state in writing that they declined so to do. The answers of these gentlemen had not been received up to that period, and therefore he desired further time, in order to ascertain whether those persons intended to make affidavits, before the legal advisers of the Crown should determine on the course they should adopt. It was then arranged, after some conversation between the Court, the Attorney-General, and the traversers' counsel, that the motion should stand over generally, the Attorney General undertaking to give the usual notice when he desired the case to be proceeded with.

This postponement was the subject of much discussion, both among the profession and the public; some asserting that the postponement was in consequence of the Crown finding themselves unable to maintain their verdict; and others asserting that a compromise had been entered into with the traversers. However, both these premises have proved incorrect, as on Monday affidavits were sworn by Messrs. Archer and Dickenson, clerks of the peace, and by Mr. Magrath, exculpating themselves, and stating their belief that the omission of the names referred to from the jury lists was the result of accident and not of design, and resulted from the great hurry of business at the time. On Tuesday, notice was served on all the traversers by the Crown solicitor, calling on them to bring forward their motion for a new trial on Thursday the 25th instant; and in addition to the affidavits already mentioned, affidavits to oppose the motion have been sworn on the part of the Crown by Mr. Kemmis, the Crown solicitor, by all the junior clerks in the clerk of the peace's office, which are to the same effect as that made by the chief clerk, Mr. McGrath. An affidavit has also been sworn by Mr. Hodges, the government reporter; so that in all probability the discussion of the motion will commence on Thursday week; when it will terminate, judging from the previous proceedings, it would be impossible to predict.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BANKRUPTCY PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg to call your attention, and through you that of the public, to a very vexatious course of proceeding which has of late been adopted in one at least, probably though in more, of the new District Courts of Bankruptcy.

I enclosed an affidavit of debt, written on the ordinary-sized foolscap paper, on the 15th of March last, to one of the official assignees of the Birmingham District Court, and after its being retained until the 19th of the present month, it was returned to me by the solicitor to the fiat, with an intimation that it had been refused by the official assignee, as being "on the wrong-sized paper" and the heading irregular, and that a fresh affidavit should be sent before Wednesday (this day), when the next (for aught I know, the last) meeting was to take place; but no explanation is vouchsafed either as to what was the correct size of paper, or whether the heading was irregular; which latter, however, was, I venture to say, altogether a captious objection. Now, it appears to me, I confess, independently of the very unceremonious way in which this affidavit has been treated, as to which I say nothing, that an objection to receive an affidavit, on the ground that it is on the wrong-sized paper, id est, not on the particular size of paper sanctioned or adopted by a particular court, is preposterous, and is a dictation on the part of certain persons in office which the Profession ought not to submit to. There are no less than seven District Courts of Bankruptcy, and it is by no means impossible that each may choose to vary the size of paper made use of! Is it to be said, then, that an attorney is to provide himself with a stock of paper suitable to each court, and which he could not in all probability obtain, if it be of such a particular size, without having recourse to the particular stationer employed to provide the same for the particular court? It appears to me to be a most impertinent interference on the part of some persons, and a most undue assumption of authority.

I have thought it right, therefore, to give the matter publicity through your columns, and shall be glad to profit by your comments on the matter.

The case of Garcias v. Ricardo, which occurred before the Vice-Chancellor of England on the 17th of this month, and is reported in the last number of your journal, p. 33, may not be inappropriately referred to in this place. That was a case where the officer of the court had refused to file a bill because the interrogatories had been engrossed in a continued form, instead of, as it was contended they should have been, by commencing every interrogatory with a fresh line. His Honour stated, however, that although, since the orders of 1841, it had been the common usage to act otherwise, it was quite consistent with the liberty of the subject, that the interrogatories should be placed in continuation; and ordered therefore that the bill be put upon the file.

I am, Sir, yours &c.,
JAMES NICHOLSON.

THE DEFAULTERS.

The name of Mr. W. Simons, of Newcastle Emlyn, was contained in this list last week. It has since been ascertained, that it was an error arising from the name of Mr. Simons appearing in the Law List both at Newcastle and at Carmarthen, at which latter place he had duly paid his subscription. The Publisher not being aware that both names were of the same person, the error was unavoidable, and he hastens to explain and apologize, and to state that Mr. Simons had paid long ago.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

SUBSCRIBERS desirous of availing themselves of the advantages of pre-payment are informed that the subscription for the third volume is now due, and should be paid in the course of a few days, in order to entitle them to the large deduction allowed upon this mode of payment. The subscription, when pre-paid, is,

We hope it is understood that it is entirely at the option of our Subscribers whether they will thus pay in advance or not; but as it offers many conveniences, we encourage it by making a deduction of more than twenty per cent.—the cost, where credit is taken, being 27s. for the half-year.

We care not which mode of payment the subscriber may prefer; but we desire it to be understood that the deduction can be allowed only where the subscription is really pre-paid, and not after the lapse of several weeks from the commencement of the half-year; for, in such case, the advantage, in consideration of which the boon is given to the Subscriber, is, of course, lost to us.

Subscriptions should be made payable to the Publisher, Mr. CROCKFORD, at the General Post-office.

The second volume will, of course, be bound in precise uniformity with the first, at the same cost—viz. 5s. 6d. if the numbers be transmitted to our office by the post, in three or four packets, tied with the ends open, and accompanied with a letter advising whence it comes, and how it is to be returned when bound.

A few copies of the First Volume, bound, may still be had to complete sets, price £1 7s. 6d.

The Second Volume may also be had, bound uniformly, price 1*l.* 12s. 6d.

TO OUR READERS.

NOTWITHSTANDING the mass of Reports contained in the present number, we have been compelled to omit many pages of them which were in type, as well as other material of interest.

A Supplement next week will, we hope, enable us to bring up a considerable portion of these arrears, and compensate to our subscribers the space upon which the advertisements have encroached. We shall always consider ourselves indebted to our subscribers for any excess of advertisement columns above the outside leaves; and they may be assured it shall be punctually discharged. We shall seize the opportunity to present to our subscribers the long-promised Index to the Subjects of Cases reported in the first volume, which may be pasted into it, if bound, or added to the second volume, at option.

We have to announce an arrangement which will, we trust, be found to add largely to the attractions and utility of the LAW TIMES. We purpose to give a distinct series of reports of Magistrates' cases, similar to those in the Law Journal, which will be subsequently published in the form of a small pocket volume, for use at magistrates' meetings and sessions, at a very trifling cost. These reports will be in full, and got up with great care by a gentleman of whose ability our readers have been already enabled to form a judgment. They will date from the commencement of the present Term.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

IN reply to many inquiries, we beg to say that it is impossible to announce the commencement of the operations of the Society. The number of the members is not yet 400, and less than 750 will not suffice to meet the cost of publication. A gentleman is now engaged in making a personal canvass of the Profession in the larger towns, and from the progress he has already made, there is little or no doubt that the needful numbers will be obtained. But this work is a very slow one, and a long time must elapse before the country is thus traversed. And yet, until the canvass is completed it will be impossible to begin operations, and it would not be wise to abandon the design until this fair trial has been given to it.

In such circumstances, we deem it right to suggest to the members a course of proceeding which will be satisfactory to them and to ourselves. It is this. Many of them have paid their year's subscription, which is lying at our bankers. We ask to be permitted to return it for the present, until the Society is in actual operation, the entrance fee of course being reserved, as originally announced, to meet the necessary preliminary expenses incurred, and still proceeding, in the endeavour to establish the Society.

Or, if they please so to spare the cost and trouble of the return of this and the transmission of the subscription now due for the LAW TIMES or CRITIC, perhaps they would authorize us to apply the subscription paid for the Verulam Society to those accounts.

We wait the instructions of the subscribers as to which course they may prefer, and, on hearing from them, their wishes shall be observed; either the money returned, or set to the account of their subscriptions; and as soon as the Society is in a condition to begin its labours, a notification shall be forwarded to them, and then the subscription to it can be paid.

The Reports of Magistrates' cases, announced in the preceding address to our Readers, will be speedily submitted to the Society; but as the cost of this will be very trifling, the subscribers had better pay for it on receipt, or when they have other occasions to forward moneys to the office.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

We beg to direct the attention of the Profession to a suggestion which certainly deserves their immediate and very serious notice.

At present the proctor, though employed by the attorney, and really only his agent, transacts the business as if he were retained directly by the client, instead of acting upon the rule of agency, and sharing the fees. The consequence is, that the attorney incurs all the risk, and obtains none of the profit; he pays all, and the proctor pockets all: he has not even interest for the money he thus advances.

The practical effect of this is, that the attorney, who would have been content with the fees divided on the principle of agency, deprived of his just remuneration in that form, is almost compelled to compensate his risk and outlay by charges for business connected with the transaction, which he would not otherwise have noticed in his bill. So the client indirectly pays the penalty of an absurd and unjust law.

Now we would suggest the propriety of the Law Societies exerting themselves forthwith to procure the insertion of a clause in the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, repealing the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, ss. 8 & 9, imposing the penalties. The Profession would thus secure an important right, of which they ought not to have been deprived, and which they never would have lost had there been vigilant law societies to protect their interests then. But whatever is done must be done quickly.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

The following is a copy of a printed circular which has been forwarded to us. Mr. Elkins, it seems, is a sort of itinerant attorney, who notifies that he attends village markets, and no doubt does so as punctually as "Cheap John," or any other tramp.

"Mr. ELKINS, Attorney at Law, of London, begs to state that he will attend at EDENBRIDGE, on Saturdays, at Market time, and will be happy to attend to any Professional business that may be entrusted to him with fidelity and zeal.

"Cook's-court, Lincoln's-inn, April 1844."

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The English Funds have been rather inclined to improve. Consols have marked par, but there appears to be at present some "limits" at that price, which for a time may prevent a rise beyond that point.

The business in Foreign Stocks has been very circumscribed; but there were a few purchases in Spanish Bonds, which had the effect of raising the quotations of these securities by a trifling amount.

In Shares, there was a fair amount of business. The only new feature is a heaviness in the stock of the Eastern Counties line. London and Birmingham, 228 to 30; South Western, 84 to ½; Eighths, 3⅞ to 4⅛ prem.; London and Brighton, 43⅝ to ¾; New, 11¼ to ⅜; Blackwall, 5⅝ to 6; Greenwich, 4¾ to 5¼; Croydon, 17¾ to 18; Manchester and Leeds, 110 to 112; New, 47 to 8; Quarter Shares, 9 to ¼; Manchester and Birmingham, 56 to 8; Birmingham and Derby, 60 to 2; Thirds, 20 to 1; Eighths, 3¾ to 4¼; Midland Counties, 88 to 90; North Midland, 88 to 90; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 66 to 7; New, 16¼ to ¾; Great Western, 111⅛ to 112⅛; Half Shares, 71⅛ to 2⅛; Fifths, 19⅞ to 20; South Eastern, 35⅞ to 6⅛; New, 5⅝ to 6⅛ prem.; Northern and Eastern, 57 to ½; Eastern Counties, 12¾ to ½; New Registered, 14⅛ to ⅝; Perpetual Five per Cents. 1⅛ to ¾ prem.; Birmingham and Gloucester, 92 to 4; Hull and Selby, 59⅞ to 60⅛; Bristol and Exeter, 73⅞ to 4⅛.

Landed Property.—Lord Monson's Lincolnshire estate was sold on Thursday at the Auction Mart, by Mr. George Robins, for 57,100 guineas. Mr. Malcolm, the late M.P. for Boston, is the purchaser.

Public Sales.

By Messrs. SHUTTLEWORTH and SONS, at the Mart.

On Monday the 15th, commenced the sale of the freehold ground-rents arising from the whole of the Regent-square estate, comprising the entire of Regent-square, Harrison-street, James-street, Regent-place, Francis-street, Sidmouth-street, Wakefield-street, and Wellington-square, extending from the Foundling Hospital estate to the Gray's-inn-road, St. Pancras, Middlesex, comprising upwards of 320 private residences, dwelling-houses, shops, manufactories, public institutions, and other premises, let under numerous leases for terms of years commencing in 1805 and subsequent periods, and producing at present most amply-secured ground-rents, amounting to nearly 1,720*l.* per annum, with the reversion in fee to the improved rentals, amounting to upwards of 18,600*l.* per annum, sold in lots as follows, viz.:—

HALL and CO. sole Patentees of the PANNUS CORIUM, or LEATHER CLOTH BOOTS and SHOES, for Ladies and Gentlemen. These articles have received the approbation of all who have worn them. Such as are troubled with Corns, Gout, Chilblains, or Tenderness of the Feet, will find them the softest and most comfortable ever invented. They never draw the feet or get hard, are very durable, and adapted for every climate. HALL and CO. particularly invite attention to their ELASTIC BOOTS; they supersede lacing or buttoning, and are a great support to the ankle. The PATENT INDIA RUBBER GOLOSHES are light, durable, elastic, and waterproof. Hall and Co.'s Portable WATERPROOF DRESSES for Ladies and Gentlemen. This desirable article claims the attention of all who are exposed to the wet. Ladies' Cardinal Cloaks, with Hoods, 18s.; Gentlemen's Dresses, comprising Cape, Overalls, and Hood, 21s. Agents appointed on application.

TO THE LEGAL PROFESSION AND ALL WHO WISH TO SECURE THEIR WRITINGS AGAINST FRAUD.

STEPHENS'S RECORD WRITING FLUID.—This Writing Fluid has been examined at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, by one of the first Chemists of this country; there is no article which combines so effectually the power of resisting chemical agents, washing, damp, friction, and time. It has more of the character of Printing Ink, made fluid, than of common Writing Ink: its basis being carbon, it is indestructible, except by fire. It dries with a gloss, and follows every movement of the pen with the greatest facility. As it flows more freely than common Ink, it requires for fine writing, a finely pointed pen. For Records, it realizes what has long been hoped for—namely, a durability equal to printing. Broad-nibbed pens for full large writing, will not be required to the same extent for this article. It has no action whatever upon steel pens. Carbon not being a soluble matter, has a tendency slowly to subside; the necessity of occasionally shaking the Inkholder is, therefore, apparent. The Inkholders contrived by me are best adapted for the use of this article.

N.B. This Ink writes more agreeably after it has been a day or two in use.

Hard, well-sized paper should be chosen; as soft, flocky, absorbent papers cause it to write with too thick a stroke. It is admirably adapted to rapid writing.

Sold in Bottles, at 3d. 6d. 1s. and 3s. each, by Booksellers and Stationers, and by the Inventor, HENRY STEPHENS, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London.

BASS'S EAST INDIA PALE ALE.—This particular kind of Ale is prescribed to invalids by the most celebrated Physicians. Sales by Auction.

KENT.—Folkestone and Sandgate.—Residence and Land, and Building Ground.—To be SOLD by AUCTION a respectable FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with or without from five to twenty-two acres of land, situate a little more than a mile from Folkestone and Sandgate, on the Cheriton road. And also Freehold Building Ground, situate facing the sea, in the best part of Sandgate, on Monday, the 13th day of May, 1844, at the Rose Inn, Folkestone, at one for two o'clock precisely, unless previously disposed of by private contract, of which due notice will be given.

The house is calculated for a gentleman's residence, and is well adapted for a respectable school, boarding-house, or invalid establishment, having five domestic offices on the basement, four good rooms on the ground floor, and ten bed rooms, with stable and coach-house, and it may be had without any, or with all, or any part of the land.

The Building-ground at Sandgate consists of a field at the west end, adjoining land belonging to the devisees of Hugh Hammersley, esq. and the Reverend Thomas Pearce, containing a good sea frontage of 239 feet, with ample depth, to be divided into front and back building ground. It is almost the only unrestricted freehold frontage in this favourite watering-place, and will be sold in building-plots, unless an eligible offer is made for the whole.

To view the house and land (late the residence of James Jeffery, esq. deceased) apply to Mr. Marsh, at the cottage adjoining the residence.

For printed particulars and conditions of sale apply to Mr. THOMAS PAIN, Solicitor, Dover.

Highgate.—Beautiful Freehold Residence, with Coach-house, Stables, Pleasure-grounds, and Gardens, in all two acres and a half.

MESSRS. HEDGER will SELL by AUCTION, at the Mart, on Thursday, June 6, at twelve, the beautiful freehold Elizabethan Villa, Ivy Cottage, formerly the abode of the late C. J. Mathews, esq. since whose occupation a fortune has been expended in rendering it one of the most perfect suburban villas of the metropolis. It is placed in Milfield-lane, on the rise of Highgate-hill, on a southern slope, in luxuriant pleasure-grounds, and commands cheerful and pleasing views, contains entrance-porch and halls, dining-room, drawing-room, and library opening to a conservatory and to the lawn, several excellent bed-chambers, hot and cold bath, nurseries, &c. and capital domestic offices. The pleasure-grounds are charmingly disposed, and in the garden are forcing and succession houses, ornamental dairy, gardener's house; the whole two acres and a half.

Particulars may be had at the Mart; of H. Wilcock, esq. Whittlesey, Cambridgeshire; Messrs. Jones, Trinder, and Tudway, Bedford-row; and admissions to view, with every information, of Messrs. HEDGER, Land-agents, 10, New Bond-st. opposite the Clarendon, where a cosmoramic drawing may been seen.

Sales by Auction.

Warwickshire.—Valuable Limestone Quarry and Kilns, with Land extending to 17 acres, the whole of which is freehold and tithe-free, situate close to the Warwick and Napton Canal, in the parish of Stockton, two miles from the town of Southam.

MR. DODD has received instructions from the Trustees under the Will of the late Captain Thomas Lamb, with the concurrence of the Mortgagees, to SELL by public COMPETITION, at the Mart, London, on Tuesday, May 14, at Twelve, a PLOT of very superior FREEHOLD ARABLE LAND (exonerated from tithes), extending to 17 acres, in which a Quarry of the celebrated and unequalled Blue Lias Limestone, communicating (by means of a tram-road) with kilns situate on the banks of the Warwick and Napton Canal. The quarry is under lease to Mr. William Griffin, at a yearly rent or royalty for the removal of 4,000 tons of the stone annually, with power for the tenant to extend the same yearly on royal rents to the amount of 12,000 tons. The blue lias lime is admirably adapted for concrete waterworks, and the foundations of all buildings which are likely to be damp. Its extensive use in the Eddystone Lighthouse, Ramsgate and Dover Piers, the London and St. Katharine's Docks, and the new Houses of Parliament, proves its excellence by the firmness of those stupendous works, as the lias will become as hard as stone itself when under water. The blue lias cement, which is prepared entirely from the blue lias stone, is more durable than the Roman cement, cheaper from its taking double the quantity of sand, and does not require to be coloured. It has been internally used in the new Post-office and British Museum, &c.; and externally on the fronts of the magnificent buildings in Belgrave-square, Hyde-park-gardens, Norland-crescent, Bayswater-building, the Athenæum Club-house, &c. It has, when thoroughly dry, the colour and firmness of Portland-stone; and, if required, forms a superior surface for oil painting. The high road from Rugby to Southam, and the Warwick and Napton Canal, are boundaries to this property; and the latter forms a junction with the Oxford Canal, a few miles from the works. Stockton is situate nine miles from the town of Daventry, two miles from Southam, eight miles from Rugby, and ten miles from Warwick. To persons of moderate capital this property offers a most eligible opportunity for investment, and not being of a speculative character, a considerable, safe, and increasing income may be calculated upon for many years.

Plans and particulars are preparing, and may be obtained, any day prior to the sale, of Messrs. WARDLE and WILSON, Solicitors, Daventry; of G. R. DODD, Esq. 33, New Broad-street, London, at the George Hotel, Northampton; Craven Arms, Southam; Warwick Arms, Warwick; Spread Eagle, Rugby; Dun Cow, Dunchurch; Bath Hotel, Leamington; at the chief inns in other neighbouring towns; and at Mr. DODD'S Offices, 4, Austin-friars, Royal Exchange, London, and at Reading.

Northamptonshire.—Valuable Freehold and Copyhold Estate (exonerated from tithes), situate at Braunston, near to the town of Daventry.

MR. DODD has received instructions from the Trustees under the will of the late Captain Thomas Lamb (with the concurrence of the Mortgagees), to SELL by public COMPETITION, at the Auction Mart, in London, on Tuesday, May 14, at Twelve, a very valuable FREEHOLD and partly COPYHOLD ESTATE, exonerated from tithes, situate in the parish of Braunston, in the county of Northampton, consisting of a respectable farm-house, all requisite farm buildings, and about 102 acres of excellent Arable and Grass Lands; in the occupation of Mr. Jonathan Jephcott, a respectable yearly tenant, at the annual rent of 230*l*. but for the last year at a rental of 210*l*. per annum. The copyhold portion of this estate comprises about 77 acres, and is nearly equal to freehold, being held under the Manor of Braunston, subject to a small annual chief or quit-rent, and a moderate fine certain upon death or alienation. This desirable property is situate within three miles of the market-town of Daventry, five miles from the Crick station on the London and Birmingham Railway, and bounded by lands belonging to Thomas Boyse, esq. George Arnold, esq. William Reeves, esq. Mrs. Varney, and Braunston church.

Plans and particulars are preparing, and may be obtained, any day prior to the sale, of Messrs. WARDLE and WILSON, solicitors, Daventry; of G. R. DODD, Esq. 33, New Broad-street, London; at the George Hotel, Northampton; Craven Arms, Southam; Warwick Arms Hotel, Warwick; Bath Hotel, Leamington; Spread Eagle, Rugby; Dun Cow, Dunchurch; at the chief inns in other neighbouring towns; and at Mr. DODD'S offices, 4, Austin-friars, Royal Exchange, London, and Reading.

Warwickshire.—Valuable Freehold and Tithe-free Estate, in the parish of Stockton, near to the town of Southam.

MR. DODD has received instructions from the Trustees under the Will of the late Captain Thomas Lamb, with the concurrence of the Mortgagees, to SELL by public COMPETITION, at the Auction Mart, London, on Tuesday, May 14, at Twelve, a very valuable and highly-productive FREEHOLD and TITHE-FREE ESTATE, situate in the parish of Stockton, in the county of Warwick; comprising a respectable Farm-house, suitable Outbuildings, and about 165 acres of Arable and Grass Lands; the whole let on lease to Mr. W. Griffin, a respectable tenant, at a rental of upwards of 300*l*. per annum. The estate is exceedingly compact, the whole of the fields being contiguous, forming nearly a ring fence, and bounded by lands belonging to Thomas Boyse, esq. — Hawkes, esq. the Rev. Mr. Sitwell, Messrs. Tomes and Handley, and the high road from Rugby to Southam. The timber on the estate will not form an important part of the investment. Stockton is situate nine miles from the town of Daventry, two miles from Southam, eight miles from Rugby, and ten miles from Warwick.

Plans and particulars are preparing, and may be obtained any day prior to the sale, of Messrs. WARDLE and WILSON, Solicitors, Daventry; of G. R. DODD, Esq. 33, New Broad-street, London; at the George Hotel, Northampton; Craven Arms, Southam; Warwick Arms Hotel, Warwick; Bath Hotel, Leamington; Spread Eagle, Rugby; Dun Cow, Dunchurch; at the chief inns in other neighbouring towns; and at Mr. DODD'S Offices, 4, Austinfriars, Royal Exchange, London, and Reading.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

EASTER TERM.

Monday, April 15.

The Lord Chancellor, attended by the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor of England, entered the court at one o'clock. The usual formal breakfasts given by the Lord Chancellor, to the Judges, and the Queen's Counsel, are now confined to Michaelmas and Easter Terms; and there seems to be but one opinion amongst the members of the Equity Bar, the solicitors, and suitors in Chancery, that the custom of holding the courts of equity at Westminster during Term might most usefully be abolished. The universal question is, "What can be the reason for adhering to a practice so notoriously inconvenient?" At Lincoln's-inn, all the equity judges, the bar, the solicitors, and the suitors, have ample accommodation; while at Westminster, Vice-Chancellors Knight Bruce and Wigram are consigned to the inconveniences of the Sessions House.

The Lord Chancellor having returned from swearing in Sir Frederick Pollock as Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, heard appeal motions.

NICHOLLS v. STRETTON.

Practice—Injunction—Directions to bring an action.

Romilly* and Rogers moved that the minutes of the order in this case, which directed an action at law to be brought to try the validity of an agreement to restrain an attorney from transacting business for certain persons, should be altered by inserting a direction that the plaintiff should bring his action immediately. The usual course where an action is directed to be brought is, that the suit in this court shall be retained for a year, within which time the action must be commenced. Here there is an injunction against the defendant, and the plaintiff must be compelled to proceed immediately.

Russell and Goodeve.—The plaintiff intends to proceed immediately; he will undertake to bring his action within a mouth.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That is too long; the plaintiff must bring his action within a fortnight from this day.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Practice in Lunacy—Inspection of papers—Appointment of committee.

Bethell and Calvert, for the committee of the person of this lunatic, who has escaped to and is now in France, and has presented a petition to supersede the commission, complained that, in consequence of an application by Wakefield, in February last, when no committee of the estate had been appointed and the estate was unprotected, an intimation had been made to the commissioner respecting the inspecting a box of papers, who had directed a warrant to Mr. Sombre's solicitor, informing him that he might have an inspection of the box of papers, before the appointment made for hearing the petition. The objection is, that this petitioner cannot be heard until he has submitted himself to the jurisdiction by coming to this country; and that objection applies to the application for leave to inspect the papers.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In whose possession is the box of papers?

Lloyd, for the committee of the estate, whose appointment had not actually taken place, he not having completed his securities. The enormous amount for which security, according to the usual rule of the Court in such cases, had prevented the completion of the securities, but the Court having now modified that rule in the present case, the securities would be completed forthwith.

Wakefield and Walpole, for the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Nothing can be done until the securities are completed, and the appointment of the committee of the estate made; and he will then exercise his discretion whether or not to permit an inspection of the contents of the box. Let the petition stand over, with liberty to apply.

HALL v. TAYLOR.

Practice—Dismissal of bill for want of prosecution.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Master of the Rolls, who had refused the plaintiff's motion for leave to withdraw replication and amend the bill. A motion had been made in December, to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, and the plaintiff then undertook to proceed with diligence. Affidavits had been read, making some statements of attempts to compromise; but no other reason had been given to account for the delay which had since occurred.

Cooper and Stevenson for the appeal motion.

Freeling, in support of the order of the Master of the Rolls.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The affidavit is vague as to the negotiations for a compromise. A motion was made to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, when the plaintiff undertook to speed the cause. After a delay of three months, the motion at the Rolls was made, and I cannot say the plaintiff has used reasonable diligence.

Appeal motion refused with costs.

TOLSON v. ——

Prisoner for costs less than 20l.

Koe mentioned this motion, which was to discharge a prisoner who had been in confinement more than a year for costs under 20*l.* upon the ground that the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (the Act for the abolition of Arrest upon Mesne Process), had converted orders for payment of costs into judgment debts, and that persons who had been imprisoned a year for judgment-debts less than twenty pounds are entitled to be discharged. He referred to the case in the Exchequer, as reported in the LAW TIMES, in which a similar order had been made.

Tuesday, April 16.

Re ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHARITY.

On the motion of Romilly, the Master's report in this case was confirmed.

Re BRAMWELL, a Lunatic.

Practice—Allowance to committee of estate.

The committee of the estate petitioned for an allowance out of the lunatic's estate for his trouble in managing it. He was a stranger to the family, and the lunatic's sons were illiterate men, who could neither read nor write. The commissioner had reported that 10*l.* ought to be allowed for payment of a person to keep the accounts. The estate consisted only of two farms.

Roll* and Pitman, counsel.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is no ground whatever for such an order. Order refused.

Re MITCHELL, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Precarious property of a lunatic.

Chandless supported a petition by the committee of the lunatic's estate, which prayed that he might be at liberty to sell certain mining shares in Cornwall, or to abandon those shares with the consent of the commissioner. The property of the lunatic is small, and consists entirely of mine-shares, which appeared by affidavits to be of a very precarious nature; at one time worth thousands, and the next week of no value. It was desirable to dispose of the shares, now they would sell for a good price.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think that the petition is reasonable; but it is necessary to have some check upon the person authorized to sell the shares. I will make the order that the committee may be at liberty either to sell or abandon the shares with the authority of the commissioner.

TAMLYN v. REYNOLDS.

Practice—Rehearing.

The plaintiff in person supported a petition for re-hearing a petition which had been reheard by Lord Brougham, and dismissed in 1833, and a second time by Lord Cottenham, in 1836, as a matter of indulgence; there had been besides a great variety of other applications, which had been unsuccessful.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I wish to explain to you (the plaintiff) the ground on which I refuse your application. By the practice of the court there cannot be a second rehearing without special circumstances; but, as an indulgence, Lord Cottenham reheard your petition a second time; and there cannot under any circumstances be a third rehearing. The plaintiff then opened a second petition, but his lordship said it was impossible to comprehend the petitioner's statements, and desired that he would procure some gentleman of the bar to look at it; for which purpose the petition stood over.

Re GROOM, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Income-tax.

There had been an order made in this lunacy for an allowance of 200*l.* a year to the lunatic; the order had not been drawn up, and

Cooper asked that the allowance should be paid free of income-tax.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The allowance should be clear of all charges. Order made.

BROWN v. BAMFORD.

Separate property—Restraint on alienation—Married women.

The decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, that the form commonly used for restraining married women from alienating their separate property by anticipation is insufficient for the purpose. The receipt clause ought to declare that the receipts of the married woman to be given from time to time, after the income of the property shall have become due, shall be, and that no other receipts shall be, sufficient discharges to the trustees, confirmed on appeal.

This case and the judgment below are reported in 11 Simon's Reports, 127. The facts are shortly these:—Sophia Bamford, under the will of her father, was entitled to the rents of leaseholds and the dividends of stock for her separate use. The trustees were directed to pay the rents, dividends, &c. "unto such person or persons, for such intents and purposes and in such manner as Sophia Bamford, by any writing or writings under her hand, when and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should, notwithstanding her coverture, direct or appoint; and in default of any such direction or appointment, or so far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, into her proper hands for her sole and separate use, independent of debts, control, or interference of her husband; and the receipts, in writing, under the hand of the said Sophia Bamford, shall, notwithstanding any such coverture as aforesaid, be good and sufficient discharges for the said rents, interests, dividends, &c. or so much thereof as in such receipts respectively shall be expressed to have been received."

Sophia Bamford became surety for her son-in-law, by signing a paper whereby she agreed to guarantee to the Sunderland banking company payment of a debt due from the son-in-law. The son-in-law became bankrupt, without having paid the debt; the company filed their bill against Sophia Bamford, her husband, and the trustees of her father's will, to render her separate income liable to make good and pay the company's debt. The defendants demurred to the bill, and the Vice-Chancellor overruled that demurrer. From that decision the defendants appealed.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This was a question upon the construction of a will, which gave leasehold and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to a married woman for her life for her separate use. In the restrictive clause of that will, Sophia Barnford is authorized to make an appointment of the yearly income of the property, which she is restricted from anticipating; by another clause, she is to have the power, in writing under her hand, when the rents become due, to dispose of such rents, but not by way of assignment or other anticipation. The question is, whether this restriction extended to the estate which she took in default of appointment; the words being, that the trustees were, in default of appointment, to pay into her proper hands, exclusive of her husband. The Vice-Chancellor, in the case of Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Simons' Reports, 1), very properly said, "then is this different from a limitation to such uses as A. shall in a certain manner appoint, and subject thereto to A generally?" It is a power to be executed in a particular manner, and subject to certain restrictions. I therefore think this case is not to be distinguished from Barrymore v. Ellis; and I must therefore affirm the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, with costs.

ASHLEY v. HOSKINS.

In this case, which was a question whether the defendant had a lien on certain property, and it depended upon the state of the accounts between the parties, and involved no point of legal interest.

The Court below decided in favour of the lien; and the Lord Chancellor, after minutely reviewing the accounts between the parties, affirmed that decision, but without costs.

Wednesday, April 17.

JUDGMENT.

BULWER v. ASTLEY.

Redeemable annuities—Tenant for life and remainder-man—How annuities to be kept down—Usury.

Where money has been charged upon an estate by way of annuity, which annuity the grantor has a right to repurchase, the transaction is to be deemed a mere loan, and consequently as between a tenant for life and a remainder-man, upon whom the estate may devolve: the annuity must be valued, and the tenant for life is only bound to keep down the interest upon the principal sum to which the value of the annuity amounts.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case I consider the annuity to have been only a security for money advanced. An annuity, by common acceptation is only a loan, and whether it is granted for a life or lives is matter of calculation, and capable of being accurately valued. The great difference between a common loan and a loan by way of annuity, is that in the latter case the interest is not regulated by the statute of usury. The deed granting the annuity contains a clause for repurchasing, which is not distinguishable from a condition for redemption. That is a circumstance serving to shew that the transaction is a loan. Thus in Sherrard v. Sherrard (3 Atkins' Reports, 502), Lord Hardwicke said that an annuity was not to be distinguished from a loan. Upon the repurchase, the sum paid was to be taken in full discharge, and the annuity to cease. Therefore repurchase is a redemption. In the demise the proviso for repurchase is for repurchase or redemption, using the words as equivalent all through the clause. Lord Hardwicke said, in Lawley v. Hooper (3 Atkins' Reports, 278), "The proviso in the deed uses the word repurchase, but there is very little difference in reality between the meaning of the word redemption and repurchase." That applies directly to the present case. It is not material to advert to the personal covenant contained in the annuity deed, as that must be enforced by action, and gives no present remedy against the property. The remedy against the property by distress does not arise until the annuity has been in arrear fourteen, and the further remedies after other longer periods of delay in payment. The estate is therefore the security. The Annuity Act does not affect the question. I have only mentioned one annuity, but the same observations apply to all three of them. The decree should have directed the annuity to be valued, and that the tenant for life should keep down the interest payable on that value. The point was not brought before Sir John Leach when he decided this case. The tenant for life has made payments on the footing of keeping down the life annuity, and he must be allowed all that he had paid beyond the interest upon the value of the annuity.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Tuesday, Feb. 20.

CAFFARY v. CAFFARY.

Construction of will—Joint tenancy.

A testator, by his will, bequeathed certain stock, standing in his name in the Three per Cent Reduced Annuities, to his son, P. J. and to his, P. J.'s, children; but in a subsequent part of his will he refers to the same fund as being given to his son, without further mention of his son's children. Held, that the son took an absolute interest in the property.

John M. Caffary, by his will, bearing date in 1827, among other things, directed as follows: "I give and bequeath to my very beloved wife, J. M. Caffary, for and during her life, the interest of 50,000*l.* stock, part of 72,600*l.* stock I possess and hold in the Reduced Three per Cent. Funds in England; and further, the liberty and power to dispose of 12,000*l.* of the said stock by will, but no more; the remaining 38,000*l.* stock becoming at her death the property of my son, Patrick John Caffary, and his children." The testator then goes on as follows: "The lease I hold of the rope-walk is for three lives, the first of which comprises my and my wife's life; consequently, I cannot dispose thereof, nor can it be alienated without her consent. All the improvements and utensils for rope-making, which I estimate at 40,000 milreas, though they cost far above 60,000 milreas, I bequeath to my son, the said Patrick John Caffary and his children or heirs. Should he wish to continue the rope-making business, he must settle for rent with his very loving mother, my wife, J. M. Caffary. The houses I possess at Bon Successo, I bequeath to my dearly beloved wife, J. M. Caffary, as it was the wish of my mother, from whom I inherited them, to leave them to her. I give and bequeath all the rest of my property invested in trade, debts, and funds, to my very beloved son P. J. Caffary and his heirs, as also the 38,000*l.* now invested in the Reduced Three per Cent. funds in England, or an equivalent in any other funds to which they may be removed, being part of the stock I appoint to produce an independent maintenance for my most beloved wife, 12,000*l.* of which alone she can dispose of by will; consequently, the remaining 38,000*l.* at her death went to my son Patrick John Caffary."

The son, P. J. Caffary, and his three children survived the testator; and the bill was filed on behalf of the children for the purpose of ascertaining what interest, if any, they took under the will of their grandfather.

Stuart and Anderson, for the plaintiffs.

Bethel and Dick, for the defendant.

For the plaintiffs, it was contended that there could be no doubt but that if the will had left off at that part where the testator mentions the remaining 38,000*l.* as becoming, at the death of his wife, the property of his son, Patrick John Caffary, and his children, they would have each taken an equal interest with their father in the property so bequeathed; the question was, therefore, what other expressions were used by the testator shewing a different intention. In giving the improvements and utensils for rope-making, the testator had still his grandchildren in view; and by a different expression, merely repeats his former bequest, giving them to his son Patrick and his children or heirs; that it could not be contended that the last expression was sufficient to disappoint his son's children of the benefit which he had given them in the former part of his will; but that by the word heirs the testator intended the children. In the bequest of the 12,000*l.* to his wife, the testator shewed that he understood the distinction between an absolute and qualified gift. It was clear, therefore, that, from the whole of the will, the testator intended them to take as joint tenants.

Bethel and Dick, not heard.

Cases cited: Buffer v. Bradford (2 Atk. 220); De Witte v. De Witte (11 Sim. 41); Crawford v. Trotter (4 Mad. 361); Davenport v. Hanbury (3 Ves. 257); Loveday v. Hopkins (2 Jarm. on Wills, 23).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—From the former part of the will, the children of Patrick John are joint tenants with him; but in the latter part of the will, the testator has declared his own meaning, wherein he says, "the remaining 38,000*l.* at her death went to my son, Patrick John Caffary." The son therefore takes this absolute fund.

Monday, April 15.

WARNE v. BROMLEY and ANOTHER.

Exclusive right to a trade name—An agreement by one partner to submit to an injunction obtained against the firm, and pay the costs, is not within the scope of partnership authority; and if not expressly agreed to by all the partners, will not bind even him who signed the agreement.

This was a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction that had been obtained to restrain the defendants from selling or exposing for sale, or otherwise disposing of, any articles of dress or colourable imitation thereof, or any other articles of dress, by the distinctive trade name of antigropelos, or any colourable alteration thereof, and from using in any way the said distinctive trade name of antigropelos, or any colourable alteration thereof.

Bethel and Welford, for the plaintiff.

Wakefield and G. L. Russell, for the defendants.

The plaintiff's case was, that he had for upwards of ten years been engaged in the manufacture and sale of numbers of an improved description of splatter-dashes, or articles of dress intended to preserve the boots and trousers of the wearer from wet and dirt in riding and walking, which might be put on or taken off without trouble or soiling the hands, and are worn without inconvenience, and forming an ornamental appendage to the out-door costume. That he had bestowed great care, labour, and expense in bringing these articles of dress to perfection, and establishing agencies for the sale thereof in all parts of the United Kingdom; and that he had invented and composed the name of antigropelos, and appropriated that name to his improved articles of dress, and thereby acquired the sole and exclusive right to use the name of antigropelos; and by that distinctive appellation they had been known in the trade for upwards of ten years, and had by such distinctive trade name been in great request throughout the kingdom. Also that the plaintiff had during that period used great personal labour and assiduity, and had been at great expense in advertising the said articles of dress, and in rendering the same known by the distinctive trade name of antigropelos, and in establishing agencies throughout the kingdom for the sale thereof by its distinctive trade name; and had by such name acquired an extensive connection for the sale of the said articles of dress, and made considerable profits by the manufacture and sale thereof, and by the exclusive right to use the above distinctive trade name of antigropelos, by which appellation the said articles of dress had become extensively and generally known, and were in much and increasing demand; but that the defendants, who were carrying on business as saddlers, as copartners, under the name or style of Bromley and Crush, having gained a knowledge of the manufacture of the said articles of dress, as well as their distinctive trade name, had then lately made and sold many articles of dress of the same kind, and made in the same manner as the articles manufactured by the plaintiff, or only colourably altered therefrom, for various sums of money to a considerable amount; and that the defendants had also used and applied the said distinctive trade name of antigropelos to articles of dress of a low price and inferior quality, which were of the same kind or made in the same manner, as or in a manner not materially differing or only colourably altered from the articles made and sold by the plaintiff, by the distinctive trade name made or sold by them, whereby the character of the said articles of dress were likely to be greatly deteriorated, and the gains and profits of the plaintiff had been considerably diminished.

It was, moreover, charged that the defendants on the 11th of December, had a placard or printed notice in these words, "The Cheapest House in London for the sale of Antigropelos," placed in a conspicuous part of their shop-window in Museum-street, and that one of the plaintiff's cards of business describing the above articles of dress was on that day placed in the defendants' shop-window, which card was surrounded by the spurious articles manufactured by the defendants, and by them exposed for sale.

The defendants, in their answer, stated that the above-mentioned articles of dress have for upwards of ten years past been sold by the trade under various names, all representing the same articles, and under which they were in great demand, and that one W. H. Smith, of Wellenborough was the inventor thereof, and not the plaintiff. They moreover denied that the plaintiff was the inventor or composer of the name of antigropelos, or that he was the first who applied that name to the above-mentioned articles of dress; and that, so far from the plaintiff's having acquired the sole and exclusive right to use the name of antigropelos, a number of tradesmen of various kinds, both in London and elsewhere, had for the last five years manufactured and sold the said articles of dress by the name of antigropelos, with the cognizance of the plaintiff during a greater part of that time, and without his interference. And that he has never been the sole manufacturer or vendor of the said articles of dress, or in the undisturbed and exclusive possession of the distinctive trade name of antigropelos. The defendants moreover stated that they never sold the said articles of dress as Warne's Antigropelos, unless they had first procured them from the plaintiff's own shop; that in making out their bill for any customer they invariably used the simple name of antigropelos, and never that of "Warne's Antigropelos," and that when any customers asked them for "Warne's Patent Antigropelos" they referred them to the plaintiff, saying that they did not keep them.

It appeared, moreover, from the defendants' statement, that upon being served with the subpoena in the case and notice of the injunction, the defendant Crush called at the office of the plaintiff's solicitors for an explanation of the proceedings, when he was told that the plaintiff had a patent for making antigropelos, and that by selling them the defendants had infringed the same. The defendant Crush being greatly alarmed at the idea of a Chancery suit against him, informed the solicitors that he was ready to offer any apology, and to make any reparation in his power to the plaintiff for the injury he might have done him, adding that if the plaintiff had not a patent, he, the defendant, had done him no injury, and that, at all events, he was much surprised that the plaintiff had permitted the defendants to sell antegropelos for so long a period without asserting his right under his patent. Upon the suggestion of the solicitors, the defendant called again to effect some arrangement for putting an end to the suit, when one of the solicitors read over to him a roughly-drawn agreement for that purpose, which had been previously prepared; but the same appeared to the defendant Crush so unreasonable in its terms, that he then refused to sign it, and left the office. On the next day, however, Crush called again at the office, when the above agreement, which had been but a trifling degree altered, was read over to him again, and upon his hesitating to sign it, he was told by the same solicitor that unless he did so immediately, further expenses would be incurred within two days from that time, and that then it would be too late to settle the affair amicably. Whereupon the defendant, under the influence of such threats and the dread of a Chancery suit, and still believing that he had infringed the plaintiff's alleged patent, and being without his own legal adviser, he signed the rough draft agreement; but that on his return home he began to think he had acted hastily in the matter, and went and consulted with his own solicitor upon the subject, telling him what had passed, who advised him not to execute the intended agreement without first submitting it to him, and taking time to ascertain and consider what the facts really were.

That on the 23rd Dec. plaintiff's solicitors sent a fair copy of the agreement to the defendant Crush for his signature, with their bill of costs amounting to the sum of 40*l.* 15*s.* The agreement having stated the effect of the injunction, proceeded as follows:—"Now we, James Bromley and William Crush, hereby acknowledge and declare that we have lately sold, or caused to be sold, some of such articles of dress, or of the same kind as in the said plaintiff's bill mentioned, and by the said distinctive trade name of antigropelos, for various sums of money to a considerable amount, and we further acknowledge that the said plaintiff for ten years last past has had the sole and exclusive right to sell the said articles of dress, and to use the said distinctive trade name of antigropelos; and we hereby undertake and agree that we will abide by the terms of the said injunction so awarded by this Court as aforesaid, and that we will henceforth refrain from making or selling, or causing to be made or sold, or from being in any wise concerned in making or selling, or exposing for sale, any of the said articles of dress, except such as shall be furnished to us by the said plaintiff, or with his consent stamped by him on payment of a fine of ten shillings per pair. And further, that we shall inform the said plaintiff of all facts which shall come to our knowledge respecting the making or selling, or exposing for sale, of any of the said articles of dress by any other parties, and that we will use our best endeavours to assist the said plaintiff in any suits or proceedings which he may be advised or think it necessary to take against any other parties for the like purpose. And we hereby further undertake and agree forthwith to pay the plaintiff's costs of this suit as between solicitor and client.—Dated this 16th day of December, 1843." That the defendant Crush refused to sign the agreement, and retained it in his possession under the belief that the statement in the proposed agreement relating to the plaintiff's exclusive right for 10 years and upwards to sell the said articles of dress, and to use the said distinctive trade name of antigropelos, was wholly untrue, and that he (Crush) had been led to believe such statement, and that the plaintiff had a patent right in the before-mentioned articles of dress, by the positive assertions of the plaintiff and his solicitor; and under the dread of a Chancery suit he had, as before stated, signed the rough draught agreement, but that he afterwards discovered the fraud that had been practised against him, and determined not to execute the agreement, but to consider the same as altogether a nullity.

The defendants had delayed putting in their answer for the purpose of watching the result of two different suits instituted by the plaintiff against two other parties, to enforce the same right against them as that claimed by him against the defendants; and it having appeared that the injunctions which the plaintiff had obtained in the above suits (viz. Warne v. Golding and Warne v. Smith) had been dissolved, with costs, the solicitor of the defendants wrote to plaintiff's solicitor, reminding him of that fact, and at the same time urging him to prevent further expenses by dissolving the injunction so obtained against the defendants, with costs; but that if such a course were not adopted, the defendants would immediately file their answers, and seek to dissolve the injunction.

In reply to this communication, the plaintiff's solicitor still urged the obligation which the defendant, William Crush, was under to execute the agreement on behalf of himself and his partner. The defendants still denying that the defendant Crush was induced to sign the rough draft of agreement, under any other circumstances than those of misrepresentation, ignorance, and intimidation, and that the plaintiff had no letters patent conferring the exclusive right of making and selling the above articles of dress.

The defendants now gave notice of motion to dissolve the injunction.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought the agreement entered into by Crush, not being within his authority as a partner, and not being expressly consented to by Bromley, was not a valid agreement as against either of the partners. That the plaintiff must establish at law his right to the exclusive use of the name, and the injunction must be dissolved.

The motion to stand over, with liberty for the plaintiff to bring an action at law, and for either party to apply.

ROLLS COURT.

Tuesday, Feb. 20.

STORY v. TONGE.

Power of married women to deal with reversion.

John Story, by will dated 9th Feb. 1833, after certain specific bequests to his wife (a defendant), Ann Guthrie Story, gave the residue of his personal estate unto the defendant, Tonge, upon trust, to invest the same, and pay the income thereof unto his said wife for life, in case she should so long remain his widow, and upon her decease or second marriage, whichever should first happen, to pay and divide the trust premises amongst testator's children; and in case he should leave no children, then to divide the same into three equal parts, one whereof he gave to the plaintiff, C. P. Story, another to the plaintiff, S. P. Story, and the remaining third he gave and bequeathed equally amongst the children of his late sister, Ann Hutchinson, and to their respective executors and administrators. The testator died soon after without leaving issue.

The bill was filed by C. B. Story, S. P. Story, and Thomas Hutchinson, Jane Hutchinson, and George Little Moore, and Elizabeth Moore his wife (which said Thomas, Jane, and Elizabeth were the only children of testator's said late sister Ann Hutchinson), against the widow and executor Tonge, and prayed the usual accounts in a legatees' suit, and also that the purchase of certain trust property made by the defendants might be declared void.

Pending the suit, the plaintiffs became satisfied that the purchase, although illegal, was in reality advantageous to their interests, more than the market value having been given for the property so purchased; and an arrangement was thereupon come to, by which the suit was to be compromised, each party to pay their own costs, the widow (the tenant for life) becoming the purchaser of the reversionary interest in the whole residue from the plaintiffs, the residuary legatees

Pending the cause, money had been paid into Court by the executor, and it was arranged that the fund in Court should be paid over to the plaintiffs, together with the further sum agreed on, in the proportions in which they were entitled -viz. three-ninths to C. B. Story, three-ninths to S. P. Story, and one-ninth each to Thomas Hutchinson and Jane Hutchinson, and to Moore and wife, whereupon the suit was to be stayed.

A petition was thereupon presented by the plaintiff to effectuate this arrangement, and asking that the Attorney-General might be ordered to sell the stock in her name; and that the defendant, the widow, might be ordered to pay into Court such further sum of money as, with the proceeds of such sale, would produce the sum agreed on, and that after taxing and payment of petitioner's costs, the funds might be divided in the proportion above mentioned amongst the petitioners, the plaintiffs.

On the 12th January, 1844, the petition (which was consented to) was heard, when the Master of the Rolls took the objection that this was an attempt to deal with a married woman's reversionary interest, and the petition stood over for authorities.

The tenant for life, the widow, immediately after this, by deed dated 15th January, 1844, released the life estate as to this interest, to the intent that it might become an interest in possession; and thereupon the petitioners amended their petition, alleging that Mrs. Moore's interest was no longer reversionary, but by force of the deed had become an interest in possession, and the petition was brought in again on the 23rd January, when his lordship again took time to look into the cases relied on—viz. Lachton v. Adams (Law J. vol. 5, N.S. 1836, p. 82, coram Vice-Chancellor of England, March 6, 1841, and reported in Lewin's Trusts, 2nd ed. 296-7); Wilson v. Oldham (2nd Hayes' Conveyancing, addenda, 641).

On the 20th February, his lordship shortly gave judgment, refusing to make any order on the petition, saying all the cases he could find were on decree, and not on mere petition.

Tuesday, April 2.

WALKER v. HISTED.

Practice—Motion for an attachment against a defendant for not answering.

After one attachment has been granted against a defendant for not answering, and he has been brought up on habeas corpus to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, and discharged on account of an irregularity in obtaining the order for the habeas corpus, a second attachment will not be issued immediately, but only within a specified time after the order for it has been served upon him.

The defendant in this cause was brought up on habeas corpus, on the 20th of January last (see 2 Law T. 326), to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, and was discharged from custody, on the ground that the order for the habeas corpus was irregular, not having been obtained in time within the meaning of the 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 13. No time had then been limited within which he was required to put in his answer, nor had he done any thing in the matter since.

Stinton now moved for an attachment, for want of an answer. Having obtained one order for an attachment already, we could not have another, as of course, and were obliged to make special application to the Court for leave. The Court, however, will permit the attachment to issue immediately, as we are entitled to it now without terms, on the ground of the previous proceedings. Every indulgence has been shewn the defendant; he has been permitted to sue as a pauper, and counsel assigned to prepare his answer. And though he repeatedly professed to be willing, and promised even to the Court to put in his answer, he has as yet failed to do so, though a considerable time has elapsed since he was discharged, on the ground of irregularity in obtaining the order for the habeas corpus. The attachment, therefore, ought to issue immediately; but

The MASTER of the ROLLS would only consent to grant an attachment against the defendant if he did not answer within one fortnight after the order for it had been served upon him.

Monday, April 15.

GRUBB v. PERRING.

Practice—Exceptions to the bill taken off the file for irregularity.

If a plaintiff amend his bill, and serve defendant with a copy, without calling on him for any answer, he may, by the 14th order of 1843, Ord. Can. 47, file, on the eighth day after, a replication to the defendant's answer to the original bill, and exceptions for impertinence filed to the bill afterwards, without a special application for leave, are irregular, and may be taken off the file.

This was a motion by the plaintiff, Edward Grubb, to take certain exceptions for impertinence off the file for irregularity. It appeared that the plaintiff had obtained a special order to amend his bill, undertaking not to call for an answer from defendant. The bill was accordingly amended on the 21st of March, and, on the 22nd, the defendant's office copy thereof was also amended and returned. On the 21st, notice also was given that in eight days the plaintiff would file a replication to defendant's answer to the original bill. On the 30th, the replication was accordingly filed; and, on the 3rd of April, a subpœna to rejoin was served. On the 11th of April, notice was served of the exceptions to the bill. It was contended, on the one hand, that the time had run against the defendant; and, on the other, that the time ought to reckon from the 22nd, and that the 14th order meant that the eight days should be eight clear days, exclusive of the day on which the amendment was made in the office copy and of the day on which the replication was filed. It was also contended that the application was premature, on the ground that the defendant does not lose his opportunity of referring for impertinence till he himself has taken some step. The following cases were cited: Kenworthy v. Allen (1 Brown, C. C. 400); Anon. (2 Ves. sen. 631); Barnes v. Saxby (3 Swanst. 232); Pellew v. —— (6 Ves. 456); Anon. (5 Ves 656); Bradbury v. Booker (4 Sim. 325); Jeffray v. M'Cabe (1 Russell & Mylne, 739); Stanley v. Bond (5 Beav. 175), and Daniell, Chan. Prac.

Turner and Giffard, for the motion.

Tinney, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have no doubt of the practice. The order is not very distinct; it says the time is to be reckoned from the date of the filing of the bill, and if so, the plaintiff is clearly right. But even if it is to be reckoned from the amendment of the defendant's office copy, the replication is properly filed; for the time allowed is made up of seven clear days and two fractions of a day, one before and one after the seven days, i. e. eight days, excluding the first and including the last. This does not leave the defendant without a remedy, for he may apply specially for leave to except. Let the exceptions be taken off the file, and with costs, but without prejudice to any application for leave to file exceptions hereafter

In the matter of BROMLEY.

Practice—Application for payment of money to a solicitor out of court under the new Act.

Applications of such a nature may be made upon motion, and need not be upon petition.

Goldsmith stated to the Court that a sum of money (50*l*) was set apart to answer certain costs in a cause due to William Bromley, a solicitor, who had since become a bankrupt; and he now moved that the said sum of 50*l.* should be paid to the assignees of the bankrupt.

It being suggested that the application to the Court should have been by petition, and not upon motion, Mr. Goldsmith stated that it was so made for the purpose of saving expense The costs of drawing up an order on petition would amount to 1*l.* 10*s.*; whereas an order upon motion would only cost half that sum. It appeared also that there was an error in carrying over the sum as for costs due to

James Bromley, whereas it should have been to William Bromley; but it was stated that there was no doubt as to the person, and there would be no difficulty in setting that point right.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would consider the point, and particularly as to the form of the application, whether it should be on motion or by petition, as many cases of a like kind would occur under the new Act.

April 24.—His LORDSHIP this day stated that he was of opinion he might make the order on motion, and that it need not be upon petition; but a recital must be introduced in the order as to the error in the name.

BARRELL v. EARL of EGREMONT.

If a tenant for life, out of his own money, pays off charges upon an estate, but expressing, or by his acts indicating no intention either of exonerating the estate or continuing the charges for his own benefit, the presumption of law is in favour of the continuance, and though more than twenty years elapse between the period of payment and the death of the tenant for life, and no notice of them during all the time has been taken, the tenant for life being in the receipt of the whole rents and profits, the remainder-man cannot set up the Statute of Limitations against the personal representatives of the tenant for life.

This was a bill by the legal personal representatives of George O'Brien, late Earl of Egremont, against the present earl, for an account of the principal and interest of the sum of 25,000*l.* given for the benefit of his younger children by the father of the late earl, and paid to them by the late earl. One of the questions was, whether this sum was a charge on the real estates devised by his father to the late earl, or the primary fund, and it was held that it was. It was also held that the late earl (George) had not, by his acts shewn an intention to exonerate the estates, or to waive his right to keep up the charges for his own benefit. The third point was the application of the Statute of Limitations to the case. The father of the late earl having given the sum in question, devised the real estates on which it was charged to the late earl, and appointed him his executor and residuary legatee. The money so charged was paid as directed to the parties interested therein, and releases were given by them to the late earl. The last payment and release occurred so far back as the year 1781, but neither before nor after that time did Earl George appear to be aware that he had a right to keep the charges on foot for his own benefit, nor did he ever take any notice of them. He died in 1837, leaving the present plaintiffs the executors of his will, who now brought their bill for relief. The case was argued at great length during the sittings after last Michaelmas Term, and again in Hilary Term, and a great number of authorities were cited, and judgment was now delivered by

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—After stating the facts at great length, his lordship said, that it had been argued that as the right of Earl George accrued in 1781, when he paid off the last of the charges, and as there had been no acknowledgment since, agreeably to the Statute of Limitations, nor any payment of interest out of the proceeds of the estates, the plaintiffs were barred. On the whole, his lordship was of opinion, however, that the statute was not applicable to a case where no assignable person existed either to claim or to pay, as was the case here, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief they prayed.

DALTON v. HAYTER.

Preliminary objection to a demurrer on the ground of its not being entered agreeably to Lord Clarendon's order.

A defendant to a bill being a mortgagee of an estate belonging to certain parties, and another estate belonging to the same parties being conveyed to trustees to sell, for the purpose of paying that among other incumbrances, and a bill being filed against the trustees to carry out the trusts, the plaintiffs made the mortgagee a party, on the ground that, though he had no interest, yet he claimed an interest under the trust deed. The defendant demurred, and his demurrer was disallowed.

The demurrer in this case coming on for argument, Wood, for the plaintiff, insisted that it should be overruled, because it had not been duly entered according to the order of Lord Clarendon, 173, and that the thirty-fourth order of August 1841, did not dispense with the necessity of continuing the old practice.

Kindersley and Beavan, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS could not see any object in raising the objection, inasmuch as, if valid, it could be stated on the demurrer. Besides, even if he did overrule it on that ground, it could be restored to the paper on special application. The thirty-fourth order of 1841 proceeds on the supposition that the entry was for the purpose of having the demurrer argued.

Kindersley and Beavan then proceeded to argue the demurrer. There was an incumbrance on one estate, called Shanks estate, which was first created in favour of one Ingram, and ultimately became vested in Mr. Beavan, the demurring party. Other estates belonging to the same parties were vested in trustees for sale, for the purpose of paying off, among others, this incumbrance; and a bill being filed against the trustees to carry out the trusts, they objected that Mr. Beavan should have been made a party, on the ground that he claimed an interest under the deed of trust in the "matters in question." He was accordingly made a party by the plaintiff, on the ground already stated, and he demurred to the bill. It was insisted that, being a mere mortgagee, and no offer being made in the bill to redeem his mortgage, his demurrer was quite proper. They cited Plumbe v. Plume (4 You. & C. 345); Pearse v. Hewit (7 Sim. 471).

Wood, contrà.—The trustees allege that the mortgagee is a necessary party, and we allege that they so do; that is enough to entitle us to make him a party. The execution of the trust is obstructed, and we are seeking to enforce it. He cited Plummer v. May (1 Ves. sen. 426); Fenton v. Hughes (7 Ves. 287).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If the question related to the Shanks estate merely, it would be sufficient for Mr. Beavan to say, "I am a mortgagee, and you don't offer to redeem." But there is more here: the plaintiffs allege that though he has no interest, yet he claims to have an interest under the deed of conveyance to the trustees in "the matters in question;" and the demurrer of course admits this. The defendant has mistaken the case. The demurrer must be disallowed, but no costs on either side.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

March 29 and April 3.

MICKLETHWAIT v. ATKINSON.

Defendant of unsound mind—Answer by guardian.

Where a defendant was of unsound mind, but not found lunatic by commission, and his answer was put in by guardian, in the same way as an infant's answer, and exceptions were taken to it for insufficiency, the exceptions were directed to be taken off the file.

Rogers, on behalf of the defendant in this cause, moved that the exceptions which had been filed to his answer might be taken off the file for irregularity, under the following circumstances:—The bill was filed for an account by the residuary legatees, under a will of which the defendant was the executor. The defendant being of infirm mind, but not having been found a lunatic by commission, put in his answer by a guardian, similar to the answer of an infant. The order for the guardian had been obtained ex parte at the Rolls, after the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce had declined to make the order. To this answer the plaintiffs had excepted for insufficiency, and the object of the present application was to take these exceptions off the file for irregularity. Mitford on Pleading, p. 314, was cited.

Montague, on behalf of the plaintiffs, cited Dandewick v. Parmester, Bunbury v. ——— (Daniell's Chancery Practice, vol. 2, pp. 302, 403); Levin v. Capperley (Prec. in Chan. 220; 1 Ey. Ca. Ab. 281); Gason v. Garnier (1 Dick, 286); and Crawford v. Kinnaghan (1 Dr. and Walsh, 195).

Rogers, in reply.

April 3.—The VICE CHANCELLOR said that the question in this case was, whether it was regular to except for insufficiency to the answer of a person of unsound mind, who had put in his answer by guardian, there not having been any commission of lunacy or any committee. He was not aware of any case which had been decided upon the subject, and therefore he must determine the question upon reason and principle. After discussing at some length the analogy between the answer of such a defendant as the present and that of an infant, his Honour said that whether an answer in such a case as this could be used against the guardian, out of the suit, or whether it could be used against the defendant, in or out of the suit, he would not determine. In the absence, however, of precedent and direct authority, he must direct these exceptions to be taken off the file—the costs of the motion to be costs in the cause.

LYSE v. KINGDOM.

Executors—Costs—Presumption of death.

Where there was no reasonable doubt as to the title of a party, who claimed an interest under a will in consequence of the presumptive death of the person named in the will, the representatives of the executrixes having refused to allow the claim, were charged with the costs of a suit instituted to establish the title, but, under the circumstances, they were allowed to take them out of the assets of the executrixes.

Mrs. E. Walker, the testatrix in this cause, by her will, after bequeathing several legacies, gave the residue of her property to Ann Lyse and Sarah Clapton, upon trust for four persons in equal shares and proportions; and in case of the death of either of them, leaving children, the testatrix gave the share of the person so dying to his or her children. The testatrix died in November 1818, and one of the persons to be entitled to the residue died in March 1818, having had four children, of whom the plaintiff was one. James Lyse, another of the children, was in service in 1789, in the parish of Ripple, in the county of Worcester, and in that year left his parish and entered the army. The sum to which this child would have been entitled had he survived the testatrix was retained by the executrixes, and a note of hand to that amount was given by them. The father of James had always spoken of him as being dead; and it had been stated by a person who had been a prisoner with him at Valenciennes, that he died there in captivity in February 1814. These circumstances had been communicated to the defendants, the representatives of Ann Lyse, but the name of the informant as to the death was not mentioned, and immediately afterwards the bill was filed. The representatives of Sarah Clapton, the other executrix, were afterwards brought before the Court by supplemental bill. An inquiry was directed as to the death of James Lyse, and the Master reported that he died before the death of the testatrix; and the cause now came on upon further directions and as to costs.

Russell and Campbell, for the plaintiff.

Simpkinson and Osborn, for the representatives of Ann Lyse.

Swanston and Heathfield, for the representatives of Sarah Clapton.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The testatrix, Elisabeth Walker, died in 1818. Her will was proved, in the same year, by Ann Lyse and Sarah Clapton. The assets received were considerable, and left a clear residue; that residue, subject to what I am about to state, was divided amongst the persons entitled to it under the will. One share of the residue, however, was thus circumstanced: if James Lyse, the nephew of the testatrix, was alive at the time of her decease, this share would have belonged to him, and if he had not survived her, that share would have belonged to the plaintiff. In point of fact, James Lyse did not survive the testatrix, so that we have this share belonging originally, and having always belonged to the plaintiff. There never was any reason to suppose the contrary. After administering the estate for seven or eight years, the two executrixes retained the sum of 1,559*l.* and upwards on account of this share, and signed a paper acknowledging that it was so retained. That occurred in Sept. 1826. It was the duty of these two executrixes to set apart this sum, and it was their duty to have invested it in a proper manner, either on mortgage or in the funds. There never was, however, any investment made, and they allowed this to remain simply and merely as a simple contract debt, liable to all contingencies. Sarah Clapton died in 1831, and Ann Lyse in 1835. At least as early as the year 1826 or 1827, then, a breach of trust had been committed. It is most plain that, at the time of the death of each of the executrixes, each of them was liable for this sum. After the death of the survivor of the two executrixes, applications are made on the part of the plaintiff. These applications are met by assertions on the part of the representatives of Ann Lyse, that further proof of the time of James Lyse's death was necessary, and the result was, that this bill was filed in November 1837. The representatives of Sarah Clapton were not made parties until 1839. The representatives of Sarah Clapton, in their answer, enter into long statements: they admit that they have divided their estate without ascertaining whether there were any debts due, and they claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations as to the plaintiff's demand. It is clear from this answer, that if applications for payment had been made to the representatives of Sarah Clapton, they would not have been complied with. Then, how does it stand? Some evidence had been given that James Lyse did die in the lifetime of the testatrix, and upon that single point I should have considered the evidence satisfactory. But I considered that, as these defendants disputed the fact, they had a right to further proof, and it was proper that advertisements should be published. The Master's report is conformable to the evidence, that James Lyse died in fact more than three years before the testatrix. Under these circumstances the question is, whether I am to visit the defendants personally with costs, or to allow them to take the costs out of the assets of the indebted persons. The two executrixes were indebted, and had committed a breach of trust. It is quite plain that the plaintiff would have been entitled had James Lyse died in the testatrix's lifetime. Was there then at any moment, any reasonable doubt as to this fact? I am of opinion there was not. I think, however, this is a case where costs should be paid out of the assets of the executrixes, and not by the defendants personally.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DOWNES v. MORRIS.

Lords of manors—Escheat—Equity of Redemption. Where the freehold of lands, subject to a mortgage term, had escheated to the lord of a manor: Held, that the lord had a right to redeem, as the power of redemption was inherent in the land itself, and an incident to the estate at law which had escheated.

In this case, the plaintiff filed his bill to redeem a mortgage, secured by a term of years, vested in possession in the defendant, as mortgagee of certain lands escheated to the plaintiff, as lord of the manor, in which such lands were by the bill alleged to be situated. Originally the mortgagor, being seised in fee, had created the term for the purposes of the mortgage, and subsequently, upon his decease, subject to such term, the lands had passed by devise, and other legal assurances, to the last tenant in fee, who died without heirs.

The objections raised on the part of the defendant were, first, that there existed no privity between himself and the lord, by force of which the latter had a right to redeem the term now vested, as was insisted, absolutely in himself, owing to the decease without heirs of the last person directly claiming through the mortgagor; and, secondly, that the lands in question were not situated within the manor.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The freehold having escheated to the lord, subject to the term, he ought not to be precluded from protecting his estate by any equitable remedy this Court can supply him. The case is analogous to that of a tenant dying entitled, at his decease, to the benefit of an attendant term of years. The Act of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 104 (being an Act to render freehold and copyhold estates assets for the payment of simple and contract debts), must be construed as creating a privity between the parties, particularly after the decision of Lord Langdale in a late case, in which he had directed, that, as against the lord claiming by escheat, freeholds, which had belonged to a testator dying without heirs, and which he had not charged with h's debts, were assets for the payment of debts. As to the second objection, the parties may try the question by an issue at law. (See Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Blac. 121.)

It was suggested by counsel that the case might be materially altered, by the fact of the statute referred to having come into operation subsequently to the decease of the parties alluded to. The case, therefore, stood over for reconsideration, and accordingly,

Monday, April 15,

His HONOUR said,—This case was directed to be mentioned again, with reference to the operation of the statute, which, it is admitted, did not apply to this cause, owing to the death of the last tenant having happened before the statute passed. The question must, therefore, be disposed of independently of that statute. An equity of redemption is a title in equity, and not elsewhere, and is here claimed, not as having escheated, but as an incident to the estate at law which has escheated; and is it true that no equity can pass with the estate at law escheated? That, the defendant must contend to support his position; but what are the undoubted rights of the lord at law? His estate commences where that of the last tenant ends, and comprises all that which such tenant retained. A power of redemption is an inherent power in the lands, and charged upon the land itself, not as a trust (1 Atkins, 605). Lord Hale and Lord Mansfield both drew this distinction. Every analogy, in fact, is against the defendant; and, upon the whole, I think that this is a case where equity will follow the law, and may be enforced in this court by subpœna, as in the case of attendant terms. The defendant is, however, entitled to an issue. His Honour directed the issue to be tried at the next assizes; but it was understood that such would not be the case, as the defendant intended to carry the case, by appeal, to the House of Lords.

JUDGMENT.

TAYLOR v. EARL OF HAREWOOD.

Construction of Will—Strict interpretation of a condition on proviso.

Where a testator bequeathed his property to his eldest son, with remainder to his other children, but provided that, in case his eldest son should, at any time thereafter, come into possession of an estate entailed upon the testator and his issue, such bequest should then be void to all intents and purposes; and that the trustees of his will should thereupon hold the moneys so bequeathed to his eldest son, upon trust to pay and divide the same equally amongst his other children; and after the death of the testator, a recovery of the entailed estate was suffered, and the entail barred, and the estate afterwards devised by a stranger to the eldest son, who entered into the possession of it as such devisee; Held, that the manner in which the estate came into his possession was not within the meaning of the testator's proviso in that behalf.

In this case the bill was filed for the purpose of having the operation of a condition in a will declared by the court.

A testator made his will in favour of his eldest son, but declared that, in case a certain property, entailed upon him, the testator, and his issue, should come to his son, then that the trustees of his will should stand possessed of the property so given to his eldest son, upon trust to pay and divide the same amongst his younger children, as tenants in common, share and share like. After the testator's death, the property alluded to as entailed was barred by recovery; and the tenant in tail becoming thereby tenant in fee, devised such disentailed property to the testator's eldest son, who accordingly took possession. It is contended, for the other children of the testator, that his intention was to benefit them in the event of his eldest son coming to this property; while on the other hand it is said, that the testator could only have meant to have affixed the condition in his will to the event of the then entailed property descending to his son by virtue of such entail. It would be very difficult for the Court to say he did not, or, at least, to establish a construction opposite to it; so that, whether a man acquires a property by purchase or devise, or by an elegit, such a condition, contemplating at the time a probable acquirement de jure, must, nevertheless, operate against him. Such a construction would be perplexing and difficult in the extreme, as it would utterly disregard the title or manner by means whereof the testator's son had come into possession. But by considering that the condition must depend upon the title being acquired under the entail, a natural and primâ facie meaning is given to it. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the eldest son did not obtain possession of the estate within the meaning of the proviso in the will of his father; and that, therefore, the other children did not, upon that event, become entitled to the conditional bequest in their favour.

GRIFFITHS v. RICKETTS.

Bill of revivor—Practice—49th order of August 1841. The allegations in a bill of revivor, or of supplement, must be positive, as to the plaintiff's interest, and not by way of reference to the statements in the original bill.

The defendant, in this case, demurred to the plaintiff's bill, filed for the purpose of reviving the original suit, which had abated by the decease of the then litigating parties. The original bill was filed in the year 1827, to redeem a mortgage, executed in the year 1800; and the ground of demurrer was, that there was a want of equity, inasmuch as the present bill did not sufficiently set forth the plaintiff's case; but only stated that a bill containing certain statements had been originally filed, without averring that such statements and facts were true. The plaintiff claimed as devisee of the plaintiff in the original suit, against the representatives of the defendant in that suit.

Romilly, Q. C. and Osborne, for the demurrer, contended that, as the bill stated no mortgage or payment, or acknowledgment of a mortgage, but only that there had been a bill in which the mortgage was stated, it could not be sustained.

Tinney, Q. C. and Pirie, for the bill.—This is an original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, which gives us a right to be placed in the same situation as we were with the former suit. (Mitford Pleading, p. 56; Metcalfe v. Metcalfe, 1 Keen, 79.) The bill being in the nature of a bill of revivor, the statements of the case, as set forth in the original bill, need not be repeated, but only referred to, by the 49th order of August 1841: "That it shall not be necessary in any bill of revivor or supplemental bill, to set forth any of the statements in the pleadings in the original suit, unless the special circumstances of the case may require it."

Romilly, in reply.—This bill can only be supported as a bill of revivor; and if taken as an original bill, it cannot be sustained. They proceed on the assumption that the plaintiff was the plaintiff on the original record, which is revivor; but can they say it is revivor, where there is not a party to the present who was on the original record? (Woods v. Woods, 10 Sim. 197.) Here are the devisees of the plaintiff suing the executors of the defendant, which cannot constitute revivor. It is a supplemental bill against certain parties, and there is no authority to shew that, in such bills, allegations may be omitted as to the interest of the party claiming.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Though you are not to repeat the statements in the original bill, yet you must, in some cases, introduce your statements shewing the interest of the plaintiff. I must allow the demurrer; but as there has been some misconception respecting the 49th order, the plaintiff may amend his bill.

Saturday, April 27.

REG. v. ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN.

This was a mandamus, which had issued to the defendants commanding them to account for the poor-rate of their parish to the auditor of the Poor Law Commissioners. The defendants returned, that they had accounted, and also that they were not bound to account. Issue was taken upon the return. The case had been tried, and now came on in the shape of a motion to enter a verdict for the defendants.

The question was, whether the parish, which was governed by a local Act, was bound to account to the auditor of the union for the whole of the poor-rate, which included the water-rate, and out of which other things besides the mere relief of the poor had always been provided for, or only for that part of it which was actually applied to the latter purpose.

When judgment is given the case will be fully reported. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF CATTERALL.

An allegation in the examination on the removal of a pauper that he was a bachelor, is a sufficient statement of his being unmarried and without child or children—Hiring and service—Sufficiency of.

In this case an order had been made for the removal of the pauper and his family. The settlement relied upon by the respondents was one by hiring and service. Upon the examination, the evidence of the witness who proved the settlement was: "The pauper came to live with my father. He was not agreed for any particular time. My father found him meat, washing, and lodging as long as he stayed." It was also proved that the pauper was a "bachelor."

The grounds of appeal relating to this part of the case were, "that the examinations were not sufficient to support the order; that they were bad on the face of them, and did not state the necessary facts from which it could be implied that the pauper did gain a settlement by hiring and service, and that they did not state that he was an unmarried person, not having children; and also, that there was no such settlement by hiring and service." With the copy order and examination, the respondent parish had sent a copy of the complaint in writing, which had been made before the justices. It appeared to have been made by the assistant-overseer. The sessions had quashed the order, subject to a case.

Whigham, for the appellants.—First, there is no sufficient complaint; it ought to be made by the churchwardens and overseers. The assistant-overseer is a mere stranger for this purpose. He is an officer elected by the parish in vestry, assembled under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7. Under that statute the parishioners may fix at his election what the duties of an assistant-overseer shall be; but there is no evidence here that it was among his duties to make this complaint, and it cannot be assumed that it was.

The COURT called on Cowling, contrà, to answer this objection.

Cowling, contrà.—The mere fact of the complaint being in this form could not preclude the sessions from entering into the merits. In a case decided in this court a few days ago, a complaint was made by one of the overseers only, and it was held enough. If we had not sent any copy of the complaint, this question could never have arisen. The order recites that the complaint was made by the overseers. It is for the other side to shew the contrary of this recital. The magistrates and their clerk have taken it for granted that it was so. The whole case of the other side is, that a mere memorandum is drawn up informally.

The COURT here called on Whigham to go on to his other objections.

Whigham.—There is no evidence of any hiring for a year, and no statement that the man was unmarried and single.

PATTESON, J.—What is the meaning of the word bachelor?

Whigham.—Upon the other point it is quite clear that there was no hiring for a year. The evidence entirely negatives it.

Cowling here admitted that he could not get over this objection.

Order of sessions confirmed.

At the sitting of the Court, the following cases were disposed of:—

REG. v. EARL OF DARTMOUTH and ANOTHER, JUSTICES OF STAFFORDSHIRE.
(Argued 20th January, 1844.)

Where the auditor disallowed certain accounts of the outgoing overseers, but the justices and the quarter-sessions, on appeal, subsequently allowed them, the Court refused to interfere.

This was a rule calling upon the defendants, who were justices of the county of Stafford, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to issue a distress-warrant for the levy upon the goods and chattels of the late overseers of the poor of the parish of A, of certain sums of money, which had been disallowed by the auditor, under 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, but subsequently allowed by the justices, and also, on appeal at the instance of the auditor, by the court of quarter-sessions under 50 Geo. 3, c. 49.

Whateley, Q.C. and Gray, shewed cause.

Pollock, A.G. and Whitmore, contrà.

Held by the COURT, that the authority of the justices and that of the auditor were concurrent, and that the Court could not interfere.

MACLISE v. NICHOLL.
(Moved April 16.)
Infant necessaries.

Crowder, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground that Coleridge, J. ought to have directed the jury that articles which the father of an infant had directed a tradesman not to supply to the infant without an order from him, it being proved that the father had recently paid a bill for articles of the same description supplied to the infant, were not necessaries.

Rule refused.

REG. v. JOSEPH JOHN DEIGHTON.
(Argued April 24.)

The voting papers handed in for candidates for the office of alderman must describe them as of the place of their residence.

This was a demurrer to a replication to a plea to an information, in the nature of a quo warranto, calling upon Joseph John Deighton to shew cause by what authority he claimed to be an alderman of the borough of Cambridge.

The question was, whether the voting papers of the persons who voted for him were rightly inscribed, according to the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act. He was described in the papers as of Trinity-street, in which he carried on his business, whereas it was contended, on behalf of the Crown, that he ought to have been described as of the place of his residence.

Gunning, for the prosecution.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.

The COURT now said that the voting papers were wrong. Judgment for the Crown.

HARVEY v. BURGESS.
(See 3 LAW T. col. 3.)

This case stood over that the Court might take time to consider whether an executor de son tort, who pleaded ne unquis executor, with other pleas, the plea of ne unquis executor being false within his own knowledge, was, in consequence of such false plea, liable to judgment for the whole amount claimed.

The COURT now decided against such liability, and directed the verdict to be entered for 23*l*.

REG. v. COTESBY and OTHERS.
Habeas Corpus.

A warrant of commitment reciting a conviction must shew a good conviction. It should shew on the face of it that the witnesses for the prosecution were vivâ voce examined on oath in presence of the prisoner as well as on the making the complaint or information.

The defendants, who had been committed by justices under the provisions of the Masters and Servants Act, were brought up by habeas corpus.

Bodkin, Fry, and Huddlestone moved to discharge them out of custody, for defects in the several warrants of commitment.

There were several prisoners, but as the warrants were substantially alike, the cases were taken together. In the first and most numerous class of cases, the following was the form of the warrant:—

West Riding of Yorkshire to wit.—To G. R. the constable of B. in the W. R. of the county of York, and to the keeper of the House of Correction at Wakefield, in the said W. R. of the county of York.

Whereas information and complaint hath been made before me, W. B. M. esq. one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the W. R. of the said county, by A. F. of W. in the said W. R. colliery proprietor, upon the oath of the said A. F. against J. H. late of H. in the said W. R. collier, for that he, the said J. H. having contracted with the said A. F. and others, his partners in trade, as colliery proprietors, to wit, on the first day of January, A.D. 1842, in the W. R. aforesaid, to serve them, the said A. F. and others, in the capacity and employment of a collier in the said W. R. from thence until the end of one month after he should have given to or received from his said master notice to quit and leave his said master's service, and that the said J. H. in pursuance of the said contract, entered into the service of the said A. F. and others accordingly, and that afterwards he did unlawfully absent himself from his said service without his said master's consent, in the Riding aforesaid, to wit on the 23rd, 24th, 26th, and 27th days of February last past respectively, before the time of his said contract was completed, to wit, after the commencement of the said contract, and before the end of one month after he had given to or received from his said master notice to quit and leave his said master's service, and hath from thence hitherto neglected to fulfil his said contract, against the form of the statutes in such case made and provided; and whereas the said J. H. in pursuance of my warrant for that purpose, hath this day appeared before me to answer the said complaint, but hath not proved that he is not guilty of the said complaint and charge; and whereas, in pursuance of the statutes in that case made and provided, I have duly examined the proofs and allegations upon oath of both the said parties touching the matter of the said complaint, and upon due consideration had thereof, have adjudged and determined the said complaint to be true, and that he the said J. H. did contract with the said A. F. and others as aforesaid, in the Riding aforesaid, and did afterwards absent himself from the said service before the time of his said contract was completed as aforesaid, to wit, on the several days aforesaid in the year aforesaid; and I do therefore convict him, the said J. H. of the said offence, in pursuance of the statutes in that case made and provided. These are therefore to command you, the said G. R. forthwith to convey the said J. H. to the House of Correction at W. aforesaid, and to deliver him to the keeper thereof, together with this warrant; and I do hereby command you, the said keeper, to receive the said J. H. into your custody in the said House of Correction, there to remain and be held in hard labour for the space of three calendar months from the date hereof, and for your so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. And whereas it has appeared to me, upon the proofs and allegations of both the said parties upon oath as aforesaid, that no wages are now or will hereafter become due to the said J. H. from the said A. F. and others during the period that the said J. H. will be in the said House of Correction as aforesaid. I have adjudged and determined that no wages are now or will hereafter become due to the said J. H. from the said A. F. and others during the said period the said J. H. will be confined in the said House of Correction as aforesaid. I have not made, and I do not make, any order to abate a proportionate part of his wages for and during such period as he shall be confined in the House of Correction as aforesaid.

Given under my hand and seal, at the Court-house in B. in the W. R. of the county of York, the 6th day of March, A.D. 1844.

W. B. M. (L.S.)

For the prisoners it was objected that this was defective, for not shewing who were the other parties besides the said A. F. with whom the said J. H. had contracted, inasmuch as the statutes which permit a partnership to be so described in indictments and informations do not extend to convictions; and also that it was uncertain, as it recited that the prisoner was charged with absenting himself on the 23rd, 24th, 26th, and 27th of February, which would be four several offences under the statute; whereas it only appeared that the said justice convicted the said J. H. of the said offence, and it did not appear of which of the said offences he was convicted; and also that it did not sufficiently appear that the witnesses against the said J. H. were ever examined on oath in his presence.

Erle, Q. C. Yardley, and Overend, contended that this commitment was good on the face of it, and that it was to be distinguished from a conviction, and did not require the same certainty.

Bodkin was heard in reply.

The COURT took time to consider and delivered judgment the following morning.

By the COURT.—It has been properly contended, that this commitment cannot be supported, unless there appear on the face of it that the witnesses against the prisoner were examined in his presence; neither was this disputed, for it was said that they had been so examined. Now it certainly is not stated in terms in this commitment, that he was so examined; and it is remarkable, that the most general form of conviction given by any states that fact. It has been also stated in all convictions that have been held good, if not in direct terms, at least in equivalent language, which the judges have always admitted with regret, though to find it they have been obliged to examine the words of each particular commitment. In this case it is not stated in terms, and we do not find any equivalent words, for it is almost impossible not to conclude from the language of this commitment, that no vivâ voce allegations were made by the witnesses against the prisoner in his presence. It has been said, that this commitment would be good if it were supported by a good conviction, and that as a mere commitment it is to be supported; to that the answer is, that a good conviction ought to have been drawn up and produced. We do not pronounce any opinion on the other points that were raised, but on this we are of opinion that the prisoner must be discharged.

Prisoner ordered to be discharged.

REG. v. ——.

These were another class of prisoners, who had been committed under warrants which were clearly bad; but for which good ones had been substituted afterwards by the magistrates. Both warrants had been returned by the gaoler. For the prisoners it was contended, that as the last warrants recited a conviction, it must be taken to be the document first lodged with the gaoler, and that as this was bad, the prisoners must be discharged. This point, however, was overruled by the Court.

Prisoners remanded.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF CHESHIRE.

This was a rule calling upon certain justices of Cheshire to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to appoint separate overseers for the township of Little Barrow.

Kelly, Q.C., and Townshend, shewed cause.

Jervis, P.P., and Yardly, contrà.

The parish consisted of Great Barrow and Little Barrow, and at the end of the argument the Court complained that no form of the appointment of overseers for the parish had been brought forward by either party. The Court directed the case to be referred to the Master, who was to have such appointments brought under his notice, and to report to the Court. The Court further said that if no instance could be produced of separate appointments of overseers for Little Barrow and Great Barrow, they had no hesitation in saying that the rule ought to be discharged.

Stands over accordingly.

ATKINSON v. PEARSALL.

Platt, Q. C. moved for a new trial on the ground of a verdict against evidence.

The case was tried before Coleridge, J. in the Bail Court. Rule refused.

ROBERTSON v. STRUTH.

A declaration on the judgment of a foreign superior Court need not contain averments to shew that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, and any exception to the jurisdiction must be pleaded.

The action was debt on a judgment of the Supreme Court of Judicature of St. Vincent.

Demurrer to declaration.

Bovill, for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q. C., for defendant.

Declaration stated, "for that whereas the plaintiffs, to wit, at the Supreme Court of Judicature of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, holden at the Court-house in Kingstown, in and for the island of St. Vincent, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court, to wit, on the 18th April, A.D. 1843, before the Chief Justice of the said Court, by the consideration and judgment of the same Court, recovered against the said defendant the sum of 812*l.* 10s. 3d. for their damages by reason of the non-performance of certain promises made by the defendant to the plaintiff, and by the said Court there to the said plaintiffs adjudged," and which sum still remained due and unpaid, &c.

Demurrer, assigning for cause that the declaration does not state or shew that the causes of action on which the judgment mentioned in the declaration mentioned protesses to be given arose within the jurisdiction of the said Supreme Court; that without an express averment that the promises were made within the jurisdiction, the declaration is defective in substance, inasmuch as that Court would have no jurisdiction to give such judgment unless the promises were made within its jurisdiction; that nothing will be intended in favour of the jurisdiction, and that it is consistent with the facts stated, that the promises were made in England, or the West-Indies, in either of which cases the said Court would have no jurisdiction.

It was contended for the plaintiff, that all the cases in which such an averment was held necessary were judgments of inferior Courts, over which this Court has jurisdiction, and which, therefore, it must respect, in order to see that they have acted within their limits. It was argued that this was an original superior Court, which would be held to have jurisdiction over all causes of action, until the contrary was shewn; and that if they had exceeded their jurisdiction, it must be shewn by way of plea, and that this declaration was in the form used from time immemorial.

For the defendant it was argued, that the Court could not intend more in favour of a Court of whose origin and power they knew nothing, than they could in the case of an inferior court in this country.

The counsel for the plaintiff was stopped by the Court.

MITTELHOLZER v. FULLARTON.

Construction of contract—Sale or lease.

Special case.

Where the Legislature has provided that no instrument whereby certain interests should be transferred should be good in law to convey such interest, unless a memorandum thereof should be registered in a certain office, it is the duty of the transferree to register the instrument; and he cannot afterwards, in an action for the price, avail himself of his own failure to register it.

Martin, Q. C. and Dasent, for plaintiff.

Erle, Q. C. for defendant.

This was an action of debt, and the declaration stated, that heretofore, to wit, on the 25th September, A.D. 1834, by a certain agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, it was agreed as follows: to wit, that, in consideration of 7,800*l.* payable in manner as thereinafter expressed, the plaintiff had bargained and sold, and did thereby sell, assign, and transfer, and make over all his right, title, and interest in the services of 153 apprenticed labourers, formerly slaves belonging to him, for and during the term of their apprenticeship to the defendant, on behalf and to the use of his plantations, or his heirs, executors, or assigns, the plaintiff promising and engaging to warrant and defend the defendant from all claims and demands on, and otherwise, in as far as was in his power, to guarantee the quiet and undisturbed possession of the services of such apprenticed labourers, according to law. That the defendant covenanted to pay, or cause to be paid, to the plaintiff, the said sum of 7,800*l.* in six instalments, of 1,300*l.* [illegible] That it was agreed between the parties that in case of failure in the payment of any of the instalments, the plaintiff should be entitled to reclaim, and the services of such labourers, during the then remaining term of apprenticeship, should revert to him, the defendant remaining nevertheless liable for the payment of such sums as should be then due for the value or hire of the labour, during such period as he should have received the services of the labourers, at and after the rate of 1,300*l.* per annum; and to be moreover bound to make good any losses which might be thereby sustained. The declaration then averred, that after the making of the said agreement, the labour of the said labourers was, in pursuance of the said agreement, had, used, and enjoyed by the defendant, to wit, from the time of making the said agreement, for and during the term of their apprenticeship; and the plaintiff was at all times willing and ready to warrant and d fend, and so did warrant and defend, the defendant against all claims and demands on him in respect of the said apprenticed labourers, and did otherwise guarantee, as far as was in his power, the quiet and undisturbed possession of the services of such apprentices according to law; and that the defendant, in fact, had such quiet possession thereof for and during the term aforesaid, and assigned for breach, that although the defendant, in part performance of the said agreement on his part, paid to the plaintiff four of the said instalments, and although the times for the payment of the remaining instalments had severally elapsed before the commencement of this suit; yet, the defendant hath not paid the said remaining instalment, or either of them, or any part thereof, but the same, amounting to 2,600*l.* were still wholly due and unsatisfied to the plaintiff

Pleas.—First, That before the remaining instalments, in the declaration mentioned, became due and payable, the said agreement was by consent of both parties wholly annulled and rescinded.

2ndly, That the said agreement in the declaration mentioned was made in writing, in and by a certain instrument, bearing date 25th September, A.D. 1834, and that the said instrument was made in the colony of British Guiana, and in the district of Berbice; and that the said instrument was made for the purpose of transferring the service of 153 apprenticed labourers in the said colony. That before the making the said instrument, to wit on the 8th March, A.D. 1834, a certain ordinance for the government regulation of apprenticed labourers was duly made by the governors of the said colony, in compliance with the provisions of an Act of Parliament passed 3 & 4 Wm. 4, and according to the laws and usages in force in the said colony; and that it was enacted by the said ordinance that after the 1st August, 1834, no instrument whereby the services of any apprenticed labourer should be transferred, should be good or valid in law to pass, or convey, or affect such service, unless an annotation or memorandum of such instrument should be recorded in a book, t[illegible]ept for such purpose in the Colonial Registrar's [illegible] of each of the respective districts in the said colony, within one month after executing such instrument. That although before, and at, and after, the making the said instrument, a book was and had been duly kept for the purpose in the said office, yet that no annotation or memorandum of the said instrument was recorded therein.

3rdly, A plea to which plaintiff demurred and had judgment.

4thly, That the said agreement in the declaration mentioned was made in writing in British Guiana, and that the parties were British subjects, and the said sale and agreement was made to transfer the services of 153 predial apprenticed labourers during the term of their apprenticeship, according to the Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British colonies. That after the said agreement, the defendant had the services of the said apprentices till 1st August, 1838: that while they were in the service of the defendant, to wit on the 23rd July, 1838, a certain ordinance was duly made by the governor and council, according to the Act and the laws of the colony; and it was thereby enacted, that all the persons who, on the 1st August, A.D. 1838, should be predial apprenticed labourers in British Guiana should then become absolutely free. And that the said labourers were, by the said ordinance, so freed and discharged, and the defendant was wholly deprived of their services; and the parties to the said agreement were prevented and prohibited by the authority aforesaid from further performing the said agreement, or from carrying the said sale and transfer into any further operation: and the defendant says, that during all such time as the said labourers remained in his service, he duly paid the said instalments as they became due; and afterwards, and after the 1st August, 1838, the defendant also duly paid the fourth instalment, &c.

The replication to the first plea denied that the agreement was rescinded.

The replication to the second plea denied that there had been any book kept for the purpose in that plea mentioned in the Colonial Registrar's office.

The replication to the fourth plea denied that the parties were prevented or prohibited by the authority of the ordinance in that plea mentioned from further performing the agreement.

The cause came on for trial at Guildhall, in Hilary Term, 1843. A verdict was taken by consent for the plaintiff on the first and fourth issues, and for the defendant on the second issue, subject to the following case:—

On the 22nd of July, 1834, an ordinance was duly made as in the second plea mentioned. A book had been duly kept for the purpose mentioned in the second plea, and it was admitted that the verdict must be for defendant on the second issue. On the 12th July, 1838, an ordinance was duly made by the governor as in the fourth plea mentioned.

The questions for the opinion of the Court were— 1st. Whether, upon the above facts, the verdict ought to have been for the plaintiff or defendant upon the first and fourth issues respectively. Secondly. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto upon the second issue.

The defendant to be entitled to arrest the judgment upon the fourth issue, if the Court should think he would have been entitled to do so upon motion.

For the plaintiff it was contended that the contract was of sale, and not of lease, and that although the money was payable by instalments, yet the right to it became vested the moment the contract was executed; also, that even if it were a letting, the power of the plaintiff over the subject of the letting having been destroyed by the power of the Government, it was analogous to cases where a lessee is compelled to pay rent though the subject of the lease has been destroyed by the act of God, as by fire or an inundation. It was also contended that the second plea was bad, as it was the duty and interest of the defendant himself to have registered the contract, and that it did not lie in his mouth to say that it was avoided by his own neglect; and also because the neglect to register only avoided the contract, if at all, so far as regarded the validity of the transfer of the labourers, and not as to the consideration, and that the plaintiff having done all in his power to give validity to it, had become entitled to the consideration.

By the COURT. This appears to us to have been an absolute sale of such right as the plaintiff had at the time. Any alteration which took place afterwards could not affect the right to recover the price. Suppose, for instance, all the slaves had died in the first year, it could not be said that the contract would be annulled. It is not necessary to decide whether, if the contract had been one of lease, the liability for rent would have continued. If it had turned upon that, the Court would have taken time to consider. The second question is, whether the defendant can make use of the fact that the contract has never been registered, and say that it has, therefore, become void. It seems to us that he cannot. It was the duty of the purchaser to see that the annotation was made. It could only affect his interest. The plaintiff had done all in his power to entitle himself to the price, and the defendant cannot avail himself of his own neglect to escape from his bargain. In all cases where property is destroyed, either by the act of God, or in any other way over which the parties have no control, and when the question arises who is to bear the loss, the criterion is to find out the actual owner at the time. So in the case of goods in transit, it becomes a very nice question, whether they are vested in the consignor or consignee. If it were not for the clause introduced at the end of the contract, and which is only introduced as a condition for the benefit of the vendor, no question could ever have arisen. As to the first plea, it clearly points to a rescinding of the contract by the parties only, and not by the effect of this law. We think, therefore, there must be judgment for the plaintiff on all the issues.

REG. v. MAUDE.

Semble, the judge who tries an indictment for felony, removed into this Court by certiorari, has power to award the prosecutor his costs, but this must be done by the judge who tried the case, and not by the Court.

Rawlinson moved the Court to make an order on the treasurer of the county of Southampton, for payment to the prosecutor of the costs incurred by him, on an indictment for felony, tried at the last Winchester assizes.

The indictment had been removed by certiorari, and Wightman, J. who tried the case, was at first disposed to make the order, but afterwards doubted his power to do so, on the authority of Reg. v. Treasurer of Exeter, 5 Man. & Ry. He submitted that costs could be lawfully awarded in such cases; that this had frequently been done, and recently in a case of some importance at Exeter (Reg. v. Osborne).

By DENMAN, C. J.—We have no power to interfere; but if my brother Wightman chooses to make the order, he can do so, subject to its being reviewed in this Court, if objected to.

WIGHTMAN, J. then made the order accordingly.

ATHERTON v. HEARD.
(Demurrer.)

Declaration on two bills of exchange.

Plea.—That plaintiff had before impleaded the defendant for the same causes of action, and that a certain sum had, in the first action, been paid by defendant, and accepted by plaintiff, under a judge's order, in full satisfaction of the causes of action in such first action; with an averment that the causes of action were identical.

Replication.—That 25*l.* more than were paid under the judge's order were then due upon the said bills; that this was unknown to the plaintiff, but well known to the defendant, who wilfully and fraudulently withheld the knowledge of this fact from the plaintiff, and induced him to consent to the said order.

BROOKS and ANOTHER v. HODGSON.
Judge's order—Signing judgment—Fi. fa.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the consent signed by the defendant, and the judge's order in the cause, should not be set aside, together with the judge's order founded upon that consent; and also why the writ of execution of fi. fa. should not be set aside.

The ground of the application to set aside the consent was, that the consent was obtained fraudulently, being, in fact, a fraud within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9.

TINDAL, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court. The judge's notes at the trial having been read and considered, the Court have come to the conclusion not to disturb the verdict. They were not prepared to say it was not a case of great suspicion; but a case ought to be much stronger than mere suspicion to induce the Court to order a second trial. On the whole, it was a matter of general principle to refuse a new trial, unless they could take upon themselves to say that the justice of the case must be answered by a second inquiry. Rule refused.

Dowling, Serjt. applied for a distringas to compel the defendant's appearance. The affidavit on which he moved did not state that the call had been made at the defendant's residence; but it was sufficient if he shewed, from answers to inquiries made at the defendant's counting-house, that he was keeping out of the way of service.

The COURT said, that the universal practice in such case was to shew in the affidavit, either that the defendant had no residence, or that it was impossible to discover where his residence was; otherwise, calling at the counting-house was not sufficient. Rule refused.

On the following day, Dowling, Serjt. renewed his application upon an affidavit, which stated that search had been made in vain to find out where the defendant resided. Rule nisi granted.

COLLINS v. SAVAGE.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of misdirection.

The action had been brought in detinue, and was tried before Maule, J. Rule nisi.

BIRCH v. LEEKE.
A plea of coverture, at the time of making the promises in the action, is an issuable plea.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. why final judgment should not be set aside for irregularity, with costs.

Judgment in this case had been signed as for want of a plea. The defendant being under terms to plead issuably, had pleaded coverture at the time of making the promises, &c. This was treated as not being an issuable plea. Cromwell v. Thomas (2 Sir Wm. Blackstone, 724) is the only case directly upon the point. This plea, in principle, is not an issuable plea, which means a plea to the merits. Here, as in point of fact, the defendant contracted when a married woman, it would once have been a good defence under non assumpsit. (Staples v. Holdsworth, 4 Bing. N.C. 144.) By the new rules it cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. [TINDAL, C.J.—That would make it more necessary to plead it.] On the ground of laches, the declaration was delivered on the 13th December, and a plea, bad, because not signed by a serjeant, was pleaded on the 5th January. Judgment was signed, but set aside on terms. On the 12th January the plaintiff signed judgment on the present plea. On the 17th, a summons was taken out to set that judgment aside. Several subsequent summonses were taken out; the last, on the 29th, was attended before Coltman, J, who, upon the case being stated, would not interfere. It was submitted that, as the interval from the 12th until the 29th had been suffered to intervene, the defendant was not in a situation to claim relief.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—The question whether this is an issuable plea has been recently determined by this Court, which has decided that the non-delivery of an attorney's signed bill a month before the commencement of the action is an issuable plea.

Rule absolute, with costs.

MARCHMONT v. SHARP.
Appearance—Irregularity.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why an appearance entered for the defendant should not be set aside, for irregularity, with costs.

ILEY v. FRANKENSTEIN.
New Trial—Misdirection—Verdict against evidence.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and of the verdict being against evidence.

The declaration was for goods sold and delivered; plea, non assumpsit. The plaintiff by this action sought to recover the price of certain goods alleged to have been sold and delivered to the defendant. The defence was, that there was no absolute sale, but that the goods were delivered on the terms of sale or return. It appeared, also, at the trial, that fourteen days was the time within which the defendant was to return the goods, and that this time had elapsed before the action had been brought. Mr. Justice Maule, before whom the cause was tried, left it to the jury to say whether this was an absolute sale or only on sale or return, and that if the jury thought the goods were sold out and out, they were to find for the plaintiff; but if on sale or return, then for the defendant. The jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Dowling, Serjt. submitted that the direction of the learned judge ought to have been whether the defendant had retained the goods beyond a reasonable time; as if he had, the action for goods sold and delivered would lie. (Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Light and Coke Company, 6 Ad. and Ell. 829.)

Rule nisi granted on both points.

Re VALLANCE and BEIGLEY.
GREGORY v. DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.
Taxation of Costs—Master.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. calling upon Messrs. Vallance and Beigley to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation of their bill of costs; why the Master's certificate should not be reduced by the sum of 80*l.* 10*s.*; and why so much of an order of Mr. Justice Coltman as directed the Duke of Brunswick to pay the amount of the Master's certificate, should not be rescinded.

The questions in dispute were, whether the sum of 80*l.* 10*s.* had been disbursed by Messrs. Vallance (who had lately been the Duke's solicitors), with or without the authority of his Highness; and also whether by reason of any agreement to indemnify, his Highness was liable solely to pay Vallance and Beigley's bill of costs in Gregory v. Duke of Brunswick, in which Vallance himself was a co-defendant.

Sir Thos. Wilde and Byles, Serjt. appeared in support of the rule, but, at the suggestion of the Court, it was agreed between the parties to refer the disposal of the rule and costs to the Master.

DOE dem. BRADSHAW v. ROE.
Practice—Ejectment—Service of declaration.

Byles, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector.

The notice was addressed to John Kirby, instead of Samuel Kirby, the tenant in possession.

It appearing, however, that the right person had been served, the Court granted the rule.

EDWARDS v. GREEN.
Notice—Postponement of trial.

Byles, Serjt. applied, on behalf of defendant, to postpone the trial of this cause until the London sittings after next Term, on the ground of the defendant not being ready with his evidence. This issue was delivered on the 26th instant.

The COURT, however, declined to interfere in the absence of the plaintiff, although notice had been given of the intended application, but left the defendant to apply to the judge at the trial.

EDWARDS v. BATES and ANOTHER.
Nonsuit—Form of action.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved to enter a verdict for plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved. The action was in debt; the declaration was for money had and received; plea, never indebted.

Plaintiff sought to recover the balance due to him after satisfying a debt owing to the defendants, out of moneys received by the defendants, under a deed of assignment executed to them by plaintiff. By this deed, property of the plaintiff was assigned to the defendants on trust to pay out of the money they might so receive their own debt, and to hand over the surplus to the plaintiff. At the trial, the defendants put in this deed of assignment, and then objected that the action should have been covenant, and not debt. Mr. Justice Maule, before whom the cause was tried, thought that this defence ought to have been specially pleaded, but by consent the plaintiff was nonsuited, leave being reserved to him to move to enter a verdict. Burnett v. Lynch (5 B. & C. 589) was cited. Rule nisi.

NICKELS v. HASLAM.
Demurrer—Patent—Title—Specification.
In the absence of fraud, a patent is not void because the title is larger than the claim in the specification.

Byles, Serjt. and Corrie, appeared for the plaintiff on this demurrer.

This was an action on the case, for the infringement of the plaintiff's patent. Defendant, in his plea, set out the specification, and denied that any other was inrolled; to this plea there was a demurrer, and the question was, whether there was a discrepancy between the title of the patent and the specification. The title of the patent was for "improvements in the manufacture of plaited fabrics." The specification claimed a new mode or process in the manufacture of the fabric.

Channell, Serjt. and Webster, contended that, inasmuch as the claim was not for any improvement in the article when made, but in the process of making it, there could not be several improvements, but one only, and the title should therefore have been for an improvement and not improvements. [COLTMAN, J.—How are we to see that there is not more than one improvement?]. As the patentee has not set out various new means for the manufacture of the fabric, it must be by a combination of already known means, and a combination is something singular, whereas the title imports something plural.

The COURT said, that this case resolves itself into the one decided last Term in the Exchequer Chamber (reported in the Law T[illegible]) of Cook v. Pearce. Unless there is fraud, there cannot be any objection allowed.

to the title being larger than the claim in the specification; neither in the present did there appear any inconsistency between the title and the claim. The Court could not see that there necessarily must be no more improvements than one in the process of the manufacture. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Byles, Serjt. now consented to the rule being discharged, the verdict being entered for the plaintiff for the amount found due by the award.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

COMMON PLEAS.

Tuesday, April 30.

BOROUGH OF BRADFORD.

ALLAN, Appellant, v. WATERHOUSE, Respondent.

Delivering to the postmaster's managing clerk the duplicates and objections for the purposes of posting, stamping, and comparing under the provisions of the Registration Act, is a delivery for the purposes of the Act to the postmaster.

TINDAL, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, the objection in this case was, that documents required to be compared with others, delivered at the same time to the postmaster to be stamped, for the purposes of being made evidence, had been given into the hands of his managing clerk, and not to the postmaster himself; and the question was, whether such a delivery was a delivery into the hands of the postmaster under the 100th section of the 6 Vict. c. 18. The Court was of opinion, that the decision of the revising barrister was right. The interpretation clause, which, in some instances, contains expressions authorizing certain acts, is silent as to the office of postmaster. But the Court agree in opinion in thinking that the intention of the legislature was to authorize the servants of the postmaster acting under his authority to perform this duty. The party delivering the documents might not know the postmaster, and he would be liable to be defeated by evidence that he was not the postmaster himself but the clerk. The same difficulty would occur with other matters to be performed by the postmaster. Evidence might be given that the postmaster was absent from illness, and the duties performed by his managing clerk. It was obvious that in populous places like London, where great numbers of documents might come at the same time, compliance with the Act would be impracticable, if the eye and mind of the postmaster were indispensable, and the assistance of the clerk inadmissible. That the duties might be as well performed by a clerk as a postmaster was undeniable. It could not be said that the comparing documents was a judicial act. The receiving and stamping documents were ministerial acts of the lowest order. The Court thought, that if the legislature had intended the duty should be confined to the postmaster personally, words to that effect would have been introduced. The provisions of the Act had been substantially complied with, and the decision of the revising barrister must be affirmed.

BOROUGH OF GREENWICH.

DOBSON, Knight, v. JONES.

Where servant rents a house belonging to the master, but which he is permitted to occupy only for the more efficient discharge of the duties of his situation, there is no relation of landlord and tenant, and he will be disqualified from voting in the borough in which such house is situated.

The COURT said, that in delivering their opinion in Hughes v. The Overseers of Chatham, they laid down at some length the principle which governed that class of cases to which the appeal before them belonged. The Court drew a distinction between the case of a servant employed by the Government having a house as part remuneration for services performed, and that before them, in which places were let by the Government, and officers allowed to occupy them, with a view to the more efficient discharge of their duty. It was necessary to consider to which class of cases that appeal belonged. The appellant was a surgeon of Greenwich Hospital, and occupied a house used for the purposes of a surgery. The situation was such as was reasonably required for the duties of the office. It had been occupied for nineteen years as a surgery. The evidence before the revising barrister was, that the appellant occupied his house simply by permission of the governor of Greenwich Hospital, but required to occupy with a view to the more efficient discharge of his duties, and there was consequently no occupation with relation of landlord and tenant. The Court could not say that the revising barrister had come to a wrong conclusion in point of law, and that in that case the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist. There was no necessity for the court to consider the second question as to the payment of rates.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, April 26.

LINDUS v. CORBETT.

Semble, that in this court the time for moving for a new trial is within four days after the return of the distringas, not of the trial of the cause. Motion for a new trial, on the ground of surprise—Affidavits.

Jervis and Flood shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the defendant and for a new trial, on affidavits. They raised a preliminary objection to the rule, on the ground that although the cause was tried on the 23rd of January, the distringas was returnable on the 22nd, and as the rule was not moved for until the 27th, it was out of time. It was submitted that it ought to have been moved for on the 26th, being four days after the return of the distringas, and that the period from which the four days for moving are to be calculated, is the date of the return of the distringas, and not of the trial of the cause. It was also submitted that this being in effect a motion on the ground of surprise, the affidavits were defective for not swearing positively that the plaintiff was taken by surprise; citing Ames v. Lettice (6 M. & W. 216); Thomas v. Jones (4 M. & W. 28); Chetham v. Sturterant (13 L. J. N. S. Ex. 28); Lane v. Crockett (7 Price, 506): Kirkham v. Marter (2 B. and A. 613).

Humfrey, in support of the rule.

The COURT held, that although surprise was not stated in terms, connecting the statement in the affidavits with the learned judge's report, they could sufficiently collect it, and therefore on that ground the affidavits were sufficient; but, independently of that, they saw no reason for disturbing the verdict. With respect to the objection on the ground of the rule being moved for too late, it was unnecessary to pronounce any decided opinion; but it would be advisable, while the practice of the Court remains as at present, to move within four days of the return of the distringas, not four days after the trial of the cause. Rule discharged.

Saturday, April 27.

SMITH v. HEARD.

Where a declaration is demurred to and amended upon payment of costs, this must be considered as a withdrawal of the demurrer by the defendant, who then has two days' time to plead, and the plaintiff has no right to set the demurrer down for argument.

M. Chambers shewed cause against a rule to set aside the joinder in demurrer, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground of irregularity.

This was an action brought by the indorsee against the maker of a bill of exchange. On the 8th March, 1844, the declaration was delivered. The plaintiff demurred, and on the 23rd March a judge's order was made to amend the declaration on payment of the costs by the plaintiff. On the 17th April the costs were paid and the declaration amended; and on the 19th, two pleas were delivered by the defendant, but were returned by the plaintiff on the same day with a joinder in demurrer. The defendant returned the joinder in demurrer, and re-delivered the pleas, but on the 20th the pleas were again returned, and the joinder in demurrer again delivered, and after some correspondence between the parties, the plaintiff set the case down for argument as a demurrer to the declaration in its amended form. The present rule was to set that aside, on the ground of irregularity. It was submitted that the plaintiff was correct in so doing, because it was essential, according to the practice of this court, that the judge's order, besides ordering the amendment to be made, should also give the defendant leave to plead de novo; and that the practice of this court is different in this respect from that of the Court of Common Pleas or Queen's Bench, where it is admitted that the defendant has always two days to plead after the declaration is amended. (Lush's Practice, 387; Sellon's Practice, 454.) Therefore it was necessary for the plaintiff to set the demurrer down for argument, in order to get rid of it.

The COURT held that the payment of costs by the plaintiff, and the acceptance of them by the defendant, must be considered as a withdrawal of the demurrer by the defendant; and, therefore, the case did not fall within the rule laid down in Lush's Practice; but as the practice had been somewhat obscure, they would make the rule absolute without costs. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. BARBOUR and OTHERS v. MUNRO.

(Argued on 25th and 29th inst.)

Special case.

Where a party conveys land to a trustee upon the trusts to be declared in a deed of the following day, which is subsequently executed, and the trusts are therein declared to be for certain charitable purposes, but the first deed is unattested by two credible witnesses, the conveyance is void under the Statute of Mortmain, notwithstanding that all the requisite of the statute have been complied with as regards the second deed.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of certain lands which had been occupied by the members of the Scotch church at Manchester; and it appeared that the plaintiffs, being seized in fee of the lands in question on the 2nd and 3rd April, 1832, by lease and release, conveyed them to a person of the name of Crierrie, upon the trusts to be declared concerning the same, by a deed bearing date on the following day; and on the 4th April, 1832, Crierrie, by a deed of that date, made a declaration of trusts in favour of the Scotch church at Manchester. The latter deed was duly attested by two credible witnesses, and enrolled in the Court of Chancery within the six months, and the donors lived twelve months afterwards, as required by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 36, s. 1 (the Statute of Mortmain), but none of the requisites of the statute were complied with as regards the deeds of the 2nd and 3rd April, 1832.

Kelly (Cole with him), for the lessors of the plaintiff, submitted that the first must be considered as the deed by which property was conveyed for charitable uses, and was therefore bad for not being enrolled according to the requirements of the Mortmain Act; that the whole must be considered as one transaction, and as an evasion of the Act, and therefore void: citing Doe dem. Willard and Others v. Hawthorn (2 B. & A. 96); Doe v. Wright, (2 B. & A. 721).

Butt, for the defendant, citing Doe v. Waterton (3 B. & A. 149).

The COURT held that the lessors of the plaintiff, and not Crierrie, must be considered as the original donors; and as it was clear that the deeds of 2nd and 3rd April, 1842, were not executed in the presence of two credible witnesses, the conveyance was void under the statute; at the same time that they considered it very doubtful whether it was not also void for want of enrolment, but that it was unnecessary to decide that question.

Payn v. Burridge.

Landlord and tenant—Covenant to pay rates, taxes, assessments, and payments levied, &c. in respect of the demised premises, includes payments in respect of the premises levied under a local paving Act, although by the terms of the Act of Parliament such rates are imposed upon the landlord in the first instance.

Demurrer.—This was an action of covenant for non-payment of 50*l.* for rent, pursuant to a lease granted by the plaintiff to the defendant.

Plea.—That the said premises are situate in the county of Warwick, and within the limits of an Act of Parliament for paving and lighting the town of Leamington Priors; that the commissioners under the said Act paved, &c. certain footpaths adjoining the demised premises; that they afterwards required the defendant to pay, and he did then pay, the cost of paving, &c. the whole length of the frontage of the said demised premises, which amounted to a greater amount than the said sum of 50*l.* and then deducted and retained the same out of the said arrears of rent.

Verification.

Replication.—That the defendant held the said premises under a demise, whereby he agreed to pay the yearly rent of 100*l.* free and clear of and from all and all manner of parliamentary, parochial, and other taxes, rates, assessments, deductions, or abatements whatsoever (the land tax and landlord's property tax excepted); and that he thereby covenanted that he would, during the said term, well and truly discharge all taxes, rates, duties, levies, assessments, and payments whatever (except as aforesaid), which then were, or during the said term might be, rated, levied, assessed, or imposed upon, or payable in respect of, the said messuage and premises.

Verification.

Demurrer.—For that the money alleged to have been paid to the commissioners, as stated in the plea, is not a tax, rate, assessment, deduction, or abatement, within the meaning of the indenture.

Erle (Hayes with him), in support of the demurrer. Gale, contrà, not heard.

The Court held that, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament imposed the said rates upon the landlord in the first instance, since the defendant had taken the premises after the passing of the Act, the amount paid by the defendant must clearly be considered as an assessment or payment in respect of the said premises within the meaning of the covenant; and, therefore, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct it. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Ricketts and Another, Executors, &c. v. Weaver.

An executor of a tenant for life has a right to sue for breach of a covenant committed during his testator's lifetime, without an averment of particular damage; and therefore the action will lie by him for breach of covenant to repair premises, of which his testator was tenant for life.

Demurrer.—This was an action of covenant, and the declaration stated that in the lifetime of William Lloyd, deceased, and of Betty, his wife, a certain messuage and premises were demised to Alexander Stallard for one whole year, if the said Betty should so long live, and, at the expiration of that term, unless half a year's notice should be given, to hold from year to year. Covenant by the lessor to repair. Then followed a covenant whereby the defendant, as surety for the said Alexander Stallard, covenanted with the said Alexander Lloyd, and Betty, his wife, that in case Stallard should not perform the covenants therein contained, he, the defendant, would pay all costs, charges, damages, and expenses occasioned thereby, and would, in all respects, be liable to perform the said covenants as if he were the real and bonâ fide tenant under the said indenture. Breach in not repairing and not properly cultivating the lands, by means of which said premises the said William Lloyd in his lifetime had been put to great costs, charges, &c.

Averment of notice to the defendant.

Pleas.—1st, That before and at the time of making the said demise, the said Wm. Lloyd, and Betty, his wife, were seized in their demesne as of freehold, in right of the said Betty, and that the said Wm. Lloyd was not put to the costs, charges, &c., in the declaration mentioned.

2nd. That the said Wm. Lloyd did not request the defendant to pay the costs, charges, &c.

Demurrer.

Barstow, in support of the demurrer, submitted, first, that the action was maintainable by executors, citing Raymond v. Fitch (2 C. M. & R. 588); that this was a separate and distinct engagement on the part of the defendant that he would pay on demand; next that his liability attached on default as if he were the tenant, and that at any rate, if he were merely surety, there was an injury to the premises by reason of the want of repair.

John Henderson, contrà, submitted, in the first place, that there was no privity of contract or interest, but that it was the case of executors suing on a real covenant; that the defendant's liability was only collateral, and therefore the declaration should have averred a demand upon him to do the repairs, &c.; and next that it was not a covenant on which the executor could sue, as all injury to the personal estate of the deceased was expressly denied by the plea; citing Kingdon v. Nowle (1 M. & Sel. 355).

The Court held that an action will lie by the executor of a tenant for life without an averment of particular damage; and, therefore, that an action was maintainable by the executor of the lessor upon a covenant to repair, for breaches occurring during the testator's lifetime, according to the case of Raymond v. Fitch (2 C. M. & R. 588). Judgment for the plaintiff.

Warwick and Another v. Cox.

Award—Nominal damages.

Cole moved to set aside an arbitrator's award, on the ground of its being repugnant and inconsistent. This was an action of debt, for 300*l.* for work and labour, 200*l.* for goods sold, and 200*l.* upon an account stated.

Pleas.—1st, Except as to 35*l.* parcel, &c., never indebted; 2nd, Except as to 35*l.* parcel, &c., payment before action; and, 3rd, A general plea of set-off to the whole action. The cause and all matters in difference between the parties were referred to an arbitrator, who awarded that a verdict be entered for the plaintiff on the first issue, but without any damages; and on all the other issues for the defendant; and then awarded that there were no other matters in difference between the parties. It was submitted that the arbitrator ought to have awarded nominal damages on the first issue, citing Grout v. Glazier (1 Dowl. N.S. 58); Clement v. Lewis (3 B. & B. 297); Wood v. Duncan (7 Dowl. 91). And secondly, that the award was bad for finding for the defendant on the plea of set-off, which was general, and not confined to those causes of action only which existed at the time of the commencement of the action, excepting the said sum of 35*l.* parcel, &c.

The Court held the award good, and that it would have been idle to assess damages, because it was clear the plaintiff was not entitled to any; and thus there was no ground for a rule on the second point. Rule refused.

Hawkins moved to make a rule absolute for the payment of money upon affidavit of service at the defendant's office.

Thorp v. Plowden.—Erle moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why he should not consent to the Assistant Tithe Commissioner stating a case for the opinion of this Court, under 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46 (the Tithe Commutation Act). Rule nisi.

Mansell v. Hedgcock.—Jervis shewed cause. Hindmarsh, contrà. Rule discharged.

Dixon v. Dixon.—Watson (T. P. Thompson and H. Hill with him), shewed cause. Knowles, contrà. Rule discharged.

Reg. v. Sheriff of Carnarvon.—Jervis shewed cause. Watson, contrà. Absolute on terms.

Mayor of Bridgwater v. Allen & Others.—Elliott.—Rule calling upon the defendants to accept a feigned issue under the Tithe Commutation Act. Rule nisi.

Miard v. Marsh.—Macaulay.—To set aside a distringas. Rule nisi.

Probert v. Shepherd.—Cardwell shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and for a new trial. Crouch, contrà. Rule discharged.

Esdaile v. Lund.—Butt shewed cause.—Fitzherbert, contrà. Rule absolute.

Solomon v. Namby.—Martin, for a rule to discharge the defendant out of custody on the ground of his being in custody under an ordinary writ instead of a testatum writ. The Court refused to interfere, as it was a matter of four years' standing, and was very probably a misprision of the clerk. Rule refused.

Hulls v. Smith.—Hance shewed cause.—Fl[illegible], contrà. Settled.

Lace and Others v. Adamson.—Peacock, for defendant to pay sum of money pursuant to an award. Rule nisi.

Wilton and Another v. Snook.—Prideaux, rule to review taxation. Rule nisi.

Chiston v. Gibbs.—Kennedy shewed cause against a rule to set aside the nonsuit, and for a new trial, or for a new trial on affidavit.—Watson, contrà. Rule absolute.

Newton and Another v. Forster and Others.—Cockburn shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the defendants.—See case, ante p. 58.—Jervis, contrà, not heard. Rule absolute.

Geddis v. Stapleton.—Martin and Bovill shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial.—Butt, contrà. See the case, ante, p. 59. The rule was discharged on the ground that there having been an acceptance of part of the goods, the contract need not be shewn to have been in writing within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, and consequently a dispensation from such contract need not be in writing. Rule discharged.

BAIL COURT.

Friday, April 26.

(Before Mr. Justice Coleridge.)

Re Thomas Walker.

Motion to strike an attorney who has been found guilty of forgery off the roll.

Wortley, Q. C. moved to strike the above party off the roll of attorneys.

It appeared, that at the last assizes for Yorkshire this person, who has been an attorney since 1836, was indicted on a charge of forging an interim order out of the Court of Bankruptcy, and that on his arraignment he pleaded guilty, whereupon he was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in the gaol of Wakefield; where he still remains. Rule granted.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

Reg. v. The Justices of Ripon.—Martin, Q. C. moved for a certiorari to remove an order of affiliation into this court, with the view to its being quashed, on the ground that the applicant required the justices to refer the subject to the quarter-sessions, which they refused to do; and on other minor grounds. Rule nisi.

Reg. v. Blake and Others.—Humfrey moved for a certiorari to remove this indictment into this court. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, April 27.

Reg. v. The Justices of Norfolk.

Mandamus to justices compelling them to make an order on guardians for the costs of resisting an unsuccessful application for an order of affiliation.

justices to make an order on the guardians of the Aylesham union for the payment to one Sheppard of the sum of 17l. being the costs of resisting an order of affiliation.

On the hearing of the case by the justices, the present applicant called upon the overseers to shew that the notice was signed by a majority of the guardians, which they were unable to do, whereupon nothing further was done, and the justices refused to make an order for the applicant's costs. (Reg. v. The Recorder of Exeter, 13 L. J. N. S. M. C. 7).

REG. v. BLAKE and OTHERS.

Certiorari to remove an indictment.

Humfrey moved on a former day (Friday) for a certiorari to remove this indictment (which had been found against the defendant at the Central Criminal Court for a conspiracy to import goods into England without paying the duties) into this court. He now renewed his motion; and he sought the removal, on the ground that many nice points of law would be likely to arise, and that the case was not of a class which at the Central Criminal Court would be taken before one of the judges, &c. Rule granted.

WILLIAMS v. MUNN.

V. Lee moved to set aside the writ of summons herein and all subsequent proceedings under the following circumstances:—The defendant, who resided in Kent, was served with a copy of a writ purporting to have been issued by an attorney of Clifford's-inn, London who, when he was applied to, denied all knowledge of it. Rule nisi.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

SHOWLER v. STOAKES and ANOTHER.—T. W. Saunders moved to discharge the rule herein, making a judge's order for the payment of costs of setting aside a judgment a rule of Court, on the ground that the costs had been paid long prior to the rule having been obtained. Rule nisi.

PITCHER v. MOFFATT.

Where judgment of non pros. is signed, quære, has the defendant a right to levy for the officer's poundage, &c.?

Charnock moved for a rule to set aside the fi. fa. issued herein against the plaintiff, with costs, for irregularity, and for the return to the plaintiff of the sum of 2l. 10s. 6d. part of a sum of 5l. 19s. 6d. illegally levied on the plaintiff's goods.

It appeared that the defendant had signed judgment of non pros. against the plaintiff for not declaring, and issued a fi. fa. which was tested the 18th of April, and indorsed as of the 17th; and the writ was to levy 3l. 9s. (the costs of the non pros.) and 10s. 6d. the costs of the writ, besides, &c. Upon this writ the officer levied 5l. 19s. 6d. the excess over the 3l. 9s. being for the costs of the writ and the poundage, &c. The sum thus levied was paid under protest by the plaintiff, on whose behalf it was now contended that the writ was irregular, because it appeared by the indorsement to have been tested after it was issued. It was also argued that the sheriff had no right on a judgment of non pros. to levy more than the taxed costs—viz. 3l. 9s.; and that the acount claimed for the cost of the writ and poundage, &c.—viz. 2l. 10s. 6d. (making together 5l. 19s 6d. the amount of the levy)—was unauthorized and illegal; that the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 5, refers only to the levying of poundage fees, &c. in cases where the execution is issued at the instance of the plaintiff, and not to executions by a defendant; and that, therefore, the levying of poundage fees and expenses in this case was unlawful. (Chitty's Archbold, title Non Pros.; Baker v. Sydee, 7 Taunt. 180; 2 Chitty's Rep. 353; Hullock's Law of Costs, 654.) Rule nisi.

PRYOR and ANOTHER v. SWAYNE.

Setting aside warrant of attorney—No sufficient appointment of an attorney by defendant.

Chambers, on a former day, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Fitzherbert, for setting aside the warrant of attorney in this case, on the ground that there had been no attorney present at the time of the execution by the defendant duly nominated by him, according to the provisions of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

The affidavits were of a conflicting nature; but his lordship thought that it was sufficiently clear that the attorney who, in fact, attested the execution was merely the London agent of the plaintiff's attorney in the country, and was, in fact, merely, acting for him; and he therefore ordered the (See 3 Law T. 61.) Rule to be made absolute.

ADAMS v. JAMES.

Where an action is brought for a sum not exceeding 20l. but the judgment, by the addition of interest, is signed for more, the defendant is not entitled to his discharge under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123.

Thomas moved to discharge the defendant out of custody under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123.

Gray, contra.—The action was brought to recover 20l. on a bill of exchange; but the judgment was for 20l. 5s. 5d. being the amount of the bill and interest. (Cooper v. Bliss, 2 Dowl. 749.)

COLERIDGE, J.—It is clear that the debt exceeds 20l.; the interest forms a part of the debt itself.

Rule discharged, with costs.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

TAYLOR v. POWELL.—Whitehurst moved for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, the action having been brought within the jurisdiction of the Birmingham Court of Requests. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE TOWN COUNCIL OF STAMFORD.—COLERIDGE, J. in this case, which was moved April 17 (see 3 Law T. 40), gave the applicant leave to take a rule. Rule nisi.

Ex parte NEWENS.—Robinson moved, on an affidavit of service of a notice on the committing magistrate and the prosecutrix of the habeas corpus, having been obtained in this case, and on the return, that the applicant might be admitted to bail.

Admitted to bail accordingly.

MAJOR v. ———.—Gray moved that 12l. paid into court in this case, which was an interpleader rule, should be paid out to the plaintiff, who had obtained the verdict, and that the defendant should pay the costs of the issue. Rule nisi.

JACKSON v. SEAGER.—Ball moved for an attachment against defendant's attorney, for not appearing at the trial, on the part of the plaintiff, pursuant to his subpœna duces tecum. Rule nisi.

BANNERCLOUGH v. BRAGUE.—Mazzinghi shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pickering, for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial. It appeared that the default in not trying was in consequence of a mutual arrangement between the parties. Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES of CORNWALL.

Certiorari to remove order of justices made under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40 (the Lunatic Paupers Act).

M. Smith moved for a certiorari, to remove an order of justices made in relation to the settlement of a lunatic pauper.

The order in question was made under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, ss. 38, 40, 41, & 42; and it was objected that the order was bad, 1st, because it directed the expenses to be paid to the overseers, and not to the county treasurer; 2ndly, that it directed a weekly payment of 5s. 6d. whereas the 38th section invests the visiting justices only with the power of fixing from time to time upon the weekly payments. Several other minor objections were urged to the order. Rule nisi.

HOPKINS v. LEE.

Where a judge's order provides for the payment of costs, the costs may be taxed, and the Master's allocatur may be annexed to the order, which may then be made a rule of Court.

Arnould applied to make a judge's order, with the Master's allocatur for the costs annexed thereto, a rule of Court.

This case had been set down for trial at the last Kingston assizes, when, on the application of the defendant, he was allowed to add a plea, on payment of costs. The cause was tried, and the costs of adding the plea were subsequently taxed and demanded. The only question was, whether the order and allocatur together could be made a rule.

The COURT thought this a proper course, and

MAUGHAM v. JEFFREY.

It is irregular to date pleadings on a day different to that on which they are delivered. (R. H. T. 4 Wm. 4.)

Ball moved to set aside the declaration herein with costs, for irregularity, the declaration bearing date Saturday, the 27th, and not having been delivered until Monday the 29th inst. contrary to the rule of Court (R. H. T. 4 Wm. 4, rule 1), which provides, that every pleading, as well as the declaration, shall be entitled of the day of the month and year when the same was pleaded, and shall bear no other time or date, &c. MOSTYN v. HALL.

In moving to enlarge a peremptory undertaking, the affidavit will not be sufficient, if it merely state that the delay took place in consequence of the absence of material witnesses, for whom search had been made, but not stating when or where the search had been made.

Fortescue shewed cause against a rule obtained by Overend, to enlarge a peremptory undertaking.

The affidavit upon which the rule was obtained merely set out as an excuse, that the plaintiff was unable to go to trial, in consequence of the absence of material witnesses, for whom inquiries had been made; but it did not state when or where the inquiries had been made, nor even that the cause had been set down for trial.

COLERIDGE, J. thought the excuse insufficient; and the defendant not consenting to another peremptory undertaking, the rule to enlarge was Discharged.

DITCH v. DITCH.—Ballantine moved to set aside the warrant of attorney, and all proceedings thereon, on the ground of fraud. Cur. adv. vult.

BEART v. BROWN.—Prideaux moved to set aside the trial, which was had herein before the sheriff, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, on the ground that it was had in the absence of the defendant, the notice of trial to him stating that the cause would be tried at 11 o'clock, and he having been at the sheriff's office a few minutes before that hour, when he found that it had already been disposed of.

Ex parte ELLEN GRIFFIN.

Application for a habeas corpus to bring up a person committed under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3 (Master and Servants Act), in order that she may be discharged.

Jervis, Q.C., moved for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of the applicant, who is now in confinement in the house of correction for Carnarvonshire.

The applicant had been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3 (the Master and Servants Act), and it was objected,

First, that it did not appear that the applicant was within the statute, it being stated in the warrant that she contracted to serve as "dairymaid," which is not one of the classes of servants mentioned in the Act (Kitchen v. Shaw, 1 Nev. & Perry, 791).

Second, that the magistrates issued a summons for the appearance of the applicant, and, on her non-appearance, adjudicated in her absence, whereas the Act only authorizes a warrant to be issued.

Third, that the complaint was made before one magistrate and the hearing before two others, the first not being present. (Jones v. Gurdon, 11 L. J. M. C. 45.)

Fourth, that it does not appear that the applicant ever entered into the service of the master.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF CUMBERLAND.

Certiorari to bring up orders of justices constituting townships, under 13 & 14 Car. 2, s. 21, the same having been made unjustifiably.

Watson, Q. C. moved for a certiorari to remove certain orders of the above justices, with the view to their being quashed. It appeared that the parish of St. Cuthbert, Carlisle, had originally consisted of four quarters, one of which was situated within the city of Carlisle, and was called English street quarter, and the three others were without the city. Originally, each quarter maintained its own poor, but at some time prior to 1758, the three out-quarters were united, so that whilst the city quarter maintained its poor distinct from the others, the three out-quarters had their poor also under one management. In 1809, it was agreed that there should be one common poor-house for all the four quarters, but that there should still be separate overseers and distinct accounts. Recently the justices have divided this parish into eight townships, and have appointed overseers for each. It was now contended that this division of the parish into townships was unwarranted, since such division could only be made in cases where, in the language of the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 21, by reason of the largeness of the parish, the inhabitants cannot reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which was not the case here, the poor having been efficiently provided for under the previous arrangements. (Reg. v. Palmer, 8 East, 416; Reg. v. Watson, 7 East, 214.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF WESTMORLAND.

Certiorari to remove order of sessions, no jurisdiction appearing upon its face.

Pashley moved for a certiorari to remove an order of sessions, with a view to quashing the same for want of jurisdiction, it not appearing on the face of the order that the respondent parish was within the county. Rule granted.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

Ex parte RICHARD ANDREWS.—Miller moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the above party, who is now in Warwick gaol on a charge of murder (a true bill having been found), in order that he might be admitted to bail. Cur. adv. vult.

TOW v. HOLE.

Motion for judgment non obstante veredicto.

Wood moved for a rule for judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto on the third issue, or for a new trial on the ground that the verdict on the third plea was against evidence. The action was in debt, and the declaration contained two counts, one for goods sold and delivered, and the other on an account stated. To this the defendant pleaded, 1st. never indebted; 2nd. payment; 3rd. a special plea to the effect that defendant gave to one James Hole, as his agent, the sum of 15*l*. to pay to plaintiff in discharge of so much of the debt, of which the plaintiff had notice, and then had the option of being paid such sum; that before the commencement of this suit it was agreed between the plaintiff and James Hole, that the said J. H. should retain the said sum in his hands for his accommodation; that James Hole became insolvent, whereby the said sum was lost to the defendant, and that he had no notice of the said arrangement, or that the said J. H. had not paid the amount to the plaintiff. Issue was taken on each plea. At the trial before the under-sheriff of Rutlandshire, the jury found for the plaintiff on the two first issues, and for the defendant on the last. It was now sought to have a verdict entered for the plaintiff on the third issue non obstante veredicto, on the ground that the plea was no legal denial of the plaintiff's right of action; that it was neither a good plea in accord and satisfaction, nor of payment; that there was no substituted liability, inasmuch as the parties never consented; and that here the defendant admits that he was in ignorance of the arrangement, and that he received no discharge from the plaintiff; independently of which the plea does not aver that the plaintiff accepted the liability of J. H. Thomas v. Shillibeer (1 M. & W. 124); ——— v. Barber (1 Lord Raymond, 450). The rule was also moved as against evidence. Rule nisi.

REG. v. The LORD MAYOR and COURT OF ALDERMEN OF LONDON, ex parte, WILLIAM HENRY ASHURST.

Application for a mandamus to compel the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to admit an attorney of the Courts of Westminster to practise in the Lord Mayor's Court.

Hill, Q.C. (with whom was Pulling), moved for a rule calling upon the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen of London, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to admit Mr. W. H. Ashurst (who is an attorney of this court) to practise as an attorney of the Lord Mayor's Court. It appeared, that hitherto the number of attorneys, practising in the above Court, has been limited to four; but owing to the passing of the Attorney and Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, Mr. Ashurst has considered himself, in common with the rest of his profession, equally entitled to the right of practising there. This right is claimed by virtue of the provision of the 27th section of the above Act, which enacts, that "every person who shall have been duly admitted an attorney of any one of the superior Courts of law at Westminster, shall be entitled upon the production of his admission therein, or an official certificate thereof, and that the same still continues in force, to be admitted as an attorney in any other of the said Courts, or in any inferior Court of law in England and Wales, upon signing the roll of such other Court, but not otherwise; and shall thereupon be entitled to practise as an attorney therein in like manner, as if he had been sworn in and admitted an attorney of such Court," &c. Upon Mr. Ashurst presenting himself before the Lord Mayor with the view of being admitted, it was considered to be doubtful whether this section of the Act applied, inasmuch as the Act contains no clause of compensation to the present attorneys practising in the Court; and as there is in that Court no roll of attorneys. Against these objections, it was argued that the absence of any provision for compensation, could not affect a clear and unambiguous enactment; that the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 119, contains a somewhat similar provision without compensation; and that the difficulty of there being no roll could easily be supplied by an application to a law stationer. The Lord Mayor thought there was so much doubt in the case, and that it was one of such importance, as to justify the taking of the opinion upon it of the Court of Queen's Bench, and he suggested therefore this application. Rule nisi.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DEBTORS AND CREDITORS BILL.

TUESDAY, April 30.—Lord COTTENHAM, in moving the second reading of his bill for amending the relations of creditors and debtors, explained that its object was to extend the remedy which had been applied in 1838 to executions on mesne process, and to release debtors from imprisonment in any shape. The bill was founded upon reports, the one made in 1832, and the other in 1840, to which the names of almost every person whose position entitled his opinion to especial attention were affixed and who, although in each case dissenting upon other points, unanimously agreed in the recommendations which were embodied in the Bill. He described from these reports the utter ruin, in morals as well as estate, which imprisonment brought upon the debtor and his family, and shewed also, upon the same authority, that this evil, to which about 5,000 persons per annum were subjected, was not necessary as a protection to the commercial interest. He then entered into a review of the legislation upon the subject down to the act by which arrest upon mesne process had been abolished, exposing the inconsistency of the bankrupt and insolvent laws, and contending that imprisonment, while inflicting great and most unjust cruelty upon the debtor, had entirely failed as a safeguard to the creditor. Under the proposed bill the debtor would be compelled to give up his property for the benefit of those to whom he was indebted, and would receive as a compensating boon an immunity from imprisonment. The distinction of the law between bankruptcy and insolvency would be removed, and the punishment of fraudulent debtors would be left to the ordinary tribunals, by which the contracting debts without a prospect of paying them would be treated as a substantive offence for the consideration of a jury.—The LORD CHANCELLOR highly approved the measure, and promised it his cordial support.—LORD BROUGHAM, the DUKE OF RICHMOND, LORD DENMAN, and LORD CAMPBELL, severally expressed their approbation of the Bill, which was accordingly read a second time.

BAIL IN ERROR BILL.

THURSDAY, May 2.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the committal of this Bill, which was opposed by the Lord Chancellor, on the ground that it was directed if not intentionally, at all events most effectually, to apply to the proceedings now going on in the courts of law in the sister kingdom. He, therefore, moved as an amendment that the Bill be committed that day six months.—Lord BROUGHAM also opposed the Bill on the same ground.—After some observations from Lord Cottenham, the Earl of Wicklow, and the Marquis of Clanricarde, Lord Campbell replied, and the amendment was agreed to without a division.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MASTERS AND SERVANTS BILL.

WEDNESDAY, May 1.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE rose to resist the principle of the measure. Its clauses had undergone so much alteration up to the present stage, that it could hardly be said to be the same bill as that which had been read a first and second time; and he now moved that it should be committed on that day six months.—Mr. HUME agreed with Mr. T. Duncombe that this was substantially a different Bill from the Bill which had been introduced under the same name.—Sir J. GRAHAM assured the House that the object of his earnest desire was the real welfare of the working classes, and that it was for the sake of their interest alone that he had given, in a limited extent, his sanction to it. By the existing law, a single magistrate might, on the master's complaint, cause the servant to be apprehended by warrant, and imprisoned during three months, for any one of very many small offences; while the servant had no such reciprocal remedy against the master. He had thought it, therefore, desirable to have a Bill which should redress the balance; and the present Bill gave a power to the magistrate of making an order for wages upon the master, commuted the warrant into a summons, and reduced the imprisonment from three months to two. The only new enactment now proposed as against the labourer was the extension of the remedy to job and piece work. On this point he had not definitely made up his mind, and he thought it a very fair subject for debate.—Mr. MILES, one of the authors of the Bill as originally introduced, professed himself a little puzzled, after what he had heard, to know whether the present Bill was really his or not; but he believed that as it was now shaped, it did not materially differ from what he had proposed. He begged the House to observe what was the existing law, and what this Bill proposed to make the law, and then pronounce whether this Bill was not a great improvement upon the law as it existed. He should gladly see the measure improved in a committee of the whole House, but he wholly objected to a committee above stairs.—Mr. BERNAL thought that this ought to have been entirely a Government measure, and that every clause of it ought to have been maturely considered by the law officers. The present juncture, when the public mind was so much agitated upon the factory question, was no time to introduce a law affecting all the operatives in England.—Mr. B. ESCOTT argued, that the badness of the existing law, though a very good reason for repealing that law, formed no reason at all for introducing the new code comprehended in this extensive Bill.—Sir G. STRICKLAND opposed the Bill as a measure of tyranny and oppression against the working men. It was for the servants, not for the masters, that the law's interposition was wanted; the natural odds were fearfully great against the servants.

On the division, the numbers were—

THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

TUESDAY, April 29th.—Mr. R. SCOTT asked whether it was intended to appoint a taxing officer to the Court of Bankruptcy?—SIR J. GRAHAM said it was the intention of his noble and learned friend on the woolsack to introduce a clause in a Bill now before the other house to enable the Lord Chancellor to appoint a taxing officer.

THE REPRESENTATION OF WOODSTOCK.—We state from authority that the following are the correct circumstances of Mr. Thesiger's connection with the borough of Woodstock:—Upon the accession of the present Duke of Marlborough to the title in 1840, his grace, unsolicited, and of his own free will, tendered to the honourable gentleman his interest in the borough, with a promise of undisturbed possession until the Marquis of Blandford should attain his majority. The Marquis of Blandford came of age some eleven months ago, notwithstanding which Mr. Thesiger has never been called upon to fulfil his engagement. A vacancy occurring, by reason of the honourable gentleman's appointment to the office of Solicitor-General, the Marquis of Blandford naturally offers himself to fill the vacant seat; and such proceedings, therefore, ought neither to have been unexpected by, nor a surprise or disappointment to, her Majesty's Government, or the honourable gentleman himself.—Standard.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM, 1844.

Wednesday, May 1.

REG. v. WIGGENHALL ST. GERMAINS.

Where commissioners under a local Act make a road within a reasonable distance of a river, along the bank of which it is to run, the parishes in which it lies are not exempted from repairing it, because it deviates from the exact line directed, the termini being the same; and whether it follow the line or not, where the road is completed, and has been dedicated to, and used by the public, they are compellable to repair it.

INDICTMENT against the inhabitants of parish of Wiggenhall St. Germains, for not repairing a high-way, situate in Bedford Level in the county of Norfolk. On the trial, the verdict was found for the Crown, subject to a special case, by which the following facts appeared:—

The road is part of a line of road originally formed by certain commissioners for drainage, acting in the execution of certain local Acts of Parliament—35 Geo. 3, c. 77, and [illegible].

In 1822, the commissioners, [illegible] in pursuance of the provisions of the Acts, formed and made a line of road which runs partly through the said parish. It did not exceed the breadth of thirty feet, and commenced at the south-west end of a certain dam; but it was not formed along the west side of the river bank, to the said road leading to Bentley's, and from thence to the said turnpike (as directed by the Acts): nor had any such line of road been set out; but the said line was made by the said commissioners in a straight line from the south-west end of the said dam to the said turnpike, in such a direction that it was in one part eighty-eight yards, and in another ninety-six, from the west side of the said river bank. It has been constantly used by the occupiers of two houses, from which it is the only road to St. Germains, and also by other people occasionally. It has been repaired by the parish at an expense of 20s. to 30s. down to 1835, since when they have refused to repair it.

Platt, Q. C. (with whom was O'Malley), for the Crown.—It is a question of law, whether the road should go along the bank or not, and whether the Act is sufficiently observed. The case for the defendants is, that we should have gone along the arc instead of the chord. But the road made is, in substance, the road contemplated by the Act of 59 Geo. 3, c. 79, which is to run from the south-west end of the upper dam named in the Act, along the west side of the river in a southerly direction, to a road running from a house called Bentley's, and thence to the turnpike-road leading from King's Lynn to Wisbeach. The road was not meant to go literally according to the Act. In effect, it does so. The commissioners took the most convenient route between the termini as nearly in a straight line as consistent with the Acts. It was opened to the public in 1822, and has remained so and been used by the occupiers of two houses and other persons ever since. This case is distinguishable from those of Rex v. Edge Lane (4 Ad. & Ell. 723), Rex v. Cumberworth (3 Barn. & Ad. 113), and Rex v. Cumberworth (4 Ad. & Ell. 731), because there the roads in question had never been completed; and, on that ground, the parishes were exempted from liability to repair them. In this case the road is completed to the full intent of the commissioners; and it has been dedicated by the owners to the public, and accepted and adopted by them. This would suffice if the road were wholly different to that directed to be made by the Act. The Act 35 Geo. 3, s. 21, enacts that the commissioners "shall make, erect, and support" certain bridges, sluices, gates, &c.; but different language is used as to the repair of the roads and the bridges. After stating it shall be lawful to make, set out, and repair a road, &c. the 39th section expressly enacts that the bridge when built is not to be assessed to the county rate; intending to save it from the portion of the repairs to which it would otherwise be liable in respect of the bridge.

A parish, by its own act, may be made liable to repair a road, even when given up by an individual; still more so when formed for the public by the express Act of the Legislature. The inhabitants have repaired this bridge for thirteen years after its formation, and this must be referred to their persuasion that it was a highway. The road is the road directed by the Act, and if it is not, the parish have made it so by their adoption.

Kelly, Q. C. (with whom was N. Palmer), contrà, contended that the Court were precluded from considering whether the Act was fulfilled by the finding of the jury, as stated in the case. The 59 Geo. 3 must govern this case. There are no materials for the decision of the Court, which must be guided by the evidence of the facts. It is found by the jury that the road was not that which the Act directed. It should have been made along the west bank of the river, and it was not to exceed thirty feet in width. These were facts for the jury. It was made in a straight line from the south-west side of the dam to the turnpike-road, so as not to meet or join any part of the road from Bentley's house to the turnpike-road, except where they both fall into the latter. [PATTESON, J.—The termini are the same.] It is not contended that that suffices. They have not made the entire road, which is a condition precedent to the liability to repair, and thus the case falls within the cases cited for the Crown. The consideration which induced the landowners to consent to the road through their lands is entire and not divisible. (Rex v. Cumberworth, 3 Barn. & Adol. 112, per Littledale, J.) There is no security for the continuance of this road. The land may belong to an infant or a lunatic. There may be an outstanding term; and the reversioner, not being bound by the Act, may stop the road. There must be not only acceptance on one side, but dedication by a known owner on the other. (R. v. Edmonton, 1 Moo. & Rob. 24.) This road has no legal existence. The repairs by the parish may have been done to serve a temporary purpose, or to employ the poor.

Platt, in reply.—The parish might have come into court and enforced the making of the road properly; instead of which they repair it for 13 years, and thus adopt it. The extent of its utility and the amount of the repairs are immaterial.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I cannot help observing that this case comes before us in a very inconvenient mode. There are three inconsistent Acts of Parliament and maps which decide the case for us. I do not know that we should give an opinion whether the road is completed or not according to the Act. Be this as it may, there are other facts which make the parish liable to repair this road. In this case, that which the commissioners intended to do has been done; nothing is left incomplete. It does not appear that the parish ever applied to have any other line made, or objected to that which the commissioners had adopted. Parishes are ready enough to cast off burthens, when not bound to bear them; but here, well knowing the facts, they acquiesced in what was done, and actually repaired the road during a period of upwards of 13 years. The owners of the land received compensation for it, and also acquiesced in the use made of the road. This, I think, is sufficient evidence of dedication; for we have no right to infer that they are infants or lunatics, and they cannot be deemed to have been ignorant of what was going on. They could not complain that there was no dedication. The commissioners appear to have done what was best for the public. There was acquiescence and dedication by the owners, and adoption by the parish. This, I think, clearly suffices and that the parish must repair the road.

PATTESON, J.—It seems to me that we are precluded from determining whether the Parliamentary line has been pursued. I am inclined, however, to think it has; but that is not the question. In all the cases referred to, the road had not been wholly made; here it has. I do not wish to see the principle of those cases extended. The termini a quo and ad quem have been observed. All persons, except in Bentley's house, may pass along it as it was intended they should. The parish appears to have uniformly repaired the road; and although the repairs may not have exceeded 30s. the amount is not material. There is evidence of a dedication by the owners, and acceptance by the parish.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion as to the first point, but I doubt whether we are bound at all by the statement of a case so confused, and having reference to so many maps. I think the Act must receive a liberal construction; and that the road need not keep close by the side of the bank of the river and follow all its windings and turnings. It did keep on the prescribed side of the river, and within a reasonable distance of it. If a jury had found it had thus fulfilled the requirements of the Act, no court would have disturbed their verdict. The cases cited do not apply to a road which is complete. But our decision may be safely rested on the dedication, and on the admission by the parish, by whom this road was for a series of years adopted. Is there not ample evidence also, both by length of time, and by the compensation accepted by the owners, to rebut the presumption that there existed any disability of the owners to dedicate the land, which has been suggested as possible? We think, therefore, that the verdict ought to stand.

Judgment for the Crown.

REG. v. ST. OLAVE'S, SOUTHWARK.

Settlement by payment of rates—Insufficiency of statement of payment of rates—Certiorari need not precisely describe the order.

Upon appeal, founded on a subsequent settlement, against an order of removal of James Walker, a pauper, from St. Olave's, Southwark, to St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, the Court of Quarter Session for the county of Surrey quashed the order, subject to a case as to the sufficiency of the statement of the grounds of appeal, of which the following is the material part:—

"James Walker, in or about the month of May 1821, became tenant of a house situate in Fore-street, in the parish of St. Clements, in the town or Borough of Ipswich, in the county of Suffolk, and hired the same of a Mr. Garrard, at the yearly rent of 15*l.* and occupied and resided therein for upwards of seven months, and paid one or more of the parochial rates or taxes in respect of the said house, so situate in Fore-street, in the said parish of St. Clements."

Wallinger, for the respondents, contended, first, that the certiorari had improperly described the record as an order made on appeal by inhabitants against inhabitants, whilst the return states the order to be founded on an appeal by the "churchwardens and overseers" of the parish of, &c. Inhabitants cannot appeal. The parish officers are the proper parties to do so. (R. v. Colbeck, 12 Ad. & Ell. 161.) Where the certiorari improperly describes the document to be removed, it may be quashed. (R. v Plint, 2 Lord Raym. 820.)

Montague Chambers (with whom was Corner), for the appellants.—It is too late to object to the certiorari when the case comes on to be heard. (R. v. Fordham, Law Journ. 1829.)

By the COURT.—It is the invariable practice, and it cannot be called a variance so to describe the order.

Wallinger, in support of the order. It is sufficiently stated that the pauper paid the rates; for where it does not appear that another person paid the rates, the presumption is, that the tenant paid them. It is not necessary that the party's name should be on the rate. (2 Salk. 478.) In R. v. Edgebaston, 6 Term Rep. 540, it distinctly appeared that another person was rated.

COLERIDGE, J.—How does it appear here that any rates were paid whilst the tenant was in occupation? Order quashed.

M. Chambers and Corner, for the appellants, were not called upon.

Thursday, May 2.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE, re NEWTON.

Certiorari.—The Court of Queen's Bench will remove an indictment after it has been quashed by an order of quarter sessions.

Greaves shewed cause against a certiorari obtained by Augustus Newton, who had preferred an indictment at the Gloucestershire sessions, against certain parties for forcible entry, riot, and assault. It came on for trial at the last sessions. The certiorari was to remove the indictment, and all the proceedings thereon. Greaves contended that whatever the sessions had done, right or wrong, amounted to a judgment, and, at this stage of the proceedings, could only be removed by writ of error, and not by certiorari. (2 Haw. P. C. c. 27, s. 31; Croke Jac. 101; Lang's case, Cro Eliz. 539; R. v. Jackson, 6 T. R. 145; R. v. Pennygood, 1 Barn. & Cr. 142.)

The sessions have power to quash an indictment. (R. v. Norton, 8 Car. & P.; Rookwood's case, 4 State Trial, 673; Frith's case, 1 Leach, 10; R. v. Wheaton, 2 Bur. 1,125; R. v. Young, 3 T. R. 106.)

The sessions had full authority to quash the indictment in this particular case, there being several defendants charged in different counts. In the first, eleven defendants; and in the other counts, a smaller number of the same defendants. (Rex v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.)

Keating appeared for the justices, to express their concurrence in whatever the Court might decide. Their chairman had been served by Mr. Newton in person with the rule nisi, in full court of quarter sessions, as Mr. Newton stated, at the special suggestion of the Lord Chief Justice.

Newton contended against the power of the justices to quash an indictment. He stated the object of his bringing up the indictment to be, that if it was brought before their lordships and appeared to have been quashed by an order which was itself a nullity; it might be sent down for trial as a good indictment. He cited R. v. Hampshire (9 Dowl. 171); Reg v. Taylor (9 Dowl. 600); Reg. v. West Riding (5 Term Rep. 629).

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It seems to the Court that the rule should be made absolute. If there is a regular judgment to quash the indictment, then the prosecutor has a right to bring his writ of error on that judgment. If it is only an order made by the quarter sessions, we ought to see what it is.

Rule absolute.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—The Congregational Church, situated in John-street, in the parish of Royston, in the county of Hertford, and in the district of Royston and Buntingford. The Independent Chapel, situated in the parish of Spalding, in the county of Lincoln, in the district of the Spalding union. The Baptist Chapel, situated at Crockerton, in the parish of Sutton Veny, in the county of Wilts, in the district of the Warminster union.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

By aid of the Supplement we are enabled to present to our readers an extraordinary mass of Reports, such as was never before given to the Profession at the same price. Many of the cases are extremely interesting, and will reward attentive perusal. It is said that the Northern Circuit is about to be divided, the business being more than the judges can accomplish. Yorkshire is to be added to the Midland Circuit. This change will occasion great perplexity at the Bar, but it is inevitable.

It is not yet known who is to be the new Commissioner of Bankrupts. Mr. Commissioner Goulburn will probably be removed from Exeter to London: the country vacancy will not improbably be filled by Sir David Pollock, the present Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, whose office is to be abolished by the pending measure relating to the Law of Debtor and Creditor. We are glad to learn that the health of the Attorney-General is improving.

Since the above was written, we have received the report of the very important motion made on Friday in the Bail Court, in the case of Reg. v. The Lord Mayor, in which the question is raised whether, by the Attorneys Act, the Mayor's Court and the Palace Court, at present closed against the Profession generally, are not thro n open to all Attorneys. It will be seen that a rule nisi has been granted, and the argument appeared to be entirely with the movers. We shall watch and report the progress of this most important case with the attention it deserves.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

NEW ORDER IN LUNACY.

A new order of the Lord Chancellor has just been issued of considerable importance to the legal profession and to the committees and receiver of lunatics' estates. It proceeds to state that, "Whereas it is important to enforce the passing of the accounts of the committees and receivers of lunatics' estates, and the payment of the balances due thereon, and, whereas the estates of lunatics may be placed in jeopardy by reason of the sureties for the committees and receivers dying, or being declared bankrupt or insolvent; it is ordered that the Commissioners in Lunacy shall, jointly or severally, from time to time, fix the times within which all committees and receivers in the matters in their offices, shall annually or at such longer or shorter periods as may to such commissioners or commissioner seem proper, procure their accounts to be delivered into the commissioners' office; and that all committees and receivers shall, after their accounts shall have been delivered into the commissioners' office, procure them to be proceeded on, examined, and settled, at or within such times as the commissioners may jointly or severally, from time to time, direct; and that the commissioners shall, jointly or severally, also fix the times within which such committees and receivers shall pay the balances which shall appear due on passing such accounts, or such parts thereof as the commissioners, jointly or severally, shall certify to be proper to be paid by such committees and receiver, and also, when it shall to such commissioners or commissioner seem proper, the time within which such committees and receivers shall cause to be laid out such balances, and any sum of dividends or cash at the Bank, to which the lunatic respectively may be then entitled; and that with respect to such committees and receivers as shall make default in any of the matters aforesaid, that the commissioners shall jointly or severally, from time to time, if good cause be not shewn to such commissioners or commissioner to the contrary, not only disallow the salaries (if any) claimed by such committee or receivers, or their representatives, but also charge them with interest, after the rate of five per cent. per annum upon any balance, dividends or cash, during the time the same respectively shall appear to have improperly remained in hand or uninvested, as the case may be. And that any committee and receiver in any matter in lunacy shall, on each occasion of passing his accounts, or at such other times as the commissioners may jointly or severally appoint in that behalf, satisfy the commissioners or commissioner, by affidavit or otherwise, that the sureties of such committee or receiver are living, and have not been declared bankrupt or insolvent; and, if it shall appear to the commissioners or commissioner that any surety of such committee or receiver is not living, or has been declared bankrupt or insolvent, then that such commissioners shall jointly or severally, fix the time within which such committee or receiver shall enter into fresh security as committee or receiver of the estate of such lunatic; and that in default of his doing so, the commissioners shall jointly or severally (without special order), inquire and report who is or are the most fit and proper person or persons to be appointed committee or committees, or receiver of the estate of such lunatic, in the place of such committee or receiver so making default. And that in case any committee or receiver shall at any time make default in any of the matters aforesaid, the commissioners or commissioner, when it shall to them or him seem proper, shall certify the same accordingly. "LYNDHURST."

POST-OFFICE NOTICES.

London District Post-office Notice.—On Saturday last, the 27th ult. the following notice was issued by all the district Post-offices in the metropolis:—"London District Post-office, May 1st, on and from this day, there will be ten deliveries of letters in London daily, and the despatches will be made from this office at the following times;—8, 10, and 12 in the forenoon, and at 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8 in the afternoon. By this alteration, letters for the country districts posted before 3 o'clock will be delivered the same evening, and those posted before 5, will be delivered within a circle of six miles from the General Post-office the same night. Letters for the last delivery must be posted before 6 o'clock, and this delivery includes all places within a circle of three miles from the General Post-office. N.B. Letters for the first delivery in the morning must be posted before 8 o'clock the previous night."

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

EASTER TERM—SEVENTH VICTORIA.

April 30.—The Court will, on Thursday and Friday, the 9th and 10th days of May next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business now pending in the special paper and new trial paper, and in giving judgment in cases previously argued.

By the Court.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Bunny, of Newbury, in the county of Berks, gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Gray's-Inn, May 1.—The undernamed gentlemen were this day called to the degree of barrister-at-law, by the Hon. Society of Gray's-inn:—viz. Mr. William St. James Wheelhouse, Mr. Henry Willis, Mr. Aldborough Henniker, Mr. Edward Bennett, and Mr. Samuel Dare.

Lincoln's-Inn.—Thomas Pain, jun. of Chapel-stairs, esq. second son of Thomas Pain, of Dover, Registrar of the Cinque Ports, has been called to the bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn.

The Attorney General.—We are exceedingly happy to hear that Sir William Follett is daily improving in health and strength. Acting, however, under the wishes of his professional adviser, the hon. and learned gentleman has not resumed his professional duties since his appointment to the office of Attorney-General; and it is not expected he will come down to Westminster-hall during the present term.—Standard.

The Northern Circuit.—Mr. Justice Coltman and Mr. Baron Rolfe, on their return from the Northern Circuit, which commenced on the 17th of February, and did not terminate until the 13th ult. immediately informed the Secretary for the Home Department that it was impossible for any human exertions to do justice to her Majesty's subjects on such an extensive circuit; and that, although they had sat early and rose up late, they had been obliged to leave causes untried at Durham, at York, and at Liverpool. To remedy this great evil, we understand that the Government propose to have recourse to the injudicious expedient of adding the county of York to the Midland Circuit—a measure more manifestly unjust it is impossible to imagine. The bar of the Northern Circuit have a claim in the nature of a vested interest in the district through which their labours have extended; and the fairest way to them, and the most satisfactory to the public, would be (as the barristers, silk and stuff, are sufficiently numerous) to make a division of the present circuit between them into two circuits. There would then be an average of 150 causes on each circuit, which to the bars thus formed on the new circuits would bring a profit nearly equal in amount to that which each barrister in business now receives; and in general, each of the circuits would have a greater number of causes than falls to the lot of any other circuit.—Times.

Self-Transportation.—In the Royal Court, Guernsey, on Saturday last, James Cohu, aged 19, of the Câtel, and Henry Dufour, aged 18, of the Forest Parish, were charged with having at various times feloniously entered the premises of Mrs. Caroline De Lancey, at the Grange, and stolen therefrom sums of money to the amount of 15*l.*; also a dozen of wine, as also 3s. from a dresser in the kitchen, belonging to Jane Macgregor, Mrs. De Lancey's servant. Advocates Utermarck and Falla severally stated that the prisoners were not desirous of making any defence, "but were willing to leave their country (i. e. Guernsey) for such period as the Court might think fit to order, as had been done in several previous instances." The Queen's Procureur said, that as the only proof against the prisoners was derived from Cohu's confession, which was made under a promise given by Mrs. de Lancey that he should be admitted Queen's evidence, and, considering that they were both young men against whom no complaint had been previously brought, he recommended that the Court should order Cohu to leave the island for six years and Dufour for four years. The Court, considering the above circumstances, and considering also that if the prisoners had been tried and convicted, their "punishment" would not have exceeded that which they "asked for," ordered Cohu to quit the island for five years and Dufour for four years. The two young men left gaol for Southampton, to try their luck in the convict settlement of England.

Public Debt.—An account of all additions which have been made to the annual charge of the public debt, by the interest of any loan that has been made, or annuities created, in the last ten years, has just been presented to Parliament, pursuant to the Act 27 George III. cap. 13. The following are some of the particulars of which this account puts us in possession. In the year 1834, an addition was made to the annual charge of 123,644*l.*, in respect of 4,080,000*l.*, 3 per cent Reduced Annuities; in 1835, the addition to the annual charge altogether amounted to 618,361*l.* chiefly owing to the raising of 15,000,000*l.* for the compensation to slave-owners; in 1836 the addition made to the annual charge was altogether about 157,024*l.*, in 1837 it was altogether about 51,600*l.*; in 1838 it was only 19,642*l.*; in 1839, the addition to the annual charge amounted to 180,461*l.*; in 1840 to about 16,562*l.* only; in the year 1841 it amounted altogether to 210,576*l.*; in 1842 to 36,092*l.*; and in the year 1843 the whole amount of the annual addition in question was only about 1,350*l.*

THE DEFAULTERS.

We find that the name of J. Worsley, Newport, which appeared in this list, is that of a gentleman of high respectability, who had quitted Newport for Ryde, and joined Mr. Butt there, consequently the applications had not reached him. In his new abode he has been a regular subscriber, and we were not aware of the identity.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE subscriptions for the current volume are now due, and should be paid in the course of a few days, to entitle the Subscribers to the advantages of pre-payment.

The volumes for binding may be sent by post, in parcels open at the end, accompanied with a letter, stating how they may be identified, and how the bound volume is to be returned. For prices, and further particulars, see the notice above.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

THE next statute in this series will be the County Courts Act, which will be edited by the gentleman, whose competency will be admitted when we state that he is the author of the very useful series of papers that have appeared in the LAW TIMES under the title of "Practical Notes on Statutes."

It will be uniform in shape with the Registration Act of the last session, and copiously noted and indexed.

The Ecclesiastical Courts and the Debtors and Creditors Bills will form a portion of the series, should they become laws.

TO READERS.

A SUPPLEMENT with the present number enables us to bring up a considerable portion of the heavy arrears which have been accumulating for some weeks.

We have to announce a new, and we hope valuable, feature in the LAW TIMES. It is the publication of a complete series of reports of Magistrates' and Crown Cases, by J. C. SYMONS, Esq. the author of the very excellent treatise on the Law of Settlement, which graced the columns of our last volume, and A. BITTLESTONE, Esq. These reports will be subsequently reprinted in small size, at a very trifling price, for convenience of the practitioner who may require to use them in courts of law, and at magistrates' and parochial meetings.

Arrangements have also been made for the publication of a series of lectures on Medical Jurisprudence, by an eminent Professor, who has made the subject the study of his life, and who has kindly promised to revise them for the press.

THE LAW REFORMS OF THE SESSION.

IF the passing session is to be barren of aught beside, it is to be fruitful of measures dignified with the title of Law Reform.

First comes the County Courts Bill, a maze of contradictions, absurdities, and make-shifts, creating a mass of needless patronage; burdening the country with countless salaries; clumsily accomplishing its professed object of bringing justice home to every man's door; making a new machinery, while that existing in the Quarter Sessions, at half the cost and with vastly less difficulty, might have been reformed so as to do all that the County Courts are to effect, and much that is desirable which they cannot compass; as full of blunders in the framing as the design is defective; a change without improvement, unsettling every thing and settling nothing. Among the anomalies of this wretched measure is this startling fact, that it actually establishes imprisonment for debt—for trifling debts, estimating a man's liberty at about a shilling a day at the very moment that the Legislature is engaged in passing another measure having for its object the entire abolition of imprisonment for debt! This is but one specimen of the blunders of this Bill.

And its compensations are frightful! It is impossible to calculate what the country will have to pay to officials whose present small duties will no longer be required of them.

Next, we have the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, a measure of which its authors may well be ashamed. By this the machinery of a court is set up, with largely paid judges and the attendant train of officers, for the purpose of disposing of causes which may possibly amount to an average of two in a year for each court. The objection raised against these courts was to the entire principle upon which they were founded, as being altogether opposed to the rule of religious liberty which forms the basis of modern legislation. Men protested against an ecclesiastical authority over civil matters; and how is the demand for reform met? By reconstructing and confirming the obnoxious tribunals, by creating more officers, more salaries, more power, more places, more patronage, adding compensations and consequent burdens upon the people, without effecting one solitary object for which interference was demanded by the country and recommended by the profession!

Other changes were hinted as designed by Ministers, but none of them have made their appearance, though much needed. Such were the amendment of the Law of Settlement, and the establishment of a Court of Appeal in criminal cases.

An early Bill was actually promised on the subject of Charitable Trusts. It is still in nubibus, and the measure for regulating the fees of justices' clerks, clerks of the peace, and clerks of the assize, long ago announced by the Government, has not yet seen the light.

In the House of Lords there has been a better promise and more performance. All the Law Lords, except him whose special duty it is, have been busily engaged in various departments, but with unequal results. Lord Brougham's Privy Council Bill has found little favour within, and still less without, the walls of Parliament; for it savoured strongly of jobbing; and though it contains some useful amendments of the law of divorce, it thrusts in these as a sort of screen to hide the main object—the creation of a new judgeship, with a large salary and still larger honours. It may be safely predicted that this Bill will not pass the ordeal of the Legislature.

Lord Cottenham has been more fortunate. His admirable measure for consolidating and amending the Law of Debtor and Creditor has the good fortune to please all parties, and to be passing with the solitary objection—hostility we cannot call it—of Lord Brougham, who desires to substitute for it some bantling of his own. The grand features of this great measure are, the abolition of imprisonment for debt, the facilitating of process against property, the better punishment of fraudulent debtors, and the merger of the law and jurisdiction of insolvency in that of bankruptcy; so that the absurd distinction hitherto preserved between traders and others will cease to exist.

Lord Campbell has been the parent of three measures, all commendable, but the present success of all of which is doubtful. First, he proposes a Bill for facilitating the transfer of real property, which appears to have been judiciously framed and is calculated to be of considerable benefit: next, he has a prospective proposition for suspending the judgment in misdemeanour, upon proper security given, pending a writ of error. Lastly, he introduces an extremely useful Bill to facilitate the recovery of debts from persons resident abroad; and since the necessity for some Legislative interference has become daily more and more apparent, as intercourse with other countries has been rendered more easy, it is to be hoped this measure will meet with no impediment in its progress.

There are other minor schemes floating about, some adventured by the Government, some by individual legislators, but not important enough to need distinct notice in our restricted space. We have named enough to indicate the direction of the law reforms of the session and their general characteristics, and to prepare our readers for changes which will seriously affect their professional prospects, either for good or evil. So many are they, that the practitioner will have much to learn, and still more to unlearn—the last being his most difficult lesson.

LORD ABINGER'S SEAT.

IT seems rather strange that it should have escaped all the honourable and learned members, and especially the Speaker, that in either view the son, or reputed son, of a peer ought immediately on the death of his father to be excluded from the House of Commons. If he was really the legitimate son of the deceased he becomes a peer instanter; if he was not, he was sitting in the Commons under a false qualification, and has no right to complain of the consequence of his own wrong, and his constituents have a right to re-try him under his new character.

The fact is, that the delay of the writ is often very convenient for purposes of political jobbing, and therefore excuses are framed for that which is utterly indefensible.

We believe Mr. Estcourt to be wrong as to his notion of the law of the Lords. They only investigate a descent when the matter is referred to them by the Crown; except in the case of certain Irish peerages, which, by the Act of Union, must be specially proved.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

IT will be unnecessary for persons joining this Society to do more at present than pay the entrance-fee subscription towards the preliminary expenses. The annual subscriptions will not be required until its operations have commenced. In the meanwhile, may we ask those who feel interested in its success to use their influence to procure accessions to the list of members. Only the necessary number is now needed to secure its success; and, with such a list as is already registered, it would be hard indeed if this addition cannot be made, and within a few weeks.

By way of doing something, we propose to begin forthwith with Symon's and Bittlestone's Reports of Magistrates' and Crown Cases—forming No. 1 in the list of publications. A correspondent suggests that we print these, with an annual digest of all the cases in all the courts, in book size, in parts, which might be transmitted through the post by means of the LAW TIMES' stamps. The plan appears practicable enough; but would it be approved by the members? The cost to them would be from 12s. to 15s. per annum for the Reports and Digest; being considerably less than one-half the present cost of similar information. Should the plan please, it may readily be extended.

NECROLOGY.

MR. COMMISSIONER MERIVALE.

It has been already announced that the death of this learned and talented gentleman took place under very sudden and distressing circumstances on Thursday evening, April 25, at his residence, 18, Bedford-square. The melancholy event has cast a gloom over a numerous circle of distinguished members of the bar and men of literature who have enjoyed the pleasure of his companionship. The deceased gentleman had from early life associated with the profound lawyer some of the higher acquirements of a man of letters. For a considerable period he had ranked amongst the most talented contributors to the "Edinburgh Review," and in connection with Lord Chief Justice Denman (who was his early friend and associate), the Rev. Robert Bland, and the Rev. Francis Hodgson, the Provost of Eton College, he furnished the public with the well-known and excellent "Translation from the Greek Anthology." The last effort of his pen was equally valuable to his juvenile offertory at college, and is appreciated as being the purest translation from the German of Schiller. In the latter undertaking Mr. Merivale had to contend against Lord Francis Egerton and Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer for literary laurels. In the discharge of his professional and somewhat unpleasant duties at the Bankruptcy Court, Mr. Merivale won the esteem and respect of the bar, and was universally regarded for the moderation with which he discharged the extensive powers delegated to him under the provisions of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, cap. 56. Previous to the passing of this statute, the deceased gentleman was one of the several judges in Bankruptcy, who held fourteen independent and distinct courts; and upon the new Bankruptcy Act coming into operation, in 1832, he was selected to act as one of the six commissioners, at a salary of 2,000*l.* per annum. The learned gentleman married the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Drury, head-master of Harrow School, by whom he has had eight children, and six of them are now living, viz.—four sons and two daughters. The eldest son was admitted to the Chancery bar on the 16th of November, 1832, and is Recorder of Falmouth, Helston, and Penzance. Another son is a clergyman of the Established Church, and has taken a high degree at college. By the death of the learned gentleman, a lucrative appointment is at the disposal of the present Government. At eleven o'clock on Saturday, an inquest was held by Mr. Wakley, M.P. and a respectable jury, at the Bedford Head Tavern, Tottenham-court-road, on the body of the deceased. The evidence went to prove that the deceased was in excellent health and spirits at dinner-time, and that he was seated in the dining-room reading a book, when he suddenly expired of apoplexy. Two of his daughters and Mrs. Merivale had retired to the drawing-room after dinner, and it was upon Miss Merivale going into the dining-room to request her father to join them at the tea-table, that she discovered the lifeless body of her parent, in a sitting posture, in an easy chair. The jury, after hearing the evidence of Dr. Hillier, of Gower-street, who was called in to attend the deceased, returned a verdict of "Natural Death."

SIR TIMOTHY SHELLEY, BART.

We have to announce the death of the above venerable baronet, who expired on Wednesday last at his seat in Sussex. He was son of the first baronet, and was born in 1756. In 1791 he married Miss Pinfold, daughter of Mr. Charles Pinfold, of Effingham, Surrey. On the death of his father, in 1815, he succeeded to the baronetcy. His grandson, Mr. P. Florence Shelley, inherits the family honours, being the son of Mr. Percy Bysshe Shelley, the celebrated poet, and Mary Wolstonecroft, the authoress of Frankenstein, who was daughter of William Godwin, the celebrated author of Caleb Williams. The present baronet is in his 25th year.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The funds have assumed a heavy appearance. Consols opened at 99½ to ⅝; but soon after the commencement of business the market gave way, and the price declined to 99¼, finally closing at 99⅛ to ¼. The Three per Cents. Reduced, 98⅜ to ½; the Three-and-a-Half per Cents. Reduced, 101⅜ to ⅝; New Three-and-a-Half per Cents., 102¼ to ⅜; Bank Stock, 196½ to 7½; Indian Stock, 285; Exchequer Bills, 74s. to 76s. prem.

The principal business done in foreign bonds has been in Spanish. These bonds, from the price of 35⅞ to 36, gave way to nearly 35, the last price being 35⅛ to ⅜. The Active Bonds were not so much affected: after having been 24¼ to ⅜, they are last quoted 24⅝ to ⅞. There was no business done in the other foreign securities to occasion comment.

There was a large business done in railway shares, with a tendency to improve, especially in the leading lines. London and Birmingham, 230 to 2; New Quarter Shares, 27 to 8; New Thirds, 39 to 40; South Western, 84½ to 5½; Eighths, 3⅞ to 4⅜ prem.; London and Brighton, 44⅜ to ⅜ per share; New, 11⅝ to ½; Blackwall, 7 to ½; Greenwich, 4⅝ to ⅞; Croydon, 19 to ¼; Manchester and Leeds, 110 to 112; New, 47 to 8; Quarter Shares, 9¼ to ¾; Manchester and Birmingham, 56 to 7; Birmingham and Derby, 61 to 3; Thirds, 20 to 1; Eighths, 4 to ½; Midland Counties, 90 to 1; North Midland, 90 to 1; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 66 to 7; New, 16⅞ to ¾; Great Western, 115 to 16; Half Shares, 74 to 5; Fifths, 20⅜ to 1; South Eastern, 37⅛ to ⅝; New, 7⅛ to ⅜ prem.; Northern and Eastern, 57 to ½ per share; Eastern Counties, 13 to ¼; New Registered, 14⅞ to 15; Perpetual Five per Cents. 1 to ¼ prem.; Birmingham and Gloucester, 95 to 7: Hull and Selby, 59⅛ to 60½; Bristol and Exeter, 75 to 6; Paris and Orleans, 37 to ½; Paris and Rouen, 37 to ½; Rouen and Havre, 8½ to 9 prem.; Caledonian, 4½ per share; Chester and Holyhead, 6⅜ to 7⅛; Dublin and Cashel, 4¾; Harwich (Braithwaite), 3⅛; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 41; North British, 2¾ to 3; Norwich and Brandon, 8¾ to ⅞.

PROFESSOR GRAVES'S LECTURES ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

LECTURE XII.

I FEEL much embarrassed by the great difficulty of giving you, within the compass of this lecture, any thing like an adequate view of several remaining heads of our subject. The doctrine of contraband, and the rule which interdicts to a neutral the coasting and colonial trade of a belligerent which was closed to the neutral in time of peace, are the most important topics which remain, and accordingly upon these we shall principally dwell. The prohibition to neutrals of the carriage of enemy's troops and despatches is connected with the doctrine of contraband. It may be well to take notice, shortly, of the rules which have been introduced with respect to the change of property in transitu, in order to prevent frauds and to give effect to the general laws of neutrality. But first let me read to you the principles of the armed neutralities of 1780 and 1800; for they will explain to you the questions which have been most debated.

The first armed neutrality contended for the following five propositions:—

1. Neutral nations are at liberty to sail freely from port to port, and on the coasts of belligerent nations.

2. The goods belonging to subjects of belligerent nations shall be free in the vessels of neutral nations, except goods of contraband.

3. Nothing shall be considered contraband of war which is not expressly so declared in the treaty of commerce of 1766 (Art. 10 and 11) between Great Britain and Russia. The obligations of that treaty, being founded on the natural rights of nations, are to be extended to all belligerent powers.

This was the Russian version of the third proposition:—Austria, Prussia, Portugal, and the Two Sicilies, having no treaties of their own which defines contraband, agreed to take their rule from the Russian treaty. Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands, referred respectively to treaties of their own.

4. To determine what constitutes a blockaded port, that denomination can only be applied where vessels stationary and sufficiently near are so disposed by the attacking power that there is an evident danger of entering.

5. These rules shall be applied in judicial proceedings and questions on the legality of captures.

The second armed neutrality, in 1800, agreed with the former in the first two propositions. In the third, in order to prevent doubts and misunderstandings, the articles that were to be deemed contraband were enumerated—Cannon, mortars, fire-arms, balls, flints, flint-stones, matches, gunpowder, saltpetre, sulphur, helmets, pikes, swords, hangers, cartridge boxes, saddles, and bridles; with the exception of such a quantity of the above as may be necessary for the defence of the ships and their crews. No other articles to be considered warlike or naval stores, or to be subject to confiscation. On the contrary, all other articles to pass free and without restraint. But this proposition was to be without prejudice to the particular stipulations of former treaties with the belligerent powers, by virtue of which the things above mentioned are allowed or prohibited.

With respect to blockade, the second armed neutrality provided, in addition to the definition of the first, that where there is an evident blockade, an entry into the blockaded harbour is a breach of blockade, though there be no previous express warning off by the officer in command of the blockading force.

The second armed neutrality expressly provided that when neutral vessels sailed under the convoy of a neutral ship of war, the declaration of the commanding officer that the ships under convoy had no contraband on board should be sufficient.

The right of belligerents to prevent neutrals from carrying contraband of war to their enemies is now generally assented to, though there is still some want of general agreement as to the articles which may properly be termed contraband of war, and as to the penalty which is incurred by their conveyance. To carry to my enemy materials which may be employed in attacking me, or which may destroy my efforts to paralyze his means, would be to abuse the privileges of neutrality. One of the difficulties of determining what is contraband of war arises from the fact that articles which are harmless at one time may be employed against me with pernicious effect at another. When hides were employed in the equipment of a floating battery destined to attack Gibraltar, we should have been justified in preventing them from being so made use of. Of the goods sent to an enemy by a neutral, some are mere articles of luxury, or useful only for peaceful purposes; others, as arms and materials directly adapted to destructive uses, are useful principally or solely in time of war: others, again, as money, provisions, ships, and naval materials, may be employed equally in peace or war, but yet are ordinarily only useful in war. It is with respect to the latter that doubts for the most part arise, and when a neutral may be prevented from supplying articles of the third sort to an enemy, the modes of prevention and the penalties of trading may yet be different from those which are customary in the case of munitions of war. It may be right to confiscate munitions of war, while it may be forbidden to do more than intercept and detain other contraband articles, or take possession of them upon payment of their value.

Among articles that are of direct use in war, and generally liable to confiscation if not protected by special treaties, are "cannon, mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, muskets, flints, matches, powder, saltpetre, sulphur, cuirasses, pikes, swords, belts, cartouche-boxes, saddles, and bridles." Horses have been generally considered as primâ facie contraband, and the owner wishing to save them from confiscation would have to prove strictly their destination for other than military purposes. Unwrought metals (though lead may be easily converted into bullets) and money are equivocal. Their destination may be explained. In the same predicament are ships and naval stores—as timber, tar, pitch, sails, canvas, and cordage. Where there are no treaties regulating the manner in which such articles are to be dealt with, our prize courts are guided by certain presumptions founded on common sense, as to the intention of the neutral owner to assist our enemy in his hostile operations. They consider whether the goods are the productions of the neutral country, in which it commonly trades, or not; whether they are in an unmanufactured state, or manufactured so as to be more easily used against us; whether they are on their way to a general commercial port, or to a port of naval equipment. If the goods were bonâ fide destined for peaceful purposes, though it may be dangerous for us, on account of the peculiar circumstances of the war, to permit their arrival to the enemy's hands, we take possession on payment of the value. If the intentions of the neutral owner, collected from the facts of the case, were hostile, we confiscate the goods. In the third class, articles ancipitis usûs are dependent on evidence, and those articles seem to admit more easily of evidence that they are intended for hostile purposes—such as ships and naval stores, timber, tar, pitch, and so forth; others, as provisions, are only subject to confiscation under very peculiar circumstances. The presumption is, that provisions are not contraband, but that they may become so under circumstances arising out of the particular situation of the war, or the condition of the parties engaged in it. If we have hopes of reducing an enemy to submission by famine, we should consider ourselves justified in preventing provisions from being carried to him by a neutral. The circumstances which I have described as affording presumptions in the case of other articles ancipitis usûs are attended to by our courts in the case of provisions. Cargoes, however, consisting of commeatus, not going directly to an arsenal or dockyard, are commonly treated with mildness, and seldom seized without payment of their value to the owner.

Whether the confiscation of contraband goods shall be extended beyond the goods themselves—whether here the doctrine of infection be admitted, and whether the ship and other articles of the same cargo shall be involved in the same condemnation, is a question upon which authors are not agreed. The ancient practice was more severe to neutrals than the modern. The carrier was presumed to be involved in the guilt of the owner of the contraband, and the innocent cargo was said to be infected by the admixture of illegal articles. According to the modern practice of our courts, when confiscation is decreed, it does not extend to the vessel or the remainder of the cargo if they do not belong to the owner of the contraband. (Yonge Tobias, 1 Rob. 330.) But any share of the ship or of the innocent cargo belonging to the owner of the contraband is involved in the same condemnation, ob continentiam delicti, the whole of the property being considered as engaged in one illegal transaction.

The right of pre-emption, which is now employed as a mitigation of the severity of confiscation in cases of hardship to a neutral, was once exercised on indifferent subjects—on any subjects, whether contraband or not. I have already mentioned to you the practice which once prevailed of laying an embargo in time of peace on foreign property within the territories of a state, and purchasing that property at a valuation to supply the state's necessities. But pre-emption, as now employed, is a compromise between a belligerent's right of preventing his enemy from obtaining means of attack or defence and the neutral's right of exporting his native commodities. According to our practice, the captors, or the government, indemnify the owner for damage consequent on the detention, and pay the cost price of the article, together with a reasonable mercantile profit. How that profit should be estimated is matter of dispute. Is the owner entitled to such a profit as he might have obtained in the enemy's country? Our Courts say no; and generally allow ten per cent. on the cost price to the proprietor. But the amount seems to depend on the discretion of the judge. "No rule," says Sir W. Scott, in the Haabet (2 Rob. 174), "has established that such a purchase shall be regulated exactly upon the same terms of profit which would have followed the evidence if no such exercise of war had intervened. It is a reasonable indemnification and a fair profit on the commodity; that is, due reference being had to the original price actually paid by the exporter, and the expenses which he has incurred. As to what is to be deemed a reasonable indemnification and profit, I hope and trust that this country will never be found backward in giving a liberal interpretation to these terms; but certainly the capturing nation does not always take these cargoes on the same terms on which an enemy would be content to purchase them: much less are cases of this kind to be considered as cases of costs and damages, in which all loss of possible profit is to be laid upon unjust captors, for these are not unjust captures, but authorized exercises of the rights of war." The shipowner is not considered to have a right to indemnification for the freight he loses by the seizure of the cargo before it comes to its destination in a case of contraband. The payment of freight by the captor is sometimes made a subject of special contract. There are many treaties on the subject of contraband between different European powers, and one nation is not always consistent with itself in its various treaties. It agrees to consider that as contraband in its dealings with one power, which it exempts from seizure in a treaty with another power. Where so much dispute exists, it is desirable that as much as possible should be provided for by treaty. It is only by such means that we can hope to avoid those disputes and heartburnings which have occurred and are likely to recur. Till treaties become general on this head, neutrals will complain, and be led into hostilities, or require redress, whenever a doubtful exercise of belligerent rights takes place to their disadvantage.

In the absence of treaties, or so far as they do not extend, it has not been unusual for a belligerent, at the commencement of a war, to issue declarations forewarning neutral powers of the merchandizes which it considers contraband, and of the penalties to be inflicted upon those who may be found conveying them to the enemy. These declarations, though they may prevent surprise, are, as Martens observes, advertisements rather than laws; they may prevent doubt as to conduct, not as to right.

To recapitulate: we have seen that neutrals carrying commodities to an enemy are liable to confiscation of the goods, if those goods be only applicable to usus bellicus. If the goods be applicable to usus anceps, we have seen that the neutral generally loses freight or remuneration for their carriage, while the goods themselves are generally subject to pre-emption by the government of the captors. We have seen that circumstances may determine the greater or less danger of allowing a particular commodity to get into the hands of an enemy, and the greater or less intention on the part of the neutral to further the enemy's hostile objects. Some of these circumstances we have examined, and it appears that in some cases they may be such as to prove the innocence of the neutral, and to entitle the goods to complete immunity; while, in other cases, the evidence of hostile intention and probable hostile application may be so strong, even when the goods are not of an immediately warlike character, that they are not let off with the milder penalty of pre-emption, but condemned as lawful prize. The ship and such part of the cargo as is clearly only capable of usus pacificus are usually spared, except so far as they happen to belong to the owner of the prohibited merchandize. It will be observed that the extreme penalty is confiscation of the ship and the entire cargo, and that the relaxation of the penalty depends upon mitigating circumstances, of which the judge takes cognizance. There are still a few cases in which the extreme penalty may be exacted, as where a certain misconduct in carrying contraband cargo has been connected with other aggravating circumstances; to use the words of Sir W. Scott, in the Ringendi Jacob (1 Rob. 89), "where the simple misconduct of carrying a contraband cargo has been connected with other malignant and aggravating circumstances." Among such circumstances the carriage of false papers is considered as strongly indicative of criminally hostile intention, as excepting the case out of milder modern practice, and continuing it within the ancient severer rule. (The Mercurius, 1 Rob. 288.)

The carriage of despatches belonging to the enemy is much more mischievous than the carriage of ordinary contraband. Two or three cargoes of ammunition afford an assistance which is necessarily limited; but in the transmission of despatches may be conveyed the entire plan of a campaign, which may utterly defeat the prospects of the opposite belligerent; I am using the words of Sir W. Scott, in the Atalanta (6 Rob. 440). It is true that one ball might take off a Charles the Twelfth; but that is a consequence so remote and accidental, that in the contemplation of human events it is a sort of evanescent quantity, of which no account is taken. "To talk of the confiscation of despatches would be ridiculous. There would be no freight dependent on it, and therefore the same precise penalty cannot in the nature of things be applied. It becomes absolutely necessary, as well as just, to resort to some other measure of confiscation, which can be no other than that of the vehicle." In this case the cargo is not forfeited, unless it can be proved that the owners of it were implicated in the deliquency of the master of the vessel.

A neutral, however, has a right to convey despatches from an enemy's ambassador at his own court to the enemy's country. The opposite belligerent cannot claim to interrupt the diplomatic relations of the neutral with his enemy, though it is possible that such intercourse may be fraudulently employed for hostile purposes.

A vessel of a neutral is liable to confiscation if it be used for the transport of military or naval forces. A neutral nation may, by special treaty, so far deprive itself of the general rights of neutrality as to bind itself not to trade with the enemy in a manner which, without such contract, would be lawful. A stipulation of this kind is, indeed, a breach of strict neutrality, and may prove highly injurious to the opposite belligerent, but the neutral state which has entered into such an engagement cannot complain if the party in whose favour it was concluded condemn, as lawful prize, those ships of the neutral which may be captured in the act of violating its provisions.

Cases of this kind lead to questions of very difficult solution. It is in general the duty of a neutral, in the preservation of his neutrality, to resent and hinder, by all the means in his power, any violation of it by one party which may tend to the disadvantage of the other. But suppose the case of a neutral compelled by the superior force of a belligerent to do an act injurious to the other. Suppose that a neutral vessel is impressed by violence into the service of the enemy, and is obliged to transport the enemy's troops. Here the neutral owner, yielding to that violence, is placed in an unfortunate situation, but is still liable to the confiscation of his vessel. For the loss he sustains his government may demand redress from the unjust belligerent. In the same manner, if the owner has been led by deception into the commission of some act which subjects his vessel to forfeiture, the rights of the injured belligerent are not affected by his ignorance or want of penetration. He must look for redress to those who have deceived him; otherwise the rules of neutrality might be set at naught with impunity, from the facility with which allegations of fraud, or force, or mistake, might be supported by concocted evidence.

It is natural to suppose that many artifices will be practised to conceal the fact of part of a cargo belonging to an enemy. Resort to such artifice will subject the parties who are concerned in it, or who are responsible for those who are concerned in it, to loss of neutral property. There may be some presumption that goods belong to an enemy if they are the produce and manufacture of the enemy's country; but a neutral is at liberty to purchase such produce and manufacture, and if he proves the ownership of them to be his, they cannot be condemned. Again, a neutral is justified in purchasing, in time of war, a ship in an enemy's country—a ship built in an enemy's country; but where the ship is taken, evidently of the enemy's build, especially if the ship be manned by a crew which is for the most part of the enemy's country, a very strong presumption arises that it is an enemy's ship. Very strong proof would be required to convince a belligerent court that it is neutral property; still such proof may be adduced. Great frauds might be perpetrated with impunity, if property that was hostile at the commencement of a voyage could change that character before the voyage was ended. If this were permitted, a belligerent, seeing a probability of capture, would attempt to save the property which he has already shipped by assigning it, while on the voyage, to neutrals. The extreme difficulty of ascertaining by evidence whether such assignments are bonâ fide or collusive has rendered it necessary to establish the rule that they are in all cases to be regarded as inoperative; that the character of the goods during the voyage remains as it was at the time of shipping, whether that character was hostile or neutral. A transfer of belligerent property before shipment would be equally inoperative if it were proved that the enemy priorily reserved some interest to himself. To save the neutral's conscience in swearing that the goods are unreservedly his, there have been sometimes conditions secretly attached, that the goods should be the enemy's, unless captured; but that if captured, they should belong altogether to the neutral. Sometimes the contract has been that the property shall be the neutral's during the voyage, but shall become the property of the enemy on unlading. All such manœuvres, if they can be detected by the dexterity of the captors, will prove unavailing. It was laid down in the case of the Sally (3 Rob. 300, n.) "that property going to be delivered in the enemy's country, and under a contract to become the property of an enemy immediately on arrival, if taken in transitu, is to be considered as enemy's property. When the contract is made in time of peace, or without any contemplation of a war, no such rule exists; but in a case like the present, where the form of the contract was framed directly for the purpose of obviating the danger apprehended from approaching hostilities, it is a rule which unavoidably must take place." The captors, by the rights of war, stand in the place of the enemy, and are entitled to the condemnation of goods passing under such a contract as of enemy's property.

We come now to the rule of 1756, a rule which was much opposed by neutral nations, especially the United States, whose interests it was found to thwart. By the general principle to which I am now alluding, a neutral nation is not allowed to carry on during war a trade, injurious to one of the belligerent parties, which was never allowed to be neutral in time of peace, and which could only be enjoyed during war, and in consequence of war. This rule is not pushed in its application so as to interfere with any trade which cannot be clearly distinguished from the ordinary trade of neutrals. That ordinary trade may be, and generally is, greatly increased by a war in which the neutral takes no part. The merchant vessels of both belligerents, in fear of each other's cruisers, are deterred from intercourse with markets where much profits had been realized, and neutral vessels naturally take advantage of this absence of competition to trade, where before they had the privilege of trading, though they might have been undersold by a nation now at war. It is not to meet such cases as these that the rule I am now examining is put in force. These gains of neutral merchants, extraordinary though they be, and derived as they are from losses sustained by the belligerents, are still allowed as a compensation to the neutral for the deprivation or restriction of other branches of commerce to which he is bound to submit in time of war. But where a neutral, by an express act of permission of one party in a contest, claims the benefit of a commerce which is opened to him only by the war, and which defeats the chances of success of the opposite party, and from which he is likely to be again excluded as soon as the war ceases, the exercise of such commerce is regarded, and in my opinion not unfairly regarded, by the belligerent whom it injures, as a violation of neutral rights, exposing the neutral engaged in it to loss, if he should be captured in the prosecution of his illegal enterprise. The two cases to which the general principle has been found principally applicable are those of coasting and colonial trade. England, supported by high precedent, to be collected from the authority of some eminent writers, and the practice of its own tribunals, as well as the practice of other maritime states, has held that a neutral vessel becomes subject to confiscation along with its cargo if it carry on the coasting trade of an enemy, or if it trade with the colonies of an enemy in time of war, when such trade had not been previously permitted in time of peace, and was conceded to the neutral only for the purpose of avoiding that pressure which the stoppage of the ordinary exclusive trade of the belligerent by the enemy's cruisers would occasion. In either of these cases it matters not whether the neutral engaged in the colonial or coasting commerce be trading on his own account, having purchased the goods, or be merely the vehicle employed by the enemy. If he assist in the carriage of the enemy's productions from port to port of the enemy's country, though they be purchased and sold by himself, or if, for the sake of his own benefit, he open a communication with the enemy's colonies, and afford an outlet for productions which would otherwise be unsaleable, he may, in strictness, be treated with the same severity as if he were merely the carrier of the enemy. In strictness, the ship as well as the cargo may be condemned, but usually the cargo alone is declared good prize, and the owner loses the freight to which he would otherwise be entitled. The matter appears to be in the discretion of the judge, a discretion to be regulated by circumstances; and here, as in other cases, concealment and false papers require a severe sentence.

The coasting trade of maritime nations has from early times been almost invariably confined to ships of the country. However inconsistent this monopoly may be with true principles of commerce, it was a branch of the mercantile system which has long been fostered by the nations of Europe. The policy of encouraging native shipping, of educating mariners who might be useful in our navy, of preventing foreigners from enjoying advantages which it was supposed that the inhabitants of our country might exclusively enjoy—however adverse such notions may be to the most accredited theories of political economy in recent times—was adopted by our Legislature and sanctioned by our navigation laws at a date when the principles of free trade would have been derided as ridiculous. Nor were we singular in keeping to ourselves our coasting trade. Where it was not specially opened by treaty, it was throughout Europe confined to the subjects of the state which owned the coasts.

The prohibition of a coasting trade to neutrals during war, when it had not been enjoyed by them during peace, is not a modern innovation on neutral rights. The prohibition, however, of the colonial trade, though justifiable on the same principles, cannot be traced in practice to so early a date, because the great extension of colonial empire has been comparatively recent, and because the attempt to carry on colonial trade by neutral vessels, when it could not be carried on by the mother country, on account of the enemy's cruisers, did not become an object of attention before the middle of the last century. There is a great difference to be observed between the modern system of colonisation, which has rapidly increased since the discovery of the new world, and the course pursued by the principal colonizing nations of antiquity. In the àποικίαι of the Greeks, the emigrant retained no idea of subjection to the mother country. The colony was not a branch connected with the main stem, but a distinct offset. The colonists carried with them their language, religion, and laws; but their government, though modelled on the constitution of the parent state, was wholly independent of it. The notion of exclusive trade was as little recognised as that of exclusive dominion. Population was principally confined to cities; the surrounding country was cultivated to supply the wants of the town population, not to extend the territory and influence of the mother country. Very different has been the modern system. The desire of extensive possession, of obtaining new vents for commodities, new markets of production to supply the necessities and conveniences of life at home, nurseries for seamen, military positions calculated to give influence and inspire awe, means of exercising authority by the distribution of patronage, has induced modern states to employ their new colonies, not as mere vents for surplus population, likely from affection and association to prove useful allies and friends when infancy has acquired the vigour of youth, but as tributary and dependent territories. The colony is governed from a distant home, and its markets are secured by prohibition. Hence has arisen among European nations what is called the colonial system. By this system it is laid down as a general rule that "all the produce of the colonies destined for the European market shall be brought to the mother country for consumption or re exportation; and that, on the other hand, the mother country shall furnish all the supplies required by the colonies, and that the conveyance of the produce shall be confined to the national shipping." This is the policy which, with very little deviation, has been pursued by European governments with respect to their colonies, and under which those colonies have grown up. Although considerably modified of late years, its principles are still maintained by our own. An account of this system you will find in Mallalieu's Essay on Colonies.

Such was the policy which prevailed in Europe when, in the war of 1756, commonly called the seven years' war, the French, unable from our maritime superiority to carry on their colonial trade themselves, repealed their old exclusive laws, which restricted foreigners from prosecuting the trade between France and the French colonies, and opened the trade to neutral powers. Great Britain denied that neutrals could have any right to enter upon such a traffic, as it might enable colonies to hold out, which might otherwise fall into her power, and might enable France to withdraw seamen from her merchant service to man her fleet, who would otherwise have been engaged in the protection of the colonies. From the date at which the principle of the rule restricting the trade of neutrals which was not permitted to them during peace began to be generally applied in the case of colonies, it is commonly known by the name of the rule of 1756; and this was first applied by those who objected to the rule, inasmuch as the name implies that the rule is modern. Almost every rule in any way restricting neutral commerce has been disputed by neutrals when they have found their interests affected by it, although they have often taken advantage of the rule when they subsequently became themselves belligerents.

The rule of 1756 has been much disputed by the United States, which has sometimes reaped a profitable harvest by their neutrality, and would have been greatly benefited by the repeal of all restrictions on neutrals. The Americans contend that the special licenses granted to particular Dutchmen in 1756, to trade with French colonies, make a distinction, and prevent the rule from applying to a trade open to all neutrals, and not so immediately identifying the parties engaged in it with the interests of the enemy They also lay some stress on our subsequent relaxation of the rule in practice when the rigorous exaction of it would have provoked a resistance from combined neutral powers which it would have been dangerous and impolitic to encounter. I think these arguments in opposition to the rule invalid, and agree with Chancellor Kent, cited in Manning, 197, in holding that if the United States should hereafter attain that elevation of maritime power and influence which their rapid growth and great resources seem to indicate, and which shall prove sufficient to render it expedient for her maritime enemy (if any such enemy should ever exist) to open all her domestic trade to enterprising neutrals, we (Americans) might be induced to feel, more sensibly than we have hitherto done, the weight of the arguments of the foreign jurists in favour of the policy and equity of the rule.

The leading case upon the rule of 1756 is the Immanuel (2 Rob. 19[illegible]).

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THERE is some hope that Lord Cottenham's Bill for consolidating the Law of Debtor and Creditor will be carried during the present session. Its main features are, the total abolition of imprisonment for debt, and the assimilation of the law and jurisdictions of bankruptcy and insolvency. It affords many facilities for taking the property of debtors, and fraud is to be punished as crime. Thus, there is a prospect of the law of debtor and creditor, hitherto the reproach of this country, being, at last, settled upon a rational basis. The Masters and Servants Bill has been rejected by a great majority, although supported by the Government. It appears to us that the clamour raised against this measure out of doors was a very unfounded one. Dr. Elphinstone has given notice of some amendments on the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, which are not worthy of dissection, because there is not the slightest chance of their being carried. It is understood that this Bill, defective as it is in all that is good, and abounding in compensations and place-making, and all that is mischievous, is to become law. Far better would it be to permit present abuses to linger on for a while, rather than so absurd a measure should disgrace the very name of law reform.

Bills in Progress.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

A Bill for the more easy Recovery of small Demands in the County Courts of England.

1. Her Majesty may order this Act to be put in execution.
2. Counties to be divided into districts.
3. Certain Courts may be declared within this Act.
4. Proceeding under former Acts to be valid.
5. Orders in council to be published in the London Gazette.
6. Judges of the County Court to be appointed.—And be it enacted, That as soon as this Act shall be put in force in any county, and from time to time when any judge to be appointed under this Act shall die, resign or be removed, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, or in the county of Lancaster for the Chancellor and Council of the duchy of Lancaster, to appoint one or more fit persons to be judges of the County Court, each of whom shall be a serjeant or barrister at-law, who shall have practised as a barrister for at least seven years then last past, or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, or of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, who shall have practised as an attorney for at least ten years; and it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor, or in the county of Lancaster for the Chancellor and Council of the said duchy, if he or they shall think fit, to remove any such judge for misbehaviour.
7. Provision for judges of Courts of Request.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That whenever by any of the Acts cited in either of the schedules (A) and (B), provision is made for the appointment of a barrister-at-law or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law, to act as a judge of the court thereby established or regulated, whether by the title of judge or barrister, or county clerk, assessor or steward, or deputy steward, or by any other title or style whatsoever, the persons holding such offices at the time when the Act or Acts under which any such court is now constituted will be repealed under the provisions of this Act, shall be the first judges of the same courts respectively, when holden as branches of the County Court under this Act, in and for the same towns and places respectively, or for such district as shall be assigned to each of the said courts, as hereinbefore provided, and shall have the same power of appointing a deputy or deputies to hold the court for them respectively which they have under the Act or Acts according to which the said courts are now severally constituted.
8. Judge may appoint a deputy.
9. Judge not to practise as a barrister or attorney in the same county.
10. Commissioners of Treasury to appoint treasurers.
11. Appointment of Clerks.—And be it enacted, That in every district in which a court shall be holden under the authority of this Act, there shall be a clerk, who shall be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, or of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or shall have duly served a term of not less than five years under articles of clerkship to some attorney of one of the said courts, and there shall also be a sufficient number of bailiffs and inferior officers; and the judge of the County Court shall from time to time, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor, or in Lancashire of the Chancellor and Council of the said duchy, appoint the clerk to every court which he shall hold, and may remove any such clerk for sufficient cause, to be allowed by the Lord Chancellor, or in Lancashire by the said Chancellor and Council of the said duchy; and no such clerk shall, either by himself or his partner, be directly or indirectly employed as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the said court.
12. Clerk may appoint a deputy.
13. Duties of the Clerks.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of each court shall issue all summonses, warrants, precepts, and writs of execution, and register all orders and judgments of the said court, and keep an account of all such proceedings of the court, and shall take charge of and keep an account of all court fees and fines payable or paid into court, and of all moneys paid into and out of court, and shall enter an account of all such fees, fines, and moneys in a book belonging to the court, to be kept by him for that purpose, which book shall be open to all persons desirous of searching the same; and shall from time to time, at such times as shall be directed by the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury, or required by the treasurer, submit his accounts to be audited or settled by the treasurer, and shall not, either by himself or his partner, be directly or indirectly engaged as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the said court.
14. Appointment of bailiffs.
15. Duties of the bailiffs.—And be it enacted, That the bailiffs of the said court shall serve all the summonses and orders, and execute all the warrants, precepts, and writs issued out of the court; and a list containing the name and place of abode of every bailiff appointed to execute the process of the court shall be put up in a conspicuous place in the court-house and in the clerk's office.
16. Provision for clerks, bailiffs, and officers, of courts of requests.
17. Treasurer, clerk, and officers to give security.
18. Fees to be taken according to schedule.
19. Judges to be paid by salaries.
20. Salaries of judges of Courts of Request.
21. Compensation for persons whose emoluments will be diminished.
22. No compensation for fees except in certain cases.
23. Fees and monies recovered to be accounted for to the treasurer.
24. Treasurer of the court to account.
25. Commissioners of Treasury to direct how the accounts shall be kept.
26. Accounts to be audited.
27. Clerk to send to commissioners of audit particulars of charge.
28. Accounts when audited to be sent to Treasury.
29. Treasurer to provide a court-house.—And be it enacted, that the treasurer of any court holden under this Act, for which a court-house, with necessary appurtenances, shall not have been already provided, shall, as soon as conveniently may be, with the approval of the said commissioners, build, purchase, hire or otherwise provide messuages and lands, with all necessary appurtenances, fit for holding the court therein, and for the offices necessary for carrying on the business of the said court, or, instead of providing separate buildings, may, with the like approval, contract with any person, being the owner of, or having the control and management of any county or town-hall or other building, for the use and occupation thereof, or of so much thereof as may be needed, for the purposes of this Act, and subject to such annual rent, and to such conditions as to the repairs, alterations, or improvements of such hall or building, as may be agreed upon; and all lands, messuages, and other effects belonging to the court shall vest in the treasurer for the time being, and in his successors in that office, in trust for the purposes of this Act.
30. Prisons may be provided.
31. Treasurer empowered to borrow money.
32. Corporations and others empowered to sell land.
33. Application of compensation when exceeding 200*l.*
34. Application when compensation is less than 200*l.* but not less than 20*l.*
35. Application where money less than 20*l.*
36. Upon question touching title to money paid into bank, person having been in possession of premises deemed entitled to the money until the contrary shown to the Court of Chancery.
37. General fund.
38. Property of certain courts to vest in the treasurer of the county court.
39. Provisions for outstanding liabilities.
40. Clerk to have charge of the courts.
41. Notice of the court.
42. Process of the court to be under seal.
43. Jurisdiction of the Court.—And be it enacted, That all pleas of personal actions, where the plaintiff claims any debt, or claims any damages, arising out of the breach of any express or implied agreement, or claims to recover the possession or value of any goods or chattels, unlawfully taken or kept from him, and where the debt or damage, or value of the goods claimed, is not more than fifteen pounds, may be holden in the County Court without writ, wherever the cause of action may have arisen; and all such actions brought in the said court shall be heard and determined in a summary way, according to the provisions of this Act: Provided always, That the court shall not have cognizance of any action in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments or to any toll, fair, market or franchise, shall be in question, or arising out of or relating to any will or settlement.

44. Suits to be by Plaint.—And be it enacted, That the plaintiff in any suit to be brought under this Act shall enter in the office of the clerk of the court a plaint in writing, stating the names and the places of abode of the parties, and the substance of the action intended to be brought, every one of which plaints shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which it shall be entered, and thereupon a summons, bearing the number of the plaint on the margin thereof, shall be issued under the seal of the court, and shall be served on the defendant at least seven days before the day on which the court shall be holden at which the cause is to be tried, if the debt or damage claimed shall not be more than five pounds, or at least ten days before such day if the claim shall be for more than five pounds; and delivery of such summons to the defendant, or delivery thereof to his wife, or servant, or any inmate at his usual place of abode, trading or dealing, shall be deemed good service, and no misnomer or inaccurate description of any person or place in any such plaint or summons shall vitiate the same, so that the person or place be therein described so as to be commonly known.

45. Summons may issue, though cause of action may not arise in district.

46. As to processes out of jurisdiction of court from which issued.—And be it enacted, That any summons or other process, which under this Act shall be required to be served out of the jurisdiction of the court from which the same shall have issued, may be served by the bailiff of any court holden under this Act in any part of England, and such service shall be as valid as if the same had been made by the bailiff of the court out of which such summons or other process shall have issued, within the jurisdiction of the court for which he acts; and proof of such service by affidavit, sworn by any county clerk, or before a Master Extraordinary in Chancery, shall be sufficient, and the fee of the Master for taking such affidavit shall not be more than one shilling, and shall be costs in the cause.

47. Demands not to be split.

48. Minors may sue for wages.

49. Cases of partnership and intestacy.—And be it enacted, That any demand which would otherwise be recoverable under this Act, may be sued for and recovered in the County Court, notwithstanding that it may be the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy.

50. No privilege allowed.

51. One of several persons liable may be sued.

52. What actions shall be tried by the judge alone.—And be it enacted, That the judge of the County Court shall be the sole judge in all actions brought in the said court, and shall determine all questions as well of fact as of law, unless either of the parties shall require a jury to be summoned as hereinafter mentioned.

53. Jury may be required.—And be it enacted, That in all actions where the value of the demand shall exceed five pounds, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to require a jury to be summoned to try the said action; and in all actions where the value of the demand shall not exceed five pounds, it shall be lawful for the judge in his discretion, on the application of either of the parties, to order that such action be tried by a jury; and in every case such jury shall be summoned according to the provisions hereinafter contained: Provided always, That the party requiring a jury to be summoned shall give to the clerk of the court, or leave at his office, notice thereof in writing five days at least before the holding of the court at which the cause is to be tried; and the said clerk shall cause notice of such demand of a jury made either by the plaintiff or defendant to be communicated to the other party to the said action, either by post or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; but it shall not be necessary for either party to prove on the trial that such notice was communicated to the other party by the clerk.

54. Party requiring jury to make a deposit.

55. Who shall be jurors.

56. Number of the jury to be five.

57. Proceedings on hearing the plaint.—And be it enacted, That on the day in that behalf named in the summons the plaintiff shall appear in court in person, or by some person on his behalf, and thereupon the defendant shall be required, by himself or by some person on his behalf, to answer such plaint; and on answer being made in court, the judge shall proceed in a summary way to try the cause and give judgment, without further pleading or formal joinder of issue.

58. No evidence to be given by plaintiff of any matter not stated in the summons.

59. Notices to be given of special defences.

60. Forms of procedure to be framed.—And be it enacted, That three of the judges of the county courts, to be named from time to time by the Lord Chancellor, shall have power to make and issue all the general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the county courts holden under this Act, and also to frame forms for every proceeding in the said courts for which they shall think it necessary that a form be provided, and from time to time to alter any such form; and the rules so made, and the forms so framed, when approved by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, or the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, shall be observed and used in all the courts holden under this Act; provided always, that such rules shall be in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and that in any case not expressly provided for herein, or by the said rules, the general principles of practice in the superior courts of common law may be adopted and applied at the discretion of the judges, to actions and proceedings in their several courts.

61. Proceedings if plaintiff does not appear or prove his case.—And be it enacted, That if upon the day of the return of any summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the said Court, or of the cause for which the said summons shall have been issued, the plaintiff shall not appear, either in person or by some other person on his behalf, or appearing shall not make proof of his demand to the satisfaction of the Court, it shall be lawful for the judge, if he shall think fit, where the defendant personally or by some one duly authorized on his behalf shall appear and shall not admit the demand, to award to the defendant, by way of costs and satisfaction for his trouble and attendance, such sum as the judge in his discretion shall think fit, and such sum shall be recoverable from the plaintiff by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the same Court can be recovered: Provided always, That if the plaintiff shall not appear when called upon, and the defendant, or some one duly authorized on his behalf, shall appear and admit the cause of action, to the full amount claimed, the Court, if it shall think fit, may proceed to give judgment as if the plaintiff had appeared.

62. Proceedings if the defendant does not appear.—And be it enacted, That if on the day so named in the summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the Court or cause in which the summons was issued the defendant shall not appear either personally, or by some one in his behalf, or sufficiently excuse his absence, or shall neglect to answer, the judge, upon due proof of service of the summons, may proceed to the hearing or trial of the cause on the part of the plaintiff only; and the judgment thereupon shall be as valid as if both parties had attended: Provided always, That the judge may in any such case, at the next Court, or otherwise, at his discretion, set aside any judgment so given in the absence of the defendant, and the execution thereupon, upon such terms as he may think fit, on sufficient cause shewn to him for that purpose, and may grant a new trial of the cause, upon the defendant paying the costs of the first trial, and giving such security as the judge shall think fit to require for the costs of the new trial.

63. In case defendant unable to attend, the hearing may be postponed.

64. Judge may grant time.

65. Defendant may pay money into court.

66. Parties may be examined. Witnesses not incompetent from interest.—And be it enacted, That on the hearing or trial of any action or on any other proceeding under this Act, the parties to the suit and all credible persons whosoever may be examined upon oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases in which persons are by law allowed to make affirmation instead of taking an oath, to be administered by the proper officer of the Court.

67. Persons giving false evidence to be punished.

68. Summonses to witnesses.

69. Penalty of 5*l.* on witnesses neglecting summons.

70. Fines, how to be levied and accounted for.

71. Costs to abide the event of the action.

72. Judgment in County Court, how far final.—And be it enacted, That every order and judgment of any court holden under this Act, except as herein provided, shall be final and conclusive between the parties; but the judge shall have power to nonsuit the plaintiff in every case in which satisfactory proof shall not be given to him, entitling either the plaintiff or defendant to the judgment of the Court, and shall also have the power, on application being made to him at the court holden next after the trial of any action, or otherwise, if he shall think fit, to order a new trial to be had in such action, upon such terms as he shall think reasonable, and in the meantime to stay the proceedings.

73. New trials may be moved for in the superior courts on certain conditions.

74. No actions to be removed into superior courts but on certain conditions.

75. What may be charged by agents.—And be it enacted, that no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, shall be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel or advocate for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under this Act; and no person, not being an attorney admitted to one of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, or to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting on behalf of any other person in the said court; and no attorney shall be entitled to have or recover, therefore, any sum of money, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than forty shillings, or to have or recover more than ten shillings for his fees and costs, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than five pounds, or more than fifteen shillings in any case within the summary jurisdiction given by this Act, except in actions tried by consent of the parties which are not otherwise within the summary jurisdiction given by this Act; and the expense of employing an attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be considered as costs in the cause, unless the judge shall otherwise order.

76. Court may make orders for payment by instalments.

77. Cross-judgments.

78. Court may award execution against body or goods.

79. Execution not to issue till after default in payment of instalment.

80. How execution may be had out of the jurisdiction.

81. Power to suspend execution in certain cases.

82. Regulating the sale of goods taken in execution.

83. No execution shall be stayed by writ of false judgment on certain conditions.

84. For removal of judgments into the superior courts, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

85. Where prisoners shall be committed.

86. Term of custody forty days.

87. Execution to be superseded on payment of debt and costs.

88. Minutes of proceedings to be kept.

89. List to be made out of unclaimed money.

90. Power of committal for contempt.

91. Penalty of 5*l.* for assaulting bailiffs or rescuing persons or goods taken in execution.

92. Gaoler made answerable for escapes.

93. Bailiffs made answerable for escapes and neglect to levy execution.

94. Remedies against bailiffs and other officers.

95. Officers taking any fee besides the fees allowed, to be discharged.

96. Penalties of 50*l.* on clerk and treasurer for acting improperly.

97. Provision for the protection of officers of the court.

98. Claims for not more than 15*l.* as to goods taken in execution to be adjudicated in court.

99. Claims for more than 15*l.* as to goods taken in execution to be adjudicated in the superior courts.

100. Plaints in replevin.—And be it enacted, That all actions of replevin in cases of distress for rent, arrear, or damage feasant, shall be brought without writ before the judge of the County Court, and shall not be removeable into any other court, where the rent or damage in respect of which the distress shall have been taken, shall not be more than the sum of fifteen pounds, provided that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair or franchise, or to the whole or any part of the distress, shall not be in question in any such action.

101. Where actions of replevin shall be brought.

102. How actions of replevin may be removed.

103. Possession of small tenements may be recovered by plaint in County Court. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74.

104. The manner in which such summons shall be served.

105. Protection of judge, clerk, bailiff, and officers.

106. Where landlord has a lawful title, he shall not be deemed a trespasser by reason of irregularity.

107. How execution of warrant of possession may be stayed.

108. Proceedings on the bond.

109. Concurrent jurisdiction with courts at Westminster.

110. Consequences of bringing actions for small debts in superior courts.—And be it enacted, That if any action shall be prosecuted after the commencement of this Act in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaint might have been entered in any court holden under this Act, and a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than fifteen pounds, the said plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs, and shall have execution only against the goods and chattels of the defendant; and if a verdict shall not be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs as between attorney and client, unless in either case the judge who shall try the cause shall certify on the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in such superior court.

111. Penalties to be recovered before a justice, and levied by distress.

112. In default of security, offender may be detained till return of the warrant of distress.

113. In default of distress, offender may be committed.
114. Penalties to go unto the general fund.
115. Justices may proceed by summons in the recovery of penalties.
116. Form of conviction.
117. Proceedings not to be quashed for want of form.
118. Distress not unlawful for want of form.
119. Limitation of actions for proceedings in execution of this Act.
120. Act not to affect rights of Universities of Oxford or Cambridge.
121. Interpretation of Act.
122. Act may be amended, &c. this session.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (IRELAND) BILL.

The new Government Bill "To alter the Qualification of Burgesses in Municipal Corporations, and of Voters in the Election of Municipal Commissioners in Ireland," has just been printed. It contains only eight clauses, and in the event of becoming an Act of Parliament, it is to be construed together with the Act 3 & 4 Vict. cap. 108, that is to say, with the Irish Municipal Corporations Act, which was passed by the Melbourne Ministry in 1840. The provisions of this new measure require little further explanation, as they may be, so to speak, comprised in a nut-shell. By the 1st clause the existing qualification of burgesses entitled to vote at the election of Municipal Commissioners under the said recited Act (such qualification consisted in the occupation of a house or tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* &c.) is distinctly repealed; the qualification being assimilated by the 2nd clause to that enacted in the English Municipal Bill passed in 1835 (the 5th & 6th Wm. 4, c. 76). This latter qualification, thus to be extended for the future to the burgesses of Ireland, consists merely in the occupation of a house or tenement within seven miles of a corporate town for a period of three years, without any particular amount of annual value being necessary, as before. The burgesses so qualified must pay all poor-rates, borough-rates, and rates made under any general or local Act, for the purposes of maintaining a police, or for the purposes of paving, watching, lighting, or cleansing, on or before the last day of August in each year. The 4th clause enacts, that in cases where municipal commissioners were not elected in 1841, in any Irish borough, they may be elected in this present year. In boroughs where no poor-rate was declared two years previously to the 1st of January, 1844, the said municipal commissioners may, by the provisions of clause 5, be elected this year by such inhabitants as have been rated ever since the rate was originally made. Such is the gist of the Bill introduced by Lord Eliot.

THE NEW IRISH REGISTRATION BILL.

The following is a brief abstract of the new Irish Registration Bill.

It is entitled "A Bill to alter and amend the laws which regulate the registration, qualification, and polling of Parliamentary electors in Ireland," and contains no less than 123 clauses, with fifteen pages of forms and schedules annexed. No period is yet fixed for the Act to come into operation, if it should receive the sanction of the Legislature.

The 1st clause extends the right of voting in Irish counties to all persons in the occupation of lands or tenements rated to the relief of the poor at a net annual value of 30*l.* or upwards, provided they are duly registered, and have occupied such lands or tenements for twelve calendar months next previous to the 16th of July in any year, and been rated to all the poor-rates made during the time of their occupation. Joint occupiers may vote if each have a qualification of not less than 30*l.* a year. The lands and tenements need not be always the same, but may be different lands, &c. occupied in immediate succession.

The 5th enacts, that all persons seized at law or equity of any freehold estate in fee-simple, fee tail, or for lives renewable for ever, of the clear yearly value of 5*l.* over and above all rents and charges, shall be entitled to vote at elections for the counties, counties of cities, and towns, in which such lands, &c. shall be respectively situate; provided always that no person shall be entitled to vote for a county in respect of property in a borough.

The 7th defines the meaning of the words "clear yearly value" of the qualifying estate to be the rent at which, one year with another, the premises might in their actual state be reasonably expected to let from year to year, deducting therefrom any rent or charges payable by the occupier in respect of such lands or hereditaments. (This is the virtual enactment of the "solvent tenants' test," affirmed already by 10 out of the 12 Irish judges.)

Occupation is dispensed with by clause 8, in all cases of freehold qualifications. The 9th section repeals the Act 4 Geo. 4, c. 36, "to discourage the granting of leases in joint tenancy in Ireland."

No mortgagee of any land can vote at elections, unless he be in actual possession of the rents and profits thereof.

The distance of "seven statute miles" in boroughs is to be measured in a straight line—i. e. as the crow flies.

12 and 13 contain provisions for cases of successive occupation in boroughs and for cases of joint occupancy therein. The rates required to be paid by burgesses are the poor, borough, paving, watching, lighting, and cleansing rates; and they must be liquidated by the 5th of July in every year.

14 repeals such of the provisions of the Irish Reform Act as relate to registration, and No. 15 enacts that no person shall vote after the last day of November next, in any county or borough in Ireland, unless he be registered according to this Act. No "certificates" of registry to be available after that period. The University of Dublin is excepted.

16 and 17 contain provisions relative to the length of possession required in counties, and the conditions required previously to registration under this Act in boroughs. Freeholders and copyholders must have been in receipt of the rents for six calendar months at least previous to the 16th of July, and lessees or occupiers for twelve calendar months previously to that period. Burgesses qualifying by 10*l.* houses must have occupied them for twelve months previous to the 16th of July, and have paid the rates already mentioned by the 5th of January next preceding. Freemen and 40*s.* freeholders are required to reside within the borough for six months before the said 16th of July.

From 18 to 26 inclusive contain the enactments relative to registration, &c. in Irish counties, referring entirely to schedules and matters of detail.

27 to 36 contain provisions relating to registration in Irish boroughs, according to the new Act.

By the general provisions relating to registration it is enacted that the assistant-barristers shall hold annual courts of revision within counties and boroughs between the 27th of August and the 8th of October in each year, at which the registers may be added to on the one hand, and purified from rotten votes on the other. There is, however, this salvo in favour of the too numerous batches of fictitious votes which the more stringent provisions of Lord Stanley's original Registration Bill would have had the effect of expunging from the electoral lists—namely, that all voters now registered under the Irish Reform Act, within eight years previous to the 1st of December in any current year, shall be primâ facie entitled to have their names retained on the register, and that their original qualification shall not be questioned during the said period, unless it can be shewn that the voter has ceased to hold some part of the property for which he was originally registered, &c. When the eight years have elapsed, the assistant-barrister is to expunge the date of registry annexed to the names of the voters whose registry shall then expire; but it appears, if we rightly comprehend the intricate phraseology of the clause, that the voters in question may be, nevertheless, re-registered on the same qualification, provided they have not lost the requisite value. In short, it would seem that those electors whose original qualifications remain unaltered may enjoy the franchise ad infinitum, however wrongly they may have been obtruded on the register in the first instance. It is true that the assistant-barrister is only empowered, and not compelled, to retain these voters on the list, if it can be proved that "they possessed on the 16th of July the same qualification in respect of which their names have been inserted in such list."

Hence it clearly appears that the privilege of voting is extended to (disqualified) electors up to a certain specified period; but the latter portion of clause 65 should be narrowly scrutinized, as its terms are somewhat vague.

Appeals from the barristers' decisions on points of law may be made to the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Dublin, not only against undue rejections, but against undue admissions, of voters. At present the appeal is only one-sided, no power being given for the reversal of decisions by which improper votes are received.

Due provision is made respecting costs to be awarded to or against claimants or objectors by the barristers. These costs not in any case to exceed 20*s.*

The revised lists of county voters are to be transmitted to the clerks of the peace, and copied into books. The said books are to be signed and delivered to the sheriffs by the last day of November, and to constitute the "registers" for one year. The same provision applies to boroughs. Copies are to be printed for sale.

Additional assistant-barristers may be appointed this year, if needful, and an additional honorarium of 100*l.* is to be given to each of the assistant-barristers for the remuneration of the extra labours imposed on him by this Act.

Appeals are to be heard, as aforesaid, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Dublin. Seven judges will constitute a quorum. Notice of appeal must be given to the Court within the first four days of Michaelmas Term, and to the respondent ten days before the time fixed for the hearing of the appeal.

No appeal is to be heard on questions of fact. The decisions of the Court of appeal are to be final and binding, even upon select committees of the House of Commons.

The registers are to be duly amended according to the decisions of the Court of appeal. No pending appeal to affect the right of voting. The Court is empowered to award costs, &c.

The polling is to be limited to two days in counties, and to one day in boroughs, as in England. The register is to be conclusive evidence of the right to vote, except where the qualification has ceased and determined. Persons rejected by the barrister may tender their votes, and have them recorded separately.

The remaining clauses contain various miscellaneous provisions, which we have no room to enumerate. They all relate to matters of detail. It appears that election committees of the House of Commons will have the power of reversing the decisions of the revising-barristers, although not those of the Court of appeal, if we clearly understand the terms of clause 114.

Lord Eliot, Mr. T. B. C. Smith, and Sir J. Graham, are intrusted with this important measure.

DETACHED PARTS OF COUNTIES.

Bill brought in by Mr. Robert Scott and Mr. Brotherton, intituled "A Bill to annex detached parts of counties to the counties in which they are situated," proposes to enact, by

Sect. 1. That wherever, in England or Wales, any detached portion of any county is entirely surrounded by the main body of any one other county, or by such one other county and the sea, such detached portion shall henceforth be incorporated with and form part of the county by which it is so surrounded.

2. At the next succeeding or some subsequent quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county or riding with which every such detached portion is hereby incorporated, the justices there assembled shall declare to what riding, hundred, wapentake, or other division each such portion shall belong; and such their determination they shall cause to be advertised in the London Gazette, the production of which paper shall be evidence thereof.

3. The part of the county of Durham which is situated to the north of the county of Northumberland, and is called Norhamshire, together with the islands contiguous thereto which form the district called Islandshire, shall henceforth be incorporated with and form part of the county of Northumberland, and shall be included in the ward of Bambrough in the last-mentioned county.

4. No judicial proceeding or deed or other instrument in writing shall be invalidated by reason of any error in stating the name of the county to which such detached portion originally belonged, instead of its hereby acquired designation, or vice versâ.

5. Nothing herein contained shall alter or interfere with any ecclesiastical jurisdiction or right of patronage.

6. The word "county," as used in this Act, shall not include the "county of a city."

VESTRIES BILL.

An apparently well-devised measure has been brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Stafford O'Brien, M.P. and Mr. E. B. Denison, M.P. for the purpose of preventing in future the recurrence of those disgraceful scenes which are too often to be witnessed in parish vestries, and which defile and desecrate the sacred edifices to which they are attached. It is entitled, "A Bill to prohibit the Holding of Vestries in Churches," and contains thirteen clauses. After the close of the present year, 1844, no vestry or other meeting is to be held in the established churches or chapels of any parish whose population exceeds 1,000 souls, but power is given to appoint other places of meeting somewhat more fit to be turned into beargardens than buildings attached to the house of God. By the 11th clause, it is distinctly enacted, that if any vestry or other meeting be holden in any church or chapel, contrary to the provisions of this Act, all proceedings at such meeting shall be absolutely null and void in law. The Act is not to extend to Scotland, nor is it to affect or invalidate any ecclesiastical law of the united church of England and Ireland, or to destroy any of the rights or powers belonging to any bishop of any diocese, or to any archdeacon, chancellor, or official.

CROWN LANDS, REVENUES, &c.

The following are extracts from the 20th Report of her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, &c., being the 14th annual report:—

PURCHASES BY THE CROWN.

The appendix to this report contains a schedule of property purchased by or on behalf of the Crown, for the advantage or improvement of the estates of the Crown to which such property is contiguous, as mentioned in the schedule; the total purchase-money for which property amounts to 30,760*l.*

His late Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester having been possessed of a freehold estate called Rapley Farm, containing about 460 acres of tillage land, and several extensive tracts of woodlands and plantations, making in the whole 2,216 acres, lying between the Crown estate of Swinly and Bagshot-park, and immediately adjoining the Royal domain which extends from Windsor to Sandhurst, an offer to sell those estates to this board was made soon after the death of his Royal Highness; but the price then demanded by the trustees or executors acting under the will of his Royal Highness having so much exceeded what was believed to be the fair value of the property, the offer was declined, and all treaty on the subject for several years suspended, when, after various attempts to effect a sale by public auction and by private treaty, the offer to us was renewed at a greatly reduced price; and having obtained the opinion of a very competent valuer of property of this description, we agreed, with the sanction of the Treasury, for the purchase of the whole, including the woods and timber, for the sum of 28,000*l.*, which has been paid out of monies arisen by sales of Crown property; and the woods and plantations having been placed in charge of our officer having the care of similar property forming the Royal domains at Windsor, the farm has been let on lease as part of the land revenue of the Crown.

HYDE PARK AND VICTORIA PARK.

The report also contains a schedule of property purchased under the authority of the Act 5 Vict. sess. 2, cap. 19, to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, &c., "to form a new opening from the Knightsbridge road into Hyde Park, and a new opening from High-street, Kensington, into an intended new road across the Palace-green;" the total purchase-money for which property amounts to 1,080*l.*; and a schedule of property purchased under the authority of the Act 5 Vict. sess. 2, cap. 20, to extend an Act passed in the 4th and 5th years of her present Majesty, for enabling her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods, &c., to purchase certain lands for Victoria Park.

NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

In the appendix will be found a report from Mr. Barry of the progress made, up to the present time, in the erection of the new Houses of Parliament. The following is that gentleman's report:—

"ARCHITECT'S REPORT AS TO THE PRESENT STATE OF THE BUILDING.

"The curtain portions of the river front and a considerable portion of the north and south fronts are carried up to their full height, in readiness for the roofs. The central portion of the river front and the wings of the building are a little above the same level, and probably will attain their full height in about four months from this time. Considerable progress is made with the superstructure of the western portion of the south front, the Victoria tower, the Royal gallery, the House of Lords, the central tower and adjoining corridors, and the west front towards New Palace-yard, all which portions of the building are upon an average about 15 feet above the level of the Trinity standard of high-water.

"The stone continues to be supplied in great abundance from the neighbourhood of Austin, in Yorkshire, for the external masonry, and there is no deficiency of supply of a stone which has recently been employed, from Caen, in Normandy, for the internal masonry. The contractors have increased their number of hands at the quarry to about 300 men, and have provided additional tackle, horses, &c., by which, and other arrangements, the supply of stone for the future will be even still more certain and abundant than it has hitherto been. The work executed and the contractors' arrangements for the progress of it at the building still continue to merit my entire approbation.

"CHARLES BARRY.

"Westminster, August 12, 1843."

METROPOLIS IMPROVEMENTS.

In our last report we stated the progress which had been made in purchasing the interests in the property in the several lines of improvement authorized to be made under the Acts 3 and 4 Vict. c. 87, and 4 Vict. c. 12; and we have now to state, that on those several lines, up to the 5th of January last, we have completed purchases to the amount, in the whole, of 300,755*l.* 5s. 8d., and have contracted for further purchases, amounting, in the whole, to 194,641*l.* 13s. 6d.; viz.—

1. In the line from Oxford-street to Holborn we have completed purchases to the amount of 166,851*l.* 12s. 10d., and we have contracted for further purchases to the amount of 15,906*l.* 15s.

2. In the line from Bow-street to Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, we have completed purchases to the amount of 35,464*l.* 11s., and have contracted for further purchases to the amount of 26,485*l.*

3. In the line from the London Docks to Spitalfields Church we have completed purchases to the amount of 44,157*l.* 16s., and have contracted for further purchases to the amount of 71,102*l.* 18s 6d.

4. In the line from Coventry-street to Long-acre we have completed purchases to the amount of 54,281*l.* 5s. 10d., and have contracted for further purchases to the amount of 78,477*l.*

5. In the line from East Smithfield to Rosemary-lane we have not completed any purchase, but we have contracted for purchases to the amount of 2,670*l.*

A statement is appended to the report shewing our receipt and expenditure in respect of monies applicable to these improvements, by which it appears, that of the sum of 500,000*l.*, mentioned in our last report to have been borrowed of the Equitable Assurance Company for the purposes of these improvements, upon the security of certain portions of the land revenue of the Crown in the county of Middlesex, there remained a balance of 166,918*l.* 1s. 10d. on the 5th of January last.

THE PARKS.—KENSINGTON, REGENT'S PARK, &c.

It having been deemed expedient that the Crown should possess the freehold of the property to a certain distance immediately eastward and westward of the new entrance from the Knightsbridge-road into Hyde Park (now called the Albert Gate), for the purpose of obtaining and exercising a controlling power as to the style and character of the buildings to be erected on the ground adjacent to that new entrance, we have to report, that agreements have been entered into for such intended purchases, and for letting to Mr. T. Cubitt the disposable building-ground eastward and westward of the new entrance.

We have also to report that, under the powers given by the same Act, we have agreed for the purchase of the three houses in the High-street at Kensington required for opening the intended new communication between Kensington and Bayswater; which not only forms an essential part of the plan for letting for villas the site of the late Royal kitchen-garden at Kensington, but will be a great accommodation to the rapidly increasing population in that district.

In furtherance of that plan, a new sewer for the drainage of the intended houses has been nearly completed; but, owing probably to a very great suspension of building speculations which has existed during the past year, we have as yet agreed to let only two out of the thirty-three sites designed for new buildings to be erected on this ground.

It was mentioned in our last report, that the value of this ground to be let on building leases would be sufficient to form a fund for acquiring and establishing a new kitchen-garden, to be attached to Windsor Castle, as well as for the improvement of other royal kitchen-gardens; and that approved plans for forming such new kitchen-garden on part of the Crown's estate at Frogmore were then in progress.

Under the Act which authorized these arrangements, the monies required for "forming, improving, laying out, planting, and enclosing this royal kitchen garden, and in erecting, making, and completing all requisite houses, buildings, walls, sewers, drains, and other works connected therewith," have in the mean time been defrayed out of the land revenues of the Crown, as the funds to arise from the value of the late kitchen-garden at Kensington have not, for the reasons before mentioned, yet become available for this service.

The new bridges for connecting the Regent's Park with that portion of the Primrose-hill estate which, under the authority of the 5th & 6th of Victoria, c. 78, we had lately purchased from the Provost and Fellows of Eton College, having been completed and open to the public since the date of our last report, we are now in negotiation with the lessee of the college, with a view to the purchase of his interest, which will not expire till the year 1859; and if we fail in obtaining such terms as shall appear to be reasonable, it is our intention to avail ourselves of the powers of the Act in question, to have the value assessed by a jury.

Since the passing of the Act of 4 & 5 Vict., cap. 27, which vested in us all the requisite powers for acquiring the lands intended to form a new park in the eastern part of the metropolis, we have agreed for the purchase of the freehold interests in 101 acres, out of 290 acres comprised in the plan, and authorized by the said Act to be purchased for forming such new park; and having given the proper notice to all the parties whose lands or interests will be required, we are proceeding as expeditiously as possible to complete the purchases of all the still outstanding freehold interests, before we begin to deal with those of lessees, sub lessees, or occupiers; and for the present the monies set apart for this service remain invested in Exchequer-bills.

The general statement of income and expenditure of the monies under our management, and forming the "New Street Fund," is annexed to the report.

The payments into the Exchequer out of the "Growing produce," or surplus yearly rents, arising from the land revenues of the Crown, amounted, within the year ended 5th January, 1843, to the sum of 133,000*l.*

The balances of the different accounts standing in our names, and in the hands of receivers, deputy-surveyors, and other officers, on the 5th of January, 1843, amounted to 94,207*l.* 15s. 8d.

POOR LAW.

The Report of the Poor Law Commissioners to Sir James Graham, on the Law concerning the Maintenance of Bastards, dated the 31st day of January, 1844.

To the Right Honourable Sir James Graham, Bart.

Poor Law Commission Office,
Somerset House, 31 January, 1844.

SIR,—We take the liberty of submitting to you a Report on the present condition of the law concerning the maintenance of bastard children, with reference to the Bill for making some further amendments in the Poor Laws, which her Majesty's Government intend, we believe, to introduce into Parliament during the approaching session.

The remarks which we feel it our duty to lay before you will be contained within a narrow compass, and will be limited almost exclusively to the period subsequent to 1834, the year of the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76).

The law concerning the maintenance of bastards is, so far as it is connected with the poor laws, exclusively of statutory origin. The Commissioners of Poor Law Inquiry have deduced its history down to the year 1834 (Report, edit. 8vo., p. 165—178), and have shown, by copious evidence, the manner of its practical operation, as it had been established at that time.

It is needless for us to repeat the perspicuous explanation of the Commissioners of Inquiry; we will merely state that the purpose of the law, as it then stood, was to indemnify the parish for the cost of the relief given by it to a bastard child, by enabling it to compel the putative father to contribute to the child's maintenance; but that the operation of the law was to enable the mother to recover from the putative father a weekly payment which the parish transferred to her as of course. The parish went even further, for it often guaranteed to the mother the payment ordered by the justices; and if the father omitted to pay, the parish made the money good. "Whatever is received by the man," say the Commissioners of Inquiry, "is paid over by the parish to the woman; and in almost every case the parish pays to the woman the sum, whatever it may be, that has been charged on the man, whether paid by him or not."—(Page 167). In form, therefore, the proceeding was against the putative father for the indemnification of the parish, and the mother was not a material party to it; but in substance, it was a proceeding of the mother against the putative father, the benefit of which acrued to her, and to which the parish was little more than a nominal party, except when it made good the father's default. It was, in truth, an action of the mother against the putative father for a contribution towards the expenses of their common child, in which, by a fiction of law, the parish was plaintiff.

The Commissioners of Inquiry set forth the various evils resulting from the law as thus administered; and they recommended that the mother of a bastard should be rendered liable for its maintenance, but that she should be exempted from punishment under 30 Geo. 3, c. 51, and that all enactments charging the putative father of a bastard should be repealed. (Report, pp. 346—351.)

The Bill for amending the Poor Laws, as introduced into Parliament in the session of 1834, was framed in accordance with these suggestions; but a clause authorizing the making of orders of affiliation in petty sessions was introduced into the Bill in the House of Commons. In the House of Lords, the Bill was amended, in the manner in which it ultimately received the Royal Assent. (See ss. 72—76.) According to the Act as thus altered, the parish might apply to the quarter sessions for an order upon the putative father; but the proceeding was of such a nature, and was accompanied with so many onerous conditions, that it could not be extensively available.

The effects of this mode of legislation soon began to be felt. In April, 1835, the magistrates for the county of Nottingham, assembled in general quarter sessions, transmitted to Lord John Russell, then her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the home department, a memorial respecting the recent alterations of the Bastardy Law, in which (after having expressed their opinion that the liability of the mother to maintain her bastard, and the exemption of the putative father from imprisonment for want of securities, were wise and salutary measures), they objected to the operation of the 72nd section of the Act, which contained the principal enactments on the subject. These objections, as stated in their own words, were, "first, the very great expense of bringing all the parties and their witnesses to the general quarter sessions, however distant, instead of the nearest petty sessions; secondly, the very great difficulty of obtaining corroborative evidence; thirdly, the want of power of charging the defendant with costs, in case of the parish officer succeeding in obtaining an order of filiation; fourthly, the payment of 'full costs' to the defendant without limitation of amount, if the order is not made; fifthly, the impossibility in most cases of compelling obedience to the order, from want of goods to seize, or wages to attach, and from want of power to attach the person in default. (First Annual Report of the Poor Law Commissioners, Appendix, p. 358, ed. 8vo.) As remedies for these evils, the magistrates of the county of Nottingham proposed—

1. That the putative father should be permitted to appeal to the quarter sessions on giving security for costs; but that where there was no defence and no objection, the case should be decided by the magistrates at the nearest petty sessions.

2. That the person of the putative father should be attachable in default of payment, and that his liability should continue as long as the child was chargeable, but no longer.

By the direction of Lord John Russell, this memorial was referred to the Poor Law Commissioners, who reported upon it shortly afterwards to his lordship. Their report (dated 13th May, 1835) states, that with respect to the four first objections in the memorial (cited above), "It must be observed, that as the change in the law, which transferred the jurisdiction in bastardy cases from the petty to the general quarter sessions, necessarily produces increase of expense, and increase of trouble to all parties, the legislature must be presumed to have contemplated these obvious results. The giving of full costs to the person charged, and none against him, must be held also to indicate that the object of the legislature was to impede, rather than encourage, the application to quarter sessions, and, by so doing, to conform partially to the recommendation of the Commissioners of Inquiry, that the remedy against the supposed father should be abolished altogether." With respect to the fifth objection, the Commissioners remark, that "the want of power to attach the person was deliberately established by the legislature, under the impression that all severe proceedings against the father might be used as a means of compelling a marriage where the man was reluctant; and it is apparent that the imprisonment of the father, whether immediate or after default of payment, would always be an evil, from the occurrence of which he might relieve himself by marriage." After some further remarks, they proceed to say, "The expediency, therefore, or the inexpediency of making the proposed alteration in the law, depends altogether on the determination it may be thought right to take on the main question at issue. Is or is it not desirable to revert to the principle on which the bastardy laws stood prior to the Poor Law Amendment Act? Or is it better to follow out the recommendations contained in the Poor Law Report, and abandon orders of affiliation altogether."

With respect, however, to the probable success of the indirect means for discouraging affiliation, adopted in the Poor Law Amendment Act, the Commissioners proceed to observe as follows: "It should be borne in mind, that though more money may be expended in the applications to the magistrates at quarter sessions than can ever be recovered from the fathers of the children, it does not seem likely that the practice will soon yield to the discouragement to which it is exposed.

"The mother of the child endeavours by every means in her power to induce the overseers to make the application; with the overseers themselves such applications have become habitual, and with them the necessity of making them is hardly a matter of doubt.

"The prevailing wish to inflict, if possible, some punishment on the father of the child influences the judgment and opinion of all the parties interested, and the overseers themselves (with whom the decision as to the appeal mainly rests) are, in many instances, not liable to any considerable share of the expense to be incurred by the prosecution. There appears to be no ground for expecting, therefore, that the practice of applying to the magistrates at quarter sessions for orders of affiliation will be speedily and voluntarily abandoned.

Whenever consulted on the subject, the Commissioners have thought it their duty to point out the certainty of expense and inconvenience, and the little chance which exists of indemnification, by resorting to the court of quarter sessions."

They add, however: "When unions shall be established, and the workhouse system be brought into operation, the bastardy clauses in the Poor Law Amendment Act will, it may be hoped, in great measure, fall into desuetude; but until those arrangements are completed, the operation of the Act will be justly liable to the objections so clearly stated by Mr. Rolleston, and to which in fact all legislative enactments are liable, which, instead of pointing at once to their object, are designed to accomplish it by indirect means."

The same course of remark is followed up in the First Annual Report of the Commissioners (dated 8th August, 1835, pp. 58—61). In this Report the Commissioners state their opinion that in order to remove the remaining evils of the Bastardy Laws, it would be desirable to repeal all the statutory provisions under which proceedings can be taken by the parish against the putative father. "The ground (the Commissioners there observe) most strongly urged for the process against the father is founded on the notion that it may serve as a means of punishing the seducer. We participate in the feelings of detestation of the crime of seduction; but the principle that Poor Law administration should be the administration of relief alone, cannot be departed from by the introduction of any thing having a view to punishment, without at the same time creating far greater evils than those which it is intended to repress."

Some remarks tending to show that the practice of affiliation was gradually diminishing under the influence of the Act are made in the Second Annual Report of the Commissioners (dated 17th August, 1836, pp. 17—19); and the following passage there occurs: "There are no clauses in the Act, which, in comparison with their importance, have occasioned so little correspondence with the office as those which relate to bastardy. We occasionally receive letters containing inquiries as to the mode of relieving bastards born before the passing of the Act. More frequently we receive complaints that the expense which a parish is put to by applying to the quarter sessions for an order of affiliation is so great, that it is not worth while to incur it. To these statements we can only reply, that we believe this to be the result which the Legislature intended to produce."

The law relating to bastardy was one of the subjects which occupied the attention of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, which reported on the operation of the Poor Law Amendment Act, in August, 1838. After adverting to the recommendations of the Commissioners of Inquiry on the maintenance of bastards, and also to the report of the Poor Law Commissioners on the Nottinghamshire memorial, they proceed to state as follows:

"Your Committee are disposed to agree with the general views expressed on this subject by the Commissioners of Inquiry, and by the Poor Law Commissioners; they think it desirable that relief to the poor should be mixed up as little as possible with matters which seem to be more properly and directly connected with the administration of justice; and that relief to the mothers of bastard children, and to the children themselves, should be granted or refused on considerations arising out of their necessities, and not on any other grounds, or with a view to other objects; and if objections are entertained to the impunity of the man, it would appear to be desirable that the woman should be authorised to appeal to some easily accessible and inexpensive tribunal, such as has been suggested by Mr. Power, for redress in cases of seduction, or of breach of promise of marriage. This would, in the opinion of your Committee, be free from some of the objections to which all parochial interference in these questions is liable; and they have agreed to the following resolution:

"That it is the opinion of the committee, that many of the abuses arising under the former administration of the laws relating to bastardy have been corrected by the clauses in the Poor Law Amendment Act relating to this subject, an end having been put to the compulsory marriages, and the facilities to perjury, formerly prevalent; but that the remedy afforded by that Act leads, in many instances, to great expense in the trials in courts of quarter sessions, which are often offensive to public decency; and that the law being rendered generally inoperative by those inconveniences attending it, requires the further consideration of the legislature, especially with a view of inflicting some punishment for the crime of seduction."

The motives for retaining the system of affiliation, which were adverted to by the Commissioners in their Report on the Nottinghamshire memorial, continued to exercise so much influence, that the obstacles to obtaining orders in bastardy, created by the provisions of the Poor Law Amendment Act, instead of repressing applications for orders, produced irritation and complaints; and on the 23rd of July, 1839, Lord John Russell introduced a Bill for transferring the power of making orders in bastardy from the quarter to the petty sessions. The Bill thus introduced became the Act of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, which, after reciting that "it is expedient to give more speedy and effectual means for obtaining orders upon the putative fathers of bastard children for their support and maintenance," proceeds to enable any two justices in petty session to make such orders.

This Act indicated an entire change in the views of Parliament with respect to orders of affiliation for the indemnity of the parish. Instead of discouraging orders of affiliation by indirect means, it gave facilities for obtaining them.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

COUNTY TREASURERS.—Mr. Miles, the member for East Somersetshire, has moved for a return of the abstracts of the accounts of the several county treasurers in England and Wales, for the years ending Michaelmas 1841, and Michaelmas 1842. From this return, the preparation of which must have occasioned some trouble, inasmuch as it forms a complete mass of figures, are derived the following particulars. It appears that the gross total receipts of the various county treasurers during the year ended Michaelmas 1841, amounted, in England, to 1,090,429*l*. and in Wales, to 57,982*l*. constituting a grand total, in England, in the said county treasurers during the years 1840-41, amounted, in England, to 902,823*l*. and in Wales, to 52,373*l*. or altogether to the sum of 955,197*l*. The gross total disbursements from the year 1841-42 (ending at Michaelmas in the last-mentioned year), amounted, in England, to 996,620*l*. and in Wales, to 54,808*l*. or altogether 1,051,428*l*. Thus the whole of the balances remaining in the hands of the various county treasurers of England and Wales amounted, in 1841, to 123,215*l*. and in 1842, to 86,334*l*. only.

THE MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES.—We have received three more returns of the estimates, &c. of sums required for "Miscellaneous Services" for the year ending the 31st of March, 1845 (Nos. 4, 5, and 7). No. 4 contains the estimates under the head of "Education, Science, and Art." The sum total required for the ensuing year under this head amounts to 256,260*l*., exhibiting an increase, compared with the year 1843, of 35,793*l*. and one, compared with 1842, of 45,371*l*. Of this amount 40,000*l*. will be appropriated to public education in Great Britain, and 72,000*l*. to public education in Ireland; 4,411*l*. to schools of designs; 5,188*l*. to the University of London; 7,380*l*. to universities, &c. in Scotland; 8,928*l*. to the Roman Catholic College in Ireland; 6,850*l*. to the Royal Dublin Society; 37,987*l*. to the British Museum establishment; 46,030*l*. to the Museum buildings, and 3,245*l*. to purchases; 1,500*l*. to the National Gallery; 7,235*l*. to scientific works and experiments; 1500*l*. for monuments to Sir Sydney Smith, Lord Exmouth, and Lord De Saumarez, besides other items. No. 5 contains the estimates required under the head of "Colonial, Consular, and other Foreign services." The total amount demanded is 379,651*l*., exhibiting a decrease, compared with 1843, of 46,961*l*. and one, compared with 1842, of 33,034*l*. No. 7 contains the estimates for "especial and temporary objects." The sum total required under this head for the current year amounts to 85,927*l*.; exhibiting a decrease, compared with 1843, of 29,239*l*. and the enormous decrease, compared with the year 1842, of 235,471*l*. The only items for this year are as follow, viz. 5000*l*. for the town-land survey of Ireland, 2,997*l*. for the navigation of the river Shannon, 1,330*l*. for the British ambassador's residence in Paris, 10,000*l*. for the British ambassador's residence in Constantinople, 50,000*l*. for steam navigation to India, and 16,000*l*. for militia and volunteers in Canada. The dissolution of various public commissions, and the restoration of tranquillity in Canada and the east of Europe, &c. have mainly contributed to reduce these estimates.

DRUNKENNESS.—Mr. Hume has moved for a return of the number of persons taken into custody for drunkenness and for disorderly conduct by the metropolitan police, from 1831 to 1843; also, since the establishment of the new police force in the city. This return has been printed with too little regard to the feelings of Father Mathew, whose mind will doubtless be horrified by the statistics therein exhibited. It appears that the numbers taken into custody for the due offence of drunkenness amounted, in 1831, to 31,353, of whom 11,605 were females; in 1832, to 32,636 (including 12,332 females); in 1833, 29,880, of whom 11,612 were females; in 1834, 19,779, of whom 7,100 only were females; in 1835, 21,794, of whom 7,253 were females; in 1836, 22,728, of whom 6,861 were females; in 1837, 21,426, of whom 7,405 were females; in 1838, 21,237, of whom 6,941 were females; in 1839, 21,269, of whom 7,317 were females; in 1840, 16,505, of whom 5,842 were females; in 1841, 15,006, of whom 5,123 were females; in 1842, 12,338, of whom 4,350 were females; and in 1843, 10,890, of whom 4,148 were females. The total amount of the above 13 years gives the number of 276,841, of whom 98,149 were "ladies," and 178,692 "gentlemen;" the population having been in the years 1831 and 1832 1,515,585, and according to the census of 1841 2,068,107 (including, we presume, the suburban districts, as the population of the metropolis is generally considered at present to number about 1,800,000 souls). The total number of persons taken into custody by the police for "disorderly conduct" from the year 1831 to 1843 (both inclusive) amounts to 156,095, of whom 70,323 were males, and 85,772 females. Thus, whilst the "gentlemen" have the advantage as far as drunkenness is concerned, the "ladies" have the decided superiority in point of "disorderly conduct." The number of persons taken into custody for the above-mentioned offences against public order and decency, since the establishment of the new police force in the city, amounted in 1840 to 7,260, in 1841 to 3,961, in 1842 to 3,099, and in 1843 to 4,830; the population of the city being estimated by Mr. Commissioner Harvey to have been in 1840, 124,876; and in 1843, 125,273.

CONVICT HULK ESTABLISHMENTS.—The report of J. H. Capper, esq. printed by order of the House of Commons on the 8th of April, adverts to several changes which have been effected in these departments, such as the breaking up of the establishment on board "the Euryalus hulk, heretofore used as a separate place of confinement for juvenile offenders, stationed in the River Medway, the boys having been disposed of by transportation or otherwise," and the land and Wales, of 1,078,412*l*. The total receipts during the year ended Michaelmas 1842, amounted, in England, to the sum of 1,083,974*l*. and in Wales to 53,788*l*. making altogether the sum total of 1,137,762*l*. The gross total disbursements of the sending 200 convicts to work on the fortifications at Gibraltar. At the Bermuda station, the convicts, it appears, suffered severely in the autumn of last year from an epidemic which raged throughout the Bermudas. "On the 1st of January, 1843, there were 3,614 prisoners on board the respective hulks in England; since which period, 2,204 have been received, 2,320 have been transported to Van Diemen's Land and Norfolk Island, 330 have been sent to Bermuda, 100 to Gibraltar, 113 have died, 882 have been discharged, and 2,073 remained on board the several hulks on the 1st of January last."

By accounts which are appended to the report, it appears that that the total expense of the convict hulk establishment at home during the year ended 31st of December, 1843 (Portsmouth, Gosport, Devonport, Chatham, Woolwich, and Deptford stations), was

was	£45,582	3	7
Total amount of the earnings of the several ships	55,692	2	0
Showing a surplus of receipts of .	£10,109	18	5
The expense of a similar establishment at Bermuda, from the 1st of July, 1842, to the 30th of June, 1843 (St. George's and Ireland Island stations), was	£20,050	10	6½
Amount of earnings of the three ships	30,277	8	0
Showing a surplus of receipt of .	£10,226	17	5½

The reports of the various chaplains are highly gratifying as to the general demeanour of the convicts, especially during the hours of Divine service.

THE YEOMANRY.—By a Parliamentary return, we find that there were no corps or detachments of Yeomanry Cavalry, called out in aid of the civil power in the year 1840. In 1842, the King's Cheshire, of Chester, consisting of 10 troops, and the Sherwood Rangers, Nottingham, 3 troops, were on duty one day; and the Queen's Own Royal, Stafford, consisting of 9 troops, had 2 troops on duty 4 days. In 1843, the following were on duty:—Ayrshire, 6 troops, 71 days; King's Cheshire, Chester, 10 troops, 28 days; Derby and Chadderden, 1 troop, 11 days; Radborne, Derby, 1 troop, 5 days; Gloucestershire, 8 troops, a portion of 1 troop only on duty 1 day; Upper Ward, Lanark, 4 troops, 34 days; Duke of Lancaster's, 3 troops, 20 days; Leicestershire, 10 troops, 3 only on duty, 10 days; Castlemartin, Pembroke, 3 troops, 25 days; North Salopian, 8 troops, 3 only on duty 1 day, and 2 of the South Salopian on duty 2 days; Ilminster, Somerset, 1 troop, 2 days; Queen's Own Royal, Staffordshire, 11 troops, 25 days; Warwickshire, 6 troops, 3 days; Westmoreland, 5 troops, 3 only on duty 9 days; Queen's Own, Worcestershire, 10 troops, 71 days; Yorkshire Hussars, 10 troops, 14 days; and South-west York, 12 troops, 6 of which were on duty 6 days.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES, &c.—The estimates (No. 6) of the sum required for superannuation and retired allowances, and gratuities for charitable and other purposes, for the year ending on the 31st day of March 1845, have just been laid upon the table of the House of Commons. The gross total amount of these estimates for the current year is 190,539*l*. exhibiting a decrease, compared with the year 1843, of 1,767*l*. and a decrease, compared with the preceding year, 1842, of 4,852*l*.; the amounts for these years having been respectively, 192,306*l*. and 195,391*l*. Of the above amount 190,539*l*. the sum of 86,937*l*. is required for superannuation and retired allowances; 6,200*l*. for Toulonnais and Corsican emigrants, Dutch naval officers' widows, and American loyalists, &c.; 1,850*l*. for the Vaccine Establishment; 3,000*l*. for the Refuge for the Destitute Establishment; 12,100*l*. for Polish Refugees and distressed Spaniards; 4,932*l*. for miscellaneous charges, formerly charged on the civil list; 2,154*l*. for miscellaneous charges, formerly charged on the hereditary revenue of Scotland; 6,767*l*. for the Foundling Hospital of Dublin; 13,429*l*. for the Dublin House of Industry; 1,000*l*. for the Female Orphan House in Dublin; 2,500*l*. for the Westmoreland Lock Hospital in Dublin; 1,000*l*. for the Lying-in Hospital of Dublin; 1,500*l*. for Dr. Steeven's Hospital; 3,000*l*. for the Fever Hospital in Cork-street, Dublin; 500*l*. for the Hospital of Incurables in that city; 700*l*. for the Board of Charitable Bequests; 35,630*l*. for Nonconforming and other ministers in Ireland; and 7,340*l*. for the Concordatum Fund and other charities and allowances in Ireland.

WILL OF LORD ABINGER.—Administration (with the will annexed) of the late Lord Abinger, Chief Judge of the Exchequer, has just passed the seal of the Prerogative Court to his eldest son, now Lord Abinger, to whom he has bequeathed the whole of his personal estate. To his wife, Lady Abinger, he gives "a certain sum settled on her on my marriage," and directs his executor to augment that sum by the sale of property and stock in the Bank; but, strange to say, in the will (which is in his lordship's own handwriting, and extremely short), no executor is appointed. To his "esteemed friend, Mr. Parkinson, of the firm of Farrar and Co. 100*l*. as a token of my esteem, free of legacy duty." He states, "I have given no legacies to servants, leaving their reward to the consideration of my son." These are the only legacies, and the property is sworn under 18,000*l*.

By the will of Sir Charles Wentworth, who died suddenly at Cawsand, in Devonshire, last week, universally beloved and respected, his cousin, Mrs. Gore, will succeed to the family property, with the exception of the estate of Wentworth-hills, near Halifax, bequeathed to the Hon. Charles Wentworth Fitzwilliam, and the family portraits and rings of the late Marquess Rockingham, to his relatives, Earl Fitzwilliam and Viscount Milton. The baronetcy is extinct, Sir Charles having died unmarried.

ATTORNEYS.—136 gentlemen have given notice of their intention to apply, on the last day of the present term, to be admitted to practise as attorneys in Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench. There are also 25 notices of application for a renewal of certificates to practise, and 5 to be admitted by judges' orders, making a total of 166.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—It is rumoured in Westminster-hall that Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Butt, of the Western Circuit, are likely to be promoted to the dignity of Queen's Counsel.—Standard.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled,

The humble petition of the undersigned Attorneys and Solicitors, residing in the City of York, sheweth,

That your petitioners view with satisfaction the Bill now depending in your honourable House for the more easy recovery of small demands in the County Courts of England, inasmuch as it is in furtherance of the principle of bringing home justice to every man's door, and will afford to the people the means of obtaining a settlement of demands of trivial amount at little cost.

But although your petitioners cordially approve of the principle of the measure, they most strongly protest against the 75th clause, by which it is intended to prevent any Barrister or Attorney from being heard, as of right, in the proposed courts, and to require professional services to be given for a most inadequate remuneration. They most respectfully submit to your honourable House that, for the benefit of the suitors themselves, such a remuneration should be allowed for professional assistance as will secure the services of persons of reputable character, and that such remuneration should be made costs in the cause.

Your petitioners therefore pray that the Bill, with the 75th clause either expunged or amended, may receive the support of your honourable House, for the purpose of being passed into a law.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the undersigned Attorneys and Solicitors practising in the city of York, sheweth,

That the attention of your petitioners has been directed to a Bill now before your honourable House, intituled "An Act to consolidate the jurisdiction and improve the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Wales, and for otherwise altering and amending the Law in certain matters ecclesiastical."

Your petitioners observe with satisfaction, that the very objectionable centralization of all the business of the country Ecclesiastical Courts, in London, is abandoned.

Your petitioners cordially approve of the maintenance of the provincial court at York, and the diocesan courts, which are of great local convenience, particularly as depositories for wills, and in granting probates and administrations, as to such local courts the public have much cheaper and readier access than they can have to any metropolitan court.

That the inhabitants of the city of York, and of the neighbourhood for many miles around, are in the habit of personally searching for and perusing wills in the registry there, at the small cost of one shilling for each will, whilst, if a metropolitan registry were established, they would not be able to get the least information respecting the wills of their deceased relatives or friends, without an expense of at least twenty times as much, for professional correspondence, agency, and office fees, and the result would be the same as respects other dioceses.

That your petitioners highly approve of the proposed enactments improving the practice and extending the jurisdiction of the provincial court at York, and the diocesan courts.

That it appears to your petitioners to be desirable that the wills of the community should be deposited in places as near as practicable to the properties to which they relate, and to the residences of the parties interested under them.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray, that the Bill, and particularly the clauses continuing the provincial court at York, and the diocesan courts generally, may be passed into a law.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTH WALES CIRCUIT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the report of the case Reg. v. Jones, tried at the last Presteign Assizes, which appeared in your last number, there are whimsical mistakes in the names of the parties; and in that and the following reported case, Reg. v. Harris, the residence of each attorney is given as his surname.

Having been the attorney in the former prosecution, I have, I think, a right to explain, that correct written instructions were sent by me to the clerk of indictments as to the value of the note stolen from the prosecutor, as well as to the value of the other moneys mentioned in the indictment; and the variance as to the note was not detected until after the grand jury had been discharged.

The confusion exhibited by parties having business at the above assizes was mainly caused by the able but rather eccentric judge suddenly arriving at Presteign, and commencing the business, one day sooner than he ought to have done. In consequence of such arrival, the county had to be scoured in the space of a few hours, in order to bring jurymen, witnesses, and others up in some reasonable time.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
E. WILLIAMS.

ESTATES FOR SALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have often intended to suggest to you, and through you to the readers of the LAW TIMES, but particularly those connected with the sale or disposition of large estates in the midland, western, southern, and other favourite districts of England, that your Journal affords a most desirable medium or channel for often procuring a purchaser of some "choice" or "fancy" estate or property in such localities. There are parties in the manufacturing districts constantly on the look-out for such, who are rolling in, or, to use a common but very vulgar expression, who actually "stink" of money or wealth they cannot employ.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
A YORKSHIRE ATTORNEY.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The editorial remarks in No. 55 of the LAW TIMES on the extraordinary acquittal of Mary Sealey at the late Somerset Assizes must, I am sure, have excited surprise in many of your readers. The practical good sense of the public has treated with indifference the attempts of the speculative philanthropists of the day to induce the Legislature to abolish capital punishment. But it is a different thing when the same views are acknowledged in a journal which professes to be the organ of the Legal Profession—a body of men eminently practical, and opposed to visionary schemes. Sensible of the importance of the subject, and of the influence which the LAW TIMES is daily acquiring, I would protest against its being understood that the body of the Profession has arrived at the conclusion that capital punishment is "forbidden by reason and inconsistent with Christianity," or that it questions the right of the civil power to inflict it.

That it has been inflicted in times past to the outrage of reason and Christianity will be readily allowed; and every humane person must rejoice that the cases to which it is now applicable are few in number, and that in some even of those cases the criminal's life is generally spared in the absence of aggravating circumstances.

The question resolves itself into two parts: whether the civil power has a right to inflict capital punishment; and whether the exercise of such right is expedient.

With regard to the former, Blackstone remarks on murder—"The words of the Mosaic law (over and above the general precept to Noah, that 'Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed') are very emphatical in prohibiting the pardon of murderers—'Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer who is guilty of death, but he shall surely be put to death: for the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.'" And it is remarkable that in the old form of prosecution for murder by appeal, the king himself was excluded the power of pardoning; so that he could not imitate the Polish monarch, who thought proper to remit the penalty to his nobility in an edict with that arrogant preamble "Nos, divini juris rigorem moderantes." He at length did not doubt the divine sanction given to capital punishment. Christianity also confers its sanction; for St. Paul, without any mark of disapprobation, recognized the right as existing in the head of the Roman state, where he says, "He is the minister of God . . . if thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain." The sword is not for moderate correction, but for inflicting death. I am not aware that the church has in any age ever protested against the assumption of this power by the state.

If the infliction of capital punishment "is forbidden by reason," surely some of the heathen legislators of old—those master-minds, the Solons and Lycurguses—must have heard some faint whisperings of her voice calling on them to spare the parricide, the assassin, and the traitor! But no! strange to say, these inexorable men shew pity only for the innocent citizen; and parricide, assassin, and traitor are consigned to destruction! But what say the poets, who cultivated the true and the beautiful? The philosophers who studied the καλοι and the πρέπον—did none of them hear reason's voice? Alas! not one! All are found in an unnatural league against the guilty. Homer's ideal wise man slays without compunction his rebel subjects; while Pallas herself shakes her ægis in the wretches' faces. Ovid exclaims, "Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum, ne pars sincera trahatur," and posterity approves the saying.

Are we not, then, warranted in inferring that capital punishment, so far from being opposed to reason, finds its sure ground and sanction in reason alone, and needs not to be supported by an appeal to revelation? It was on this ground that Sir James Mackintosh put it when, in 1819, he obtained a select committee "to consider of so much of the criminal laws as relates to capital punishments in felonies." "Neither is it my intention," said he, in his speech on that occasion, "to propose the abolition of the punishment of death. I hold the right of inflicting that punishment to be that part of the right of self-defence with which societies, as well as individuals, are endowed."

There are two eventful periods in the history of the world, in which a disposition prevailed to abolish capital punishment—in the decline of the Roman republic, and on the eve of the French Revolution. The philanthropists of those days thought they could direct the movement they were commencing; but the work was taken out of their hands, and the sword and the guillotine were their reward.

With respect to the second branch of the question, as to the expediency of abolishing capital punishments, it rests with the abolitionists to shew the inexpediency of retaining it; because, until that is done, the Legislature would be rash indeed in slighting the lessons of the past, the universal consent of all ages, and divine and human sanctions, for the sake of trying an experiment, the effect of which might be irreparable mischief to the social system. But the abolitionists say, "The system of severity has been tried, and has failed to repress crime." In answer—no one can contend that crime will ever be entirely repressed by any system. All that we can expect from legislation is, that the terror of the law will be a salutary restraint on the multitude, though it may be inoperative on a few. It is to be apprehended that the removal of that restraint would be followed by a fearful outbreak of violence; and this consideration alone forbids hazarding the experiment.

To assert that men are not checked by fear, is to betray an extreme ignorance of human nature, and of the sanction by which capital punishment is enjoined in the Scriptures; as, for example, "The man that will do presumptuously . . . even that man shall die; and all the people shall hear and fear, and do no more presumptuously."—Deut. xvii. 12, 13.

The fact that a jury has, in the face of the clearest evidence, as is alleged, brought in a verdict of not guilty, in an aggravated case of parricide and murder, may be a very fair argument for reviving the old proceeding against a jury by attaint (though I believe it is doubtful whether it was applicable to cases strictly criminal), but it can hardly be urged as a reason for abolishing capital punishment. Surely the men who (as it is alleged) have betrayed their sacred trust as the guardians of the public safety, should meet with public execration, instead of being held up as martyrs in the cause of humanity, who have gone ahead of our Legislature. Such go-ahead gentlemen should have their crest taken down a trifle. I trust, however, that the jury were influenced by good causes, unrepeated to the public, in giving the verdict they did.

The abolitionists urge in favour of their views that capital punishment has not for its object the reformation of the offender. But is it not to be feared that when a man has advanced so far in depravity as to be guilty of any of those acts to which the punishment of death is now attached, there is but little hope of his reformation? Surely the awful prospect of death is the only thing likely to produce a salutary effect on such a one. From the evidence given before the Criminal Law Commissioners, and published in their second report, it would appear that the idea of making the reformation of offenders the direct purpose of punishment is purely visionary; though it is a different thing to say they should not have all the means of reformation possible. While we encourage and support the excellent men who are labouring to do as much as can be done in this field, we should do well to bear in mind that early education, under the fostering care of the Church, is the only effectual remedy for the cure of our social evils. By supporting such institutions as exist for this purpose, and by doing all that lies in our power for ameliorating the condition of the lower classes, we shall most surely check the increase of crime, and be serving our generation as good citizens.

SHERIFFS' FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR, In the commencement of the table of fees promulgated by the judges, pursuant to the Statute of 1 Vict. c. 55, the charges for an arrest, mileage, and bail bond, are given.

Afterwards comes as follows.—"To the bailiffs for executing warrants on fi. fa. and ca. sa., and also the mileage on the latter."

I should be glad to have, through your columns, the opinion of some experienced practitioner, whether, upon the execution of writs of ca. sa. a sheriff can legally make the charges contained in the former part of the table as upon an arrest; or whether he is not confined to the latter charges on writs of execution, and which are one guinea not exceeding five miles, and sixpence per mile beyond that distance. The first part of the table clearly appears to me to be applicable only to bailable process, and the matter is of some consequence in practice.

I am, Sir, &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to a letter appearing in your valuable journal of Saturday last, having the name of "James Nicholson," and dated from Warrington, the 22nd April, I beg to refer you to the order issued in bankruptcy in the month of November, 1842, from which you will find that the objection, which he complains of, to receiving an affidavit in bankruptcy, because it was on the wrong-sized paper, was not a captious objection; those orders having directed that all proceedings in the several courts of bankruptcy should be written on paper of an uniform size. This order was made for the convenience of filing the several documents, and the paper required is such as is supposed to be always at hand in every solicitor's office, viz. draft paper, which I believe can be obtained from any stationer, "without having recourse to the particular stationer employed to provide the same for each particular court."

What the objection to the "heading" was, Mr. Nicholson does not state, therefore I cannot say whether it was captious or not; but, certainly, very few country solicitors are sufficiently aware of the importance of having their affidavits properly headed, which they must be, to enable the assignees to support an indictment for perjury; and, consequently, affidavits are very frequently refused because they are not technically correct in this respect.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A PRACTITIONER IN BANKRUPTCY.

Birmingham, April 28.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

The following well treats a subject of some importance. It is signed "A Clerk to Borough Justices."

As returns are now in a course of preparation with reference to Lord Worsley's motion on the subject of Justices' Clerks, and the proper mode of remunerating them, I am surprised no one has brought under public notice the disadvantage which Borough Justices' Clerks labour under, as compared with Division or County Justices' Clerks, in one very important particular; that is, the disqualification of the former to conduct prosecutions.

By the Municipal Amendment Act, 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 102, the clerk is forbidden to be directly or indirectly concerned in the prosecution of any offender committed for trial by justices to whom he shall be clerk. The consequence is, that he is entirely kept out of practice in his own court (as it were); and from never being seen there, it keeps him out of the public eye, and prejudices him in other courts, and when, nine times out of ten, he would be the most competent person to conduct prosecutions. In the mean time he frequently finds the Clerk to the Division Justices occupying the place at the Borough Sessions which ought to be occupied by himself, such Division Clerk all the time labouring under no such disqualification, and enjoying a perfect monopoly of prosecutions in his own court. This should be remedied; and either both sets of clerks put upon equal terms, or if they are to be paid by salary, which seems to be the tendency of Lord Worsley's measure, let them be made public prosecutors at a salary, such salary to be estimated according to the average number of prosecutions (during the last two or three years) resulting from commitments by the justices for whom they act as clerk, the amount of such salary to be an addition to any salary awarded to them for general business. They would then have no motive for making improper commitments, which, I presume, must have been the principle on which the law was framed, though such law has not yet extended to their brethren, the Division Justices' Clerks, for some reason not capable of explanation.

From the observations which were made in the House of Lords on Lord Worsley's motion (by Lord Lansdowne and others), and which have been noticed by some of your correspondents, it seems not unlikely the legislature will proceed in this matter in a wilful ignorance of facts. They do not seem to understand that in almost all cases the amount of costs is taken into consideration in awarding the penalty; and that in the sums stated in the returns to be for costs, the amount does not consist of Justices' Clerks fees only, but of constables' and witnesses' charges also.

As far as my own opinion goes, I do not think there will be any objection on the part of Justices' Clerks to be paid by salary, but I do think that the public business will not be better executed or attended to on that account.

A SUBSCRIBER'S ARTICLED CLERK.—We find, on inquiry at the Queen's Bench Office, that one notice must be given at the Incorporated Law Society, one at the Queen's Bench Office, Temple, and two notices are to be entered in the two books at the Judges' Chambers, Rolls Gardens; one book being kept at the chambers of the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and the other at the chambers of the four puisne judges. None need be affixed in the Queen's Bench, as stated by Mr. Archbold.

A correspondent, subscribing himself "Digest," thus notices a not unfrequent, but very unprofessional practice:—

You have, from time to time, very properly exposed the unprofessional conduct of advertising attorneys. This conduct is, I think, much less to be reprehended than a practice, pursued by some members of the profession, of personally soliciting for professional jobs. This mostly occurs at sales by auction, where these gentlemen attend expressly for the purpose of canvassing purchasers, and soliciting retainers to prepare their conveyances, holding out the lure of "doing them cheap." As the Manchester Law Society justly stands high in your columns for setting a good example in correcting professional mal-practices, I would suggest the propriety of its instituting an inquiry, for the purpose of ascertaining how far any of its members are guilty of such unprofessional and reprehensible conduct, or issuing a caution to its members against pursuing the practice alluded to.

The Law of Warrants of Attorney, Cognovits, and Consents to Judges' Orders for Judgment: with Forms. By BENJAMIN COULSON ROBINSON, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1844. O. Richards. Pp. 246.

THE branch of the law to which this little volume is devoted, although seemingly a trifling one, is in truth of great practical importance in the attorney's office, for there it is in almost daily requisition; in the great majority of cases no time can be had to consult authorities or to procure the aid of counsel; the attorney is required to advise and to act in self-reliance, while not unfrequently interests of large value are dependent upon the accuracy with which he applies the law to the matter in hand. A volume devoted to the subjects discussed in this one cannot therefore be otherwise than acceptable to the profession, to whom it will be extremely convenient to be enabled to refer in a moment to a well-arranged treatise, in which they will find the latest decisions and brief but explicit instructions for securely performing their responsible task.

It is ever the aim of all reputable practitioners to terminate an action, if it be possible, without incurring the costs of a trial, and the law has kindly permitted this to be done without depriving the party of the advantages of his suit. There are three modes by which the results of an action—that is, the benefits of a final judgment—may be secured without going through all the costly processes which conduct to that end. These are, by warrant of attorney; by cognovit; and by consent to a judge's order for judgment. These are the subjects to which this volume is devoted.

First, Mr. ROBINSON treats of Warrants of Attorney, describing successively the stamp, the parties, the consideration, the forms, the filing; then of revocation, of signing judgment, of the execution; then of the effects of bankruptcy and insolvency; and lastly, how they may be set aside.

Secondly, he considers the subject of Cognovits in precisely the same order.

Thirdly, he discusses Consents to Judgment in like manner.

An appendix supplies a number of useful forms, from which the practitioner will always be able to select one that will serve his purpose.

Such is the excellent scheme of this work; of its execution the reader shall judge by an extract with which we conclude a notice necessarily circumscribed by the demands upon space at this busy season.

Perhaps the most useful to our readers will be the subject of the ATTESTATION OF WARRANTS OF ATTORNEY AND COGNOVITS.

"Attestation.] For the prevention of fraud and injustice upon parties giving warrants of attorney and cognovits, the courts of law from an early period have made certain rules, and the legislature recently, by enactment, has interfered for their protection. The principle of such interference is to give to defendants a full knowledge of the nature of the document they are about to sign, lest they might be betrayed by ignorance or surprise into the granting a power which they could afterwards have no means of disputing; and in the spirit of this design, it was formerly required in the Common Pleas (a) that the warrant and defeazance should be read over to the party previously to their being executed, but this is no longer necessary; (b) a sufficient preventive against fraud being provided by other means. It was not formerly requisite in general that there should be an attesting witness to the warrant,(c) although, where a party was in custody in mesne process, several rules of court had directed that a warrant given by him should be void unless an attorney was present on his behalf at the time he executed it,(d) and the last of these rules ordered, contrary to what had been decided under the preceding ones, (e) that the presence of the plaintiff's attorney would not suffice.

"But by a general rule of all the Courts, R. H. 2 Wm. 4, r. 1, s. 72, it was declared, that 'no warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or cognovit actionem given by any person in custody of a sheriff or other officer upon mesne process, shall be of any force unless there be present some attorney on behalf of such person in custody, expressly named by him and attending at his request, to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit before the same is executed, which attorney shall subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution thereof, and declare himself to be attorney for the defendant, and state that he subscribes as such attorney.'

"Still this rule did not extend to persons in custody in execution,(f) nor seemingly to cases where a warrant or cognovit was given by a prisoner to any other person than to him at whose suit he was in custody;(g) until at length the 9th sect. of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, has rendered the presence of an attorney, on behalf of the defendant, imperatively necessary in all cases where warrants of attorney or cognovits are given. It enacts as follows:—

"'And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for giving every person executing a warrant of attorney to confess judgment or a cognovit actionem. due information of the nature and effect thereof, be it enacted, that from and after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, no warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognovit actionem given by any person, shall be of any force unless there shall be present some attorney of one of the superior courts on behalf of such person, expressly named by him, and attending at his request, to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit before the same is executed; which attorney shall subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution thereof, and thereby declare himself to be attorney for the person executing the same, and state that he subscribes as such attorney.'

"And to ensure the literal fulfilment of these terms, and thus prevent all latitude of construction, the tenth section goes on to state 'that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment or cognovit actionem, not executed in manner aforesaid, shall not be rendered valid by proof that the person executing the same did in fact understand the nature and effect thereof, or was fully informed of the same.'

"These sections of the statute have become so important, and the decisions under them so numerous, that it will be necessary to divide them into parts, and state at some length the cases which have been decided upon each.

"[No Warrant of Attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognovit actionem given by any person.] It seems that the latter portion of the sentence has a wider signification than the former, so as to include within it a cognovit given in ejectment, and accordingly such an instrument was set aside for want of the statutory execution (h)

"But the rule as to warrants of attorney being specifically limited to personal actions, a warrant given in ejectment has been held by Patteson, J. not within the meaning of the Act.(i)

"Some attorney of one of the superior courts.] The person attesting must be an attorney. An attorney's clerk is not sufficient.(k) But he need not be an attorney of the court in which the judgment is to be signed.(l) He must have taken out his certificate within a year.(m) It has been held that if a defendant introduce a party as his attorney, and he turns out that he is not one, the Court will not set aside the warrant he has attested.(n) But in a subsequent case, Coleridge, J. seemed to be of opinion that that judgment was founded on some fraud appearing on the part of the defendant. If he were quite innocent in the transaction, he thought the warrant ought to be vacated.(o) And, in accordance with this decision, appears to be a still later one, in which, although the Court refused to set aside the warrant, on the ground of an attesting witness introduced by the defendant, not being an attorney, the language of Tindal, C. J. seems to imply, that if the defendant had, on the face of his affidavit, clearly negatived any knowledge of the fact, the result would have been different.(p) Where defendant was in custody, it was held no valid objection to the warrant that the attorney attesting it was a prisoner.(q)

"It is suggested in a valuable book of practice(n), that 'as a subsequent section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, enacts that 'all the provisions, &c. of the Act, applicable to the courts at Westminster, shall extend to the courts of Lancaster and Durham, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions,' that a cognovit or warrant of attorney given in either of these courts may be properly attested by an attorney of such court, although not admitted in either of the courts at Westminster.' And taking into consideration the reluctance the judges have shewn to extend the construction of this section, it is probable that such may be the decision on the point, should it hereafter arise.

On behalf of such person.] The attorney must be exclusively acting on behalf of the defendant, and it must be stated expressly in the attestation that he is his attorney, and must not be left to implication.(r) The plaintiff's attorney will not suffice, although the defendant expressly assent to his acting for him also.(s) Nor must he be in any way connected with the plaintiff's case.

"Where a cognovit had been attested on behalf of the defendant by an attorney who accompanied the plaintiff's son to the defendant's house, and who subsequently carried the instrument to the Queen's Bench office to be filed, and there subscribed his name upon the back of it as the plaintiff's attorney's agent, the Court set it aside.(t)

"A defendant in the country being served with a writ by an agent of the plaintiff's attorney, offered to compromise by giving a cognovit which was prepared in town, and sent into the country for execution. The agent explained to the defendant the necessity of his having an attorney to attest it, and he said, 'Then I name you.' The agent accordingly witnessed the cognovit, and debited the defendant in his books for negociating the matter; but the Court held that the requisitions of the statute had not been complied with—Alderson, B. observing, 'This is not the impartial person intended by the Act.(u) And where an attorney usually acting on behalf of the defendant, acts on the part of the plaintiff in preparing the warrant of attorney from the former to the latter, his attestation is not sufficient.(x)

"On the execution of a warrant, one attorney only was present, and attested on behalf of defendant, having acted on previous occasions for plaintiff, and who made out his bill to plaintiff, but delivered it to defendant, and was paid by him; the Court held it bad.(y) And where an attorney was acting both for plaintiff and defendant, in a transaction in which a warrant of attorney was given, and it was attested by a clerk of the attorney, he being also an admitted attorney, the attestation was held invalid.(z)

"It seems that the mere fact of the plaintiff paying for the attendance of the attorney on the defendant's behalf is not of itself a sufficient ground for avoiding the instrument.(a)

"Expressly named by him, and attending at his request.] This part of the rule must be strictly complied with.(b)

"It has been held in some cases, that the suggestion by the plaintiff and subsequent adoption by defendant of a particular attorney, will not satisfy the words of the section(c): but it may now be considered as settled, that the mere suggestion of the plaintiff, provided the defendant had a full opportunity of adopting or rejecting the party proposed, will not avoid the warrant or cognovit. Where, for instance, on a defendant being arrested, he offered to give a cognovit, and was told that an attorney must be present at its execution, the names of two attorneys were mentioned to him, and he said it was the same to him which he took. He afterwards went with the officer to the house of one of the parties named, who saw the instrument executed, the attestation was held good.(d)

"In another case, defendant called at the office of the plaintiff's attorney for the purpose of executing the warrant, and the latter informed him that it was necessary an attorney on his behalf should attest it, the defendant replied, that he was not acquainted with one, and that he did not wish the affair known; upon which, the other mentioned an attorney named Crossley, and the defendant, without hesitation, agreed to go to his office. The clerk of the plaintiff's attorney accompanied him, and on Crossley asking him if he wished him to attest the instrument, he said he did. The attestation of Crossley was decided to be a valid one.(e)

"Three defendants went to a particular attorney named by plaintiff, and gave him instructions to prepare a joint warrant of attorney from them to plaintiff, and each of the defendants freely recognised the attorney as acting for him, the warrant was held good.(f)

"But although there is nothing objectionable in the plaintiff first naming the attorney, the defendant must still expressly employ him, and request that he will attend. Therefore, where a defendant in custody sent to his attorneys, who were not within, but their clerk attended, and having advised that a cognovit should be given, he went for an attorney to come with him to attest it: this was done with the defendant's consent; but the Court set aside the cognovit on the ground that the defendant had exercised no option in the appointment.(g) Again, where the defendant was unacquainted with an attorney, and at his request the plaintiff's attorney sent his clerk for one, who came and acted for defendant, a request to that effect being written in the margin of the cognovit, it was held bad.(h) Coleridge, J. says: 'It may happen that a person is not acquainted with any attorney who would act for him; and if I were to say that the attorney for the opposite party is not to mention the name of any one for him to select if he pleased, it might be a hardship on defendants themselves, as they might thereby be prevented from settling an action. But I must see whether the defendant had the opportunity of exercising any option in the choice of the attorney, and I think in this case he had not.' In another case, the plaintiffs employed P. an attorney, to prepare the warrant; P. called with it on defendant, and told him it must be signed in the presence of some professional man, and that he should procure Mr. S. to attest it, and the defendant accordingly went to procure S.'s attendance, but met him in the street, when P. told him they were coming to his office that he might witness the execution of a warrant of attorney. Defendant then suggested that they had better go to P.'s office, which was nearer, and they went there accordingly. S. then read it over, and explained it to defendant, and asked if he wished him to witness its execution. Defendant said he did, and it was signed and attested. P. offered to pay S. for his attendance, but he declined accepting any thing. It was held that S. was not expressly named by the defendant.(i)

"To inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant.] We have seen that the rule in the Common Pleas, requiring the warrant or cognovit to be read over to the party executing it, had been discontinued; and since the statute we are now discussing, it has been held that if the nature and effect of the instrument be explained to the defendant, the reading may be dispensed with. (k) And if defendant informs the attorney attending for him that the warrant has been read over to him and he understands it, the attorney need neither read it nor explain it to the defendant. (l) If an attorney properly appointed by a defendant on his behalf neglects his duty to his client without collusion with the plaintiff, it is no objection to the instrument that he neglects to inform his client of its nature and effect.(m)

"It may be mentioned here that the Court in one case refused to allow a judgment on an old warrant of attorney which had been executed by the defendant as a marksman, the affidavit of execution not stating that it had been read over and explained to him.(n)

"Which attorney shall subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution thereof, and thereby declare himself to be attorney for the person executing the same, and state that he subscribes as such attorney.] From the terms of the rules it was always necessary before the Act that the attorney should subscribe his name as a witness to the execution; but although some doubt had been entertained as to whether the attestation should not further state that the other requisites had been complied with,(o) yet it was pretty well settled that a mere signature of the attorney was a sufficient form of attestation to satisfy the rule;(p) but now the above clause renders it absolutely essential that he should, in addition, make a written statement, to the effect that he is attorney for the defendant, and that he subscribes as such attorney.(q)

"Thus an attestation in this form, 'Witness Geo. Edwards, defendant's attorney, named by him, and attending at his request,' was held bad, for not stating that he subscribed as such attorney.(r)

"But where the attestation was the same as in the last case, with this addition, 'and I subscribe accordingly,' Patteson, J. held it sufficient.(s)

"And another thus worded, 'Signed, sealed, and delivered by I. A. in my presence, and I subscribe myself as attorney for the said I. A. expressly named by him to attest his execution of these presents,' was also held void by Alderson, B. who observes, 'I think the witness ought to state in positive terms that he is the attorney of the party.' But Parke, B. seemed to be of a different opinion, although the point was not one involved in the decision of the case. The latter judge says, 'When the Act directs that the witness shall thereby declare himself to be an attorney, it does not say that he must do so in the attestation, but that he should subscribe his name as such attorney, and thereby, that is to say, by that act, declare himself to be such. The doubt I entertain is, whether the statute requires him to use the express words in writing, "I hereby declare."'(t) In a previous case(u) in the same court, the word 'thereby' was specifically referred to by Lord Abinger, and the decision was in accordance with the view above expressed by Alderson, B. His lordship says, 'The introduction of the word "thereby" into the statute is very important. It shews an intention to carry the rule further, by requiring that the declaration by the attorney of his being the attorney of the person executing the cognovit, and the statement that he subscribes as such attorney, should actually be part of the attestation itself. The word "thereby" seems to have been used ex industriâ to procure that form of attestation.' And accordingly an attestation in this form, 'Witnessed by me, W. P. as the attorney of the said A. B. attending at the execution hereof at his request, and expressly named by him,' was held insufficient, as well on the ground that the attorney did not sufficiently appear to be acting for the defendant in the particular transaction, as that it was not stated that he subscribed as such attorney.(x) But in a subsequent case, the following words, 'In the presence of me, J. N. the attorney of the said W. H.' was held sufficient to indicate that the attorney was duly acting as such.(y)

"It seems necessary, therefore, that the attestation should contain a specific statement that the witness is the attorney of the party executing; but this, together with the declaration of his subscribing as attorney, and the subsequent signature, are all that is required. The other directions which the statute gives—for instance, that the attorney should be named by the defendant(z)—need not be referred to specifically in the instrument; but the performance is mere matter of evidence.

"A cognovit contained two attestations; first, 'Witness J. B.;' secondly a formal and valid attestation according to the Act, and commencing 'Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence, &c.' and signed B. Rowdy. It was held that the first did not invalidate the second, and that the word signed in the latter must be taken to refer to the signature of the defendant, and not to that of the first witness.(a)

"With regard to the 10th section of the statute, it is settled that if the defendant be himself an attorney, the rule respecting an attorney's presence does not apply.(b) Coleridge, J. however, intimates that there is little chance of any other exception being allowed; as, for instance, that barristers' or attorneys' clerks should execute warrants of attorney or cognovits without the presence of an attorney on their behalf. The Act in mentioning attorneys contemplates that defendants shall possess, at the time of signing, precisely that species and amount of knowledge which attorneys are supposed capable of imparting. An attorney, himself defendant, must of course have such knowledge; but neither the terms nor the spirit of such a requisition could be satisfied by substituting the information acquired by persons in a different branch of the profession.

"If any material alteration be made in the instrument after its completion, it must be again attested with the same formalities as before. Where, by agreement between the parties, 2,000*l.* was substituted for 1,000*l.* the original amount, and defendants immediately re-attested the warrant, in the presence of the former witnesses, by retracing their signatures with a dry pen, and again delivered the instrument as their act and deed. The attorney said, 'I must go through the same formalities,' and thereupon drew a pen over the previous attestation, and over every letter of his former signature, saying, 'I inscribe myself as such attorney,' the instrument was set aside (c) In a case decided upon the old rules, it was held that a defendant in custody in Ireland, giving a warrant to confess a judgment in the Queen's Bench here, was entitled to their benefit, and the warrant not being strictly attested, it was set aside (d)

"It seems that if the attestation be originally invalid, no subsequent act of the defendant, nor any lapse of time, will waive the irregularity. And he may himself apply to set aside the judgment, although since the execution he has become bankrupt.(e) But it seems that the provision of the statute is for the benefit of the defendant only, or those claiming under him; and therefore a third party who may be prejudiced by a judgment against his debtor, cannot make the objection (f) In one case Alderson, B. observes, 'If the warrant of attorney be void under the statute, how can it be waived? You have signed a judgment without an authority. It is the same as if it had been done by a stranger.'(g) In another the judgment was signed, and execution issued, five months before the bankruptcy of the defendant, and eleven months before the application by the assignees to set the judgment and execution aside for a defective attestation; nevertheless it was granted.(h) Coleridge, J. observed, 'The words of the statute are, that "no warrant of attorney shall be of any force unless executed with the required formalities;" but if I treat this defect as a mere irregularity, and allow it to be waived by delay, the warrant must then be of force to sustain the judgment.'

"We have seen, however, that certain precedent acts of the defendant will waive the omission of some of the prescribed formalities; as, for instance, where he introduces a party as an attorney who is, in truth, not one, or where he dispenses with any explanation of the nature of the document.

"Witness to the signing and attesting.] Mr. Bagley, in his excellent practical work, recommends that there should be a second witness to the execution of the instrument, and also to the signature of the attorney, to avoid any difficulty that may arise in case the latter should be unable to make an affidavit of the execution when required."

The Law of Parochial Assessments, explained in a Practical Commentary on the Statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96. By WILLIAM GOLDEN LUMLEY, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Pp. 119. London, 1844. Shaw and Sons.

This is another publication by the indefatigable Mr. LUMLEY; and as we have no other treatise on the same subject, there cannot be a doubt that it will receive a hearty welcome from parish officers and their legal advisers. The Author is one of the Assistant Poor Law Commissioners, and thus has enjoyed opportunities of obtaining the best information relating to the construction of the statute, and the practice of assessment, which he has turned to excellent account in the pages before us.

His plan is this. He first gives the statute, and then a copious commentary on the separate sections, collecting all the decisions of the Courts, and the replies of the Poor Law Commissioners, with plain instructions for the work of assessment, aided by which, the officer can scarcely fail to perform his duty correctly. He tells him how the valuation and map are to be made; and then he describes the proceedings in an appeal, and its costs, and the amending or quashing of the rate. In an Appendix he presents a form of a contract for the survey, plan, and valuation, the regulations prescribed in regard to the making of maps, and the modern statutes relating to the rating of certain property to the poor rate.

We select a few instructive passages from this very useful volume:—

RULE OF RATING.

"Provision of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, s. 1.—The first section of the statute in the text applies to the principle of the valuation, and declares, that the rate shall be made 'upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto.' The term net is here introduced, and imports something other than the meaning above given to the terms annual value. Accordingly, the statute proceeds to define the meaning of the net annual value as follows: 'that is to say, the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent.

"The annual value of the premises is expressed by the first part of the clause; namely, the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge. The subsequent matters introduced do not affect the value of the occupation, but the actual profit received by, or resulting to, the owner of the land, and so far affect what may be considered as the net annual value. These are the deductions for repairs and insurance. . . .

"Although the Legislature thus defined, in the 1st section, the net annual value which was to be the subject of the rate, in section 2, reference is made to the gross estimated rental, in regard to the rate on compounded hereditaments; and in the form of the rate given in the schedule, there is a column for the gross estimated rental Of this term no definition or explanation is given, either in the statute or elsewhere. The meaning of the word rental is not clearly ascertained, and it is manifest that it is not properly applicable in this statute, in which apparently the better term would have been value. Upon the passing of the Act, however, the Poor Law Commissioners expressed their opinion upon the meaning of the statute by giving definitions of gross rent and net rent. .

"Gross rent they define in their circular letter, dated 3rd March, 1837, to be 'the rent which would be paid to a landlord, who himself undertakes to pay all the usual tenants' rates and taxes with which the hereditaments or premises rented by the tenant are chargeable, together with tithe commutation rent-charge, the expense of upholding the buildings in tenantable repair, insurance against loss by fire, and any other expenses (if any shall exist) necessary to maintain such hereditaments in a state to command such gross rent.'

"Net rent they define to be 'the amount which is received by, or which remains clear in the hands of a landlord after all such taxes, charges, and expenses as are above enumerated shall have been provided for.'

"Experience shews that there are three classes of cases upon this subject, in respect of the relation between the landlord and the tenant:

"1. The landlord may agree to pay all the tenant's rates and taxes chargeable upon the premises, to repair the same and to insure the property.

"2. The landlord may agree to repair and insure; leaving the tenant to pay the tenant's rates and taxes.

"3. The landlord may require his tenant to repair and insure, as well as to pay all the rates and taxes levied on the latter. . . . .

"But, as to obtain that which the statute calls the net annual value, the amount of the repairs and the insurance must be deducted from the gross rent, the rent paid in the third case, would, upon the supposition that it has been adjusted according to all due proportions, be the net annual value contemplated by the statute, being the clear profit in the hands of the landlord.

"It seems therefore, that, to obtain the gross rental, the intrinsic value of the land must be estimated, to this must be added the amount of tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, together with a probable estimate for repairs and insurance. The aggregate would be the gross rental, or, as it should have been termed, the gross annual value.

"Again, to obtain the net annual value, from this gross rental must be deducted the tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, and the probable estimate for repairs and insurance.

"It is sometimes thought that these deductions are to be made from the rent paid to the landlord, whose premises are let at what is termed rack rent. But this is an error, arising from the unfortunate use of the term rental, which so far as it is generally understood is taken to signify the rent so paid.

"The following calculations illustrate the observations which have been made:—

If the tenant pays in rent	£75
In rates, taxes, and commutation tithe-rent	10
For repairs	5
And for insurance	1
The gross estimated rental would be .	£91

"If from this sum of 91*l.* the several sums of 10*l.* 5*l.* and 1*l.* be deducted, the result would be 75*l.* the net annual value, being the sum which in this case is paid to the landlord.

Again, suppose the tenant pays in rent .	£75
In rates, taxes, and tithes	10
And landlord pays for repairs	5
For insurance	1
The gross rental will be	£91
But in like manner the taxes, the repairs, and insurance are to be deducted .	16
And the net annual value	£75

"Lastly.—Suppose the tenant to pay 91*l.* as gross rent, paying no other charge whatever, and the landlord pays for rates and tithes 10*l.*; for repairs, 5*l.*; and for insurance, 1*l.*; the net annual value to the latter will be 75*l.*

"These general remarks arise upon the principle of rating property expressed in this statute; but it may be serviceable to make some practicable observations upon the application of that principle. Thus, in estimating the rent at which the property is presumed to be let, reference must be made to the value of the premises in their peculiar situation or condition; so that even an accidental value, whether temporary or permanent, arising from the particular purpose to which the premises may be adapted, or from advantages of position, mode of occupation, or otherwise, must be taken into the calculation, if the advantages would enable the owner to let them at a higher rent than they would fetch but for these advantages. (K. v. The Proprietors of the Liverpool Exchange, 1 A. & E. 465.)

"Hence public-houses, shops, warehouses, situated in any particular spot may be of more value than other premises in the same locality.

"Various other illustrations might be produced, but the latest case before the courts has been that of a railway. The company in general are the owners of the railway, having station-houses, engine-houses, warehouses, and various similar properties at the terminal of the line, and at intermediate stations. These are their exclusive property, and by means of these premises they can carry on the traffic upon the line with the greatest advantage. A question has arisen as to the rating of these railways, and one question was, how to ascertain the rental. If only the line itself were considered, and it was asked what would a tenant give to rent the mere line independent of the collateral premises, the sum would be comparatively very small; this, however, it was urged was the proper criterion. The Court of Queen's Bench, decided, however, that it was not; that to estimate the value of the premises, it must not be neglected that the party occupying them had those collateral advantages; and consequently the inquiry was to be, as to the value of a railway, having at its termini and intermediate stations, proper station-houses and warehouses, and the means of conducting the traffic with the greatest prospect of profit. (Q. v. South-Western Railway Company, 1 A. & E. (n. s.) 558, S. C. 2 Lum. P. L. C. 85.)"

From this the reader will learn that it is not without just cause that we recommend Mr. Lumley's volume to his attention.

Precedents of Mortgages, Transfers of Mortgages; and Conveyances of Mortgaged Property, extending to Freeholds, Copyholds, and Leaseholds, and introducing new Forms of Copyhold Mortgages, obviating, without injury to Lord, Steward, Copyholder, or Solicitor, the present difficulties in the effecting Transfers of Copyhold Securities, and realizing Payment by Sale of the Property; with references to the Stamp Duties, Cases decided thereon, &c. By Rolla Rouse, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law. London, 1844. Owen Richards. Pp. 310.

Such is the long title-page of a little law-book. But the value of a law-book is not always to be measured by its bulk; and so is it with the one before us, whose subject will of itself attract the attention of the Profession, and, if it be well executed, cannot fail to secure extensive patronage. In the country, especially, a considerable portion of the attorney's business consists of mortgage transactions, and any collection of practical precedents will be heartily welcomed; for every person who has had experience of law-books will admit that, though he may have volumes of precedents printed, or collected in manuscript with immense labour, it invariably happens that the one most wanted for the immediate object is not to be found. The reason of this we believe to be, that collections of precedents are always made of the more rare and difficult cases which come into conveyancers' chambers—cases which, when like ones occur in his own practice, no attorney would venture to take upon himself to transact without the aid of Counsel; while for the cases that daily come into the office, and are settled by the attorney, upon his own responsibility, no aid can be found in the books. And why? Because these books are seldom, or never, composed by the practical men of the office, but by the learned men of the chambers.

Mr. Rouse is certainly more practical than most conveyancers; but his volume is mainly devoted to the mortgage of copyholds, and, more particularly, to avoid the necessity of admission on transfer of the security, or, under a power of sale, to convey to the purchaser. He thus states his design:—

"The decision in the case of The King v. The Lord of the Manor of Oundle (1 Adol. & Ell. 283), supporting a surrender to uses of an appointment, and, subject thereto, to the use of the surrenderee, has suggested to me a plan by which all the inconveniences under the present system of mortgaging copyholds might be obviated, without injuring the lord, the steward, the copyholder, or the solicitor.

"A surrender in the form authorized by that case would be of but little service generally as regards absolute surrenders, except in manors where there is no custom to compel the admission of surrenderees; but in conditional surrenders, where it is not the custom to enforce admission whilst the surrenderor remains admitted to the copyholds, such a form may be so modified as to effect the most perfect mortgage, give a complete power of transfer to the mortgagee, and enable him to convey under a power of sale, without taking admission or obtaining the concurrence of the mortgagor.

"The surrender I propose is, to the uses of an appointment by deed or writing, to be entered, or extracts entered, on the court rolls, and to be made before the lord would require a new tenant after death of the copyholder; and subject to such appointment, to use of the mortgagee and his heirs.

"Under such a surrender the lord would not be injured, as he would not on a surrender in the common form enforce admission, whilst he had a tenant on the rolls, and at the third court after the death of the copyholder he would be entitled to require another admittance; or should the copyholder surrender in his lifetime, the lord would have the same remedy as at present to enforce admittance of the surrenderee.

"The copyholder would not be injured, as his expense would, at least on further advances, be diminished; and by freeing copyhold property from impediments in the way of transfer and disposition under a mortgage, the facility for raising money would be increased, and in all probability the money would, in many cases, be raised at a lower rate of interest."

He has divided his materials into four parts. In the first part he gives forms of copyhold mortgages, further charges, transfers of mortgage, and conveyances of mortgaged property; in the second, of mortgages, freehold and copyhold, freehold alone, and freehold, copyhold, and leasehold together; the third part is a collection of miscellaneous forms; and the fourth treats of stamps and the cases relating to them.

This is not, of course, a book from which illustrative extracts can be made, nor is it possible for a reviewer to pass a judgment upon the excellence of the forms; we can only say that they appear to us to be framed with care and learning, and, undoubtedly, they are conveniently arranged for the purposes of ready reference.

A Collection of Statutes relating generally to the Office of a Justice of the Peace; arranged in classes, with Abstracts, Notes, and a General Index. By William Golden Lumley, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law. London, 1844. C. Knight and Co. Pp. 278.

This is a work which carries on its title its own recommendation. Collections of statutes upon various branches of law are essential to the lawyer, who could never trust to memory for those bearing upon any particular subject in which he may be interested. All that can be required of the editor of such a collection is accuracy in the gathering of every statute and clause of a statute bearing upon his subject, sound judgment and tact in the arrangement of his materials, skill in the preparation of his notes, where notes are wanted, and industry in the framing of a copious index.

Such are the qualifications which Mr. Lumley has brought to the preparation of this volume of statutory provisions, which relate generally to the office, not to the common-law duties or powers belonging to justices. These he has arranged under the following heads:—

"I. The Constitution and Continuance of Justices in their Commission.
II. The Qualification of Justices.
III. The Oaths to be taken by Justices.
IV. The General Jurisdiction of Justices.
V. The Time and Place of the Justices' Courts.
VI. The Proceedings before Justices.
VII. The Authority and Power of Justices.
VIII. The Warrants of Justices.
IX. The Privileges and Protection of Justices."

From this our readers will be enabled to judge if the book will be a useful addition to the practical library. We are inclined to think it will be very acceptable.

Chitty's Summary of the Office and Duties of Constables. Third Edition. By Thomas William Saunders, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law. London, 1844. Shaw and Sons.

This new edition of Mr. Chitty's very useful and popular work embodies many important statutes which have been enacted since the last edition was exhausted; such as The County and District Constabulary Acts (2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88); the Act to provide for keeping the Peace on Canals and Navigable Rivers (3 & 4 Vict. c. 56); the Act for the Appointment and Payment of Parish Constables (5 & 6 Vict. c. 109). Mr. Saunders has performed his editorial duties with creditable industry, and has added some valuable notes, comprising the most recent decisions. It is written in popular language for the use of the unprofessional reader.

FEARNSIDE v. DERHAM.

Partnership articles—Retiring partner—Lien on trade fixtures—Bankruptcy—Order and disposition.

Where a partner, who owned eleven-twentieths of the capital of the firm, was entitled under the articles to the profits in the same proportion, and to have a security for the value of his share of the capital at the end of the partnership, varied the arrangement by agreeing to take five-twentieths of the profits: it was held that the right to a security for his share of the capital was not thereby affected.

A partner having a power to nominate, by will, his sons to succeed him in the business, on continuing, or bringing in a specified and large share of the capital, directed his executors to appropriate to such of his sons as should well-conduct themselves in business, such interest therein as the executors might think fit. Held, though not strictly within the power, that the surviving partners having acquiesced in that arrangement; and received the benefit of the testator's capital, which he directed to remain in the business, were bound by it.

Trade-fixtures in leasehold premises mortgaged by a firm of traders, held not within their order and disposition so as to pass to their assignees in bankruptcy, though the lease had run out, and pending the negotiation with the landlord for a new lease, the firm had occupied the premises from year to year.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There was not much contest as to the facts of this case. The question was as to the rights of the parties, under these circumstances:—In 1829, William Hinde entered into partnership with three other persons, Walter Alan Hinde, James Derham, and Robert Derham, as worsted spinners and woolstaplers. The stock in trade, machinery, premises, and effects necessary for carrying on the trade were provided by William Hinde. This had belonged to the firm of Hinde and Thatcher, of which William Hinde had been a member, and was taken by him at a valuation amounting to 61,846*l.* 10s. By articles dated the 1st of June, 1829, the partnership was to continue for fourteen years, and all the mills, warehouses, machinery, and effects which had been taken by William Hinde, were transferred to the new firm, upon the terms provided in the articles. Wm. Hinde had credit with the concern for the amount of the valuation as his capital. Thus, if the partnership had been immediately dissolved, and the partnership effects had been valued at the same sum, the whole would have been appropriated to him. By the articles of partnership, it was stipulated, that William Hinde should have eleven-twentieth parts or shares in the profits of the business, and the other three partners were to have three twentieths each. It was also stipulated in the articles, that if William Hinde should die within the term of fourteen years, and nominate any son or sons to succeed him in the partnership, and his executors, or son or sons, should continue in, advance, or bring into the partnership such sum of money as and for his and their capital, as the other partners might require for that purpose, not exceeding in the whole 30,000*l.*; and the son was to have five twentieths of the gains and profits of the business, and the property of the partnership was to belong equally to the son of William Hinde to be introduced, and the other three partners in equal shares. It was likewise stipulated, that if William Hinde should die before the expiration of the term of the partnership, the surviving partners were to purchase such share of William Hinde in the partnership effects, as should not be disposed of to his sons, at such a sum of money as the same appeared to be valued at the time of the last annual stock-taking or valuation; and the surviving partners were, within one month next after William Hinde's decease, or as soon after as circumstances would permit, to execute to his executors or administrators a sufficient mortgage or mortgages of the said freehold and leasehold estates of the partnership (subject to any existing incumbrances), for securing to them the amount of William Hinde's share of the partnership effects, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. the principal to be paid by instalments of 1,500*l.*, commencing in the year 1835, and so on annually from that time. Such were the terms of the articles of partnership. If there had been no alteration in the terms, what would have been the effect if William Hinde had appointed a son to succeed him and then died? I consider, that what the value of the capital would amount to, after deducting 30,000*l.* for the benefit of the son and the surviving partners, was to be left in the business for the benefit of the surviving partners; and all the partners were to execute a mortgage of the freehold and leasehold partnership property, for securing the difference between the value of William Hinde's share and the sum of 30,000*l.* For example: at the annual stock-taking in June 1833, the partnership effects were valued at 51,000*l.* and the share of William Hinde therein appeared to be upwards of 41,000*l.* If the partnership had been then dissolved by his death, the surviving partners would have been entitled to have retained 30,000*l.* as the capital of the in-coming partner, and they must have given to William Hinde's representatives a security upon the freehold and leasehold property of the concern for the difference between 30,000*l.* and 41,000*l.*

After the execution of the original articles, namely, in February 1832, a new arrangement was made as to the interest taken by the partners in the profits of the concern, when a memorandum was signed, whereby William Hinde was to have five; Robert Derham, six; James Derham, five; and W. A. Hinde, four-twentieths of the concern; and no part of the capital of William Hinde was to be paid out until six years after his death. It was said, that by this new arrangement the stipulation as to the mortgage was at an end; but I consider that is not the right construction of the partnership articles. After the alteration, William Hinde had the same sum in the concern as before the memorandum of 1832. It is called his capital; it is to be paid out by instalments of 1,500*l.* a year, and his share was to be secured by a mortgage of the real property of the partnership. When I come to the memorandum, this same capital is not to begin to be paid till five or six years after the death of William Hinde. It is his capital, the balance of his share which is to be paid out, notwithstanding an alteration of his interest in the profit and loss. The stipulation as to the mortgage, therefore, was not affected. It was said that, after the memorandum, that he had no surplus interest in the property of the partnership; but I consider the terms remained the same as before, as between William Hinde and his surviving partners, and that he was entitled to a security for the value of his share beyond 30,000*l.*

The next point is, whether his will has made any alteration? In January 1834, William Hinde died, having by his will appointed his wife and Robert Lamb his executors, he recites the provision under which he had a right to appoint a son or sons to succeed him in the business, but he does not do so strictly. He does not appoint a son to succeed him, but gives a power to his widow to make another arrangement, and after her death he gives to Robert Lamb a similar power. The will directed, "that the share or interest reserved for his sons might be divided or appropriated to or for the use of the whole or any two or more of his sons, in such shares and proportions, and at such time or times, and in such manner, and subject to such alterations and restrictions, from time to time, during the remainder of the term, as his wife during her life, and after her decease as the said Lamb might think proper, and as circumstances and the conduct of his sons, or any of them, should warrant or guide her or him in the proposition of the said trade and business; but his intention was, that if his son, Thomas Forster Hinde, should live and conduct himself properly in business, he should have the whole of the said five-twentieth shares on his attaining twenty-one years of age." This is a contingent and conditional provision in favour of Thomas Forster Hinde, if he behaves well. It might be a question whether this was such an appointment as bound the partnership; but the surviving partners acquiesced in and acted upon it, and therefore are bound by it. This clause in the will was the authority to continue the 30,000*l.* in the partnership. Notwithstanding this alteration, I think there is the same stipulation in respect of their liabilities, as if the terms of the articles had been strictly followed. The surviving partners are bound to execute a mortgage for the surplus capital, and that the estate of William Hinde is now entitled to a security upon the real property of the firm for the amount of that surplus capital.

The next question is, as to the claims of the Lancaster Banking Company. Immediately after the formation of the partnership, the bank began to advance large sums of money on the security of the partnership property, and continued to do so up to the death of William Hinde, when a balance of 30,000*l.* remained due. The Banking Company was entitled to hold the securities until paid off; and Wm. Hinde's estate was entitled to the first security on the property pledged when the Lancaster bank had been paid. What, therefore, is the effect of subsequent transactions, and has the balance due to the bank been paid off after the death of Wm. Hinde? An arrangement was made between the surviving partners and the bank, the effect of which was that they agreed to continue the account, and that it should go on as before. That agreement was made between the bank and the new firm, not as surviving partners. The bank, in effect, agreed to take the new firm as their debtors, and to go on as before. That being so, more than 40,000*l.* have been paid by the new firm, and, in effect, the whole of the balance due from Wm. Hinde has been paid off, a first charge on the real estate of the partnership is therefore due to the estate of William Hinde. The account between the bank and the new firm has been renewed and repeated, so as to put an end to all account against William Hinde, the balance for which he was liable has been long since wiped off. The estate of William Hinde perty of the firm.

The next question is, as to the machinery and fixtures. The late Duke of Hamilton agreed to renew the lease, and gave his bond, in a penalty of has, therefore, the first security on the leasehold pro- 70,000*l.* to renew. While the lease was current, the fixtures and machinery formed part of the security. The present Duke of Hamilton refused to renew the lease, and an action having been brought upon the bond, the Duke paid 6,000*l.* the damages recovered. That sum was paid to the Lancaster bank. It is said that the lease having run out, and no assertion made of the lien on the fixtures, that they became chattels within the order and disposition of the new firm. But when the bond was delivered up, it was at the desire of the new firm, and they agreed to deposit the renewed lease with the bank. The Lancaster bank, therefore, held the new lease, which, after some time, had been negotiated with the Duke of Hamilton, and deposited with the bank exactly as they had held the former lease. The bankruptcy of the new firm took place, and the question is, does the lien on the fixtures continue? I think it does. While the fixtures were held from year to year, the fixtures remained still subject to the security, and, under the circumstances, the assignees take subject to it. The interest in the leasehold property, held from year to year, vested in the bank, and did not pass under the bankruptcy. This is the nicest point in the case; but, after an attentive consideration, I am satisfied the conclusion I have come to is right. The estate of William Hinde is entitled to security for the difference between the 30,000*l*. and the value of his share of the capital, about 11,000*l*. and as between the firm and the Lancaster bank, is entitled to the value of the fixtures.

Bethel, for the assignees, asked whether his lordship would not make a declaration that the new firm should stand in the place of the bank in respect of the 6,000*l*.?

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Not at all; that is considered in the account between William Hinde and the partnership, and it is by taking that into account that the capital of William Hinde is reduced to 41,000*l*.

To be spoken to on the minutes next Wednesday.

The judgment delivered a few days since in this important case has not been considered to afford a satisfactory solution of the difficulties which the judgments of the Vice-Chancellor of England in this case and in Barrymore v. Ellis have created; and it was this day mentioned to his lordship that the other branches of this court are by no means unanimous in their approbation of the law as laid down in Barrymore v. Ellis, when leave was given to re-argue that part of the case which rested upon Barrymore v. Ellis, at such time as might be convenient to the counsel in the cause.

DEAN and CHAPTER of ELY v. BLISS.

This case, which involves an important question of construction of the late Statute of Limitations as regards tithes, and upon the determination of which a great number of other cases depend, stood in the paper for judgment but, on coming into court,

The LORD CHANCELLOR said That it was a question of law upon the construction of a statute, and as he had reason to believe, that it was now under the consideration of the Court of Queen's Bench, he would postpone his judgment until he had an opportunity of inquiring

Re CLEMENTS, a Lunatic.

Practice—Costs of next of kin in lunacy—Formal applications in lunacy.

Bayly, for the committee of the estate, prayed for the confirmation of the commissioners' report.

Heathfield appeared for some of the next of kin, and another counsel for others of the next of kin, and asked for the costs of their respective clients.

It appeared that there had been some contest between the next of kin as to the right of some of them to sustain that character. It was likewise stated that some of them were resident in America, some in Ireland, and others in different parts of this country. The present application was one of course.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Here are six different solicitors appearing for the next of kin in a proceeding requiring no consideration, and which is a mere matter of form. I shall allow only one set of costs for the next of kin. Such has been recently the practice of the commissioner in lunacy, in consequence of a communication from me; and the parties should have made themselves aware of that, and all ought to have agreed to appear by one agent. I will make inquiry as to the effect of the special circumstances, but I am not at present disposed to vary the order I have made as to the costs.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ELY v. BLISS.

Tithes—Statute of Limitations 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27—Lord Tenterden's Act.

The question whether the 2nd and 3rd sections of the late Statute of Limitations 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. apply only to adverse claims between persons claiming title to the tithes, or whether they apply to questions between the titheowner and the occupiers, is a purely legal question, and proper to be decided on a case sent to a court of law, though the Lord Chancellor expressed his own opinion to be clearly in favour of the more limited construction.

JUDGMENT.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is an appeal against a decision of the Master of the Rolls. The case turns upon the construction of the late Statute of Limitations of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. The question, which is one of great importance, is, whether the Act relates to suits for tithes between adverse claimants to an estate in the tithes, or whether to suits between the titheowner and the occupiers of land. On the one side it was argued that the operation of the statute was confined to the first class; on the other side a more extended construction was contended for, and it was said that it applies to questions between the titheowners and occupiers. The point is one of difficulty, arising out of the expressions used in the 2nd and 3rd sections of the Act. By the 2nd section it was enacted "that no person should bring any action to recover any land, but within twenty years next after the time at which the right to bring such action shall have accrued." The words of this section are "any land," but by the interpretation clause it was declared that the word "land," when used in the Act, should include tithes. It is quite clear, and without dispute, therefore, that this section applies to the first class of claims, and is satisfied by being applied to that division of the subject. The question is, whether it would extend to the other class of cases. Now, as between the titheowner and the occupiers, there is no such thing as an action to recover tithes, and why is there to be forced construction to extend the words "no action" further than their natural import? The statute of the 2 & 3 of Edw. 6, which gives an action against the occupiers for the abstraction of tithes does not give the titheowner an action for the tithes, but for a penalty of treble value for not setting out the tithes; and why are we to give the words of that statute a forced construction? Another difficulty is, that an action under the Act of Edw. 6 only applies to predial tithes, and would not include the tithes of wool and lambs. If the Legislature intended the Statute of Limitations to apply to tithes, it is strange that one kind of tithe only should be included It was urged that the Act must receive a reasonable and not a forced construction It is said, in answer to this, that action is a phrase which must receive a liberal construction. Thus it is said a suit for tithes is not to recover the tithes, but only the value. But it would be extending this construction much further to extend it to a penal Act like that of the 2 & 3 Edw. 6, where most severe penalties are given I consider that argument is not satisfactory. A difficulty arises out of the wording of the next section of the Act, which enacts, "That the right to bring an action to recover any land shall be deemed to have first accrued when the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall have been in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land; and shall, while entitled thereto, have been dispossessed, or have discontinued such possession; then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time of such dispossession or discontinuance." That applies to a contest between two claimants of an estate in the tithes; the last time the claimant received tithe is the last time he received the profit of the estate. That does not apply to an occupier, of whom it cannot be said the last time he received tithes. What is contended for would be a forced construction of the 3rd section of the Act. Another difficulty is Lord Tenterden's Act, to what the proof of time within which tithes have been paid, has received a different construction; by that Act non-payment for less than thirty years is not a bar. That Act was passed just before the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, and it would be strange that the Legislature should in the next session cut down the period of limitation to 20 years. These points, which require very serious consideration, were not presented to the Master of the Rolls; and if I pronounce a different decision it is probable the case must go further, and will create great expense and loss of time. It is entirely a question of law whether the Act should receive the most extensive construction. The tithe commissioners have adopted the narrower construction, and an appeal from their determination is now pending. Instead of pronouncing a decision I shall send a case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench; it may be argued before the long vacation. I have considered the arguments as the question arising out of the 43rd section. I beg leave to say the plea appears to be defective, because it covers too much. The Act for the recovery of tithes relates only to predial tithes, and does not apply to tithes of wool and lambs; and the plea must apply to the 24th section (of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), which limits suits in equity for the recovery of land to the same terms as action. If so, what suit is there in this case as to the question of tithes of wool and lambs? The plea covers too much; therefore, so far defective; but it is not necessary to decide that until the general question shall be decided The case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench must be limited to tithes of corn and grain. I ought to mention that the party who framed this plea had obviously great difficulty in applying it to the statute.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, April 19.

BONNOR v. BONNOR.

A devise to a person or his children, as a third party may appoint, if no appointment be made, gives the assignees of the person no benefit or interest in the subject-matter of the devise.

This cause came on upon further directions, when it appeared that Charles Bonnor, by will, dated the 9th of August, 1837, devised, in case he (testator) died without issue, to Benjamin Bonnor (his brother) certain lands in fee, subject to a charge of 800*l*. to be paid thereout to the testator's brother, John Bonnor, or all or any of his children, in such proportions as he, the said Benjamin Bonnor, should in his discretion think proper, it being his wish that the said sum of 800*l*. should not be subject to the said John Bonnor's debts.

The testator died without issue in October 1837, and in November following a fiat in bankruptcy, issued against John Bonnor, who obtained his certificate. Benjamin Bonnor made no appointment of the 800*l*.

Piggott, for the assignees of John Bonnor, insisted that it was the testator's intention that he (J. B.) should have some benefit, and that his assignees were entitled to that, notwithstanding the provision in the will that the sum bequeathed was not to be subject to his debts.

Turner, contrà, contended that a discretion was given to B. B.; and where a discretion was given to trustees, it was not controlled by the Court, except on the ground of mala fides in the trustees. No appropriation of the sum in question had been made by B. B. and the Court would not compel him to make any in favour of J. B.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Benjamin Bonnor having a discretionary power, and not having thought fit to exercise it in favour of J. B. the assignees have no claim whatever on the fund in question.

GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE CRANBOURNE AND WIMBORNE UNION v. MASSON.

Practice—13th Order of 1828.

After answer to the original bill, and a common order to amend, a subsequent order to amend must be obtained on special application to the Court.

The bill in this suit was filed on the 20th of January, 1843, and the answer to it put in on the 27th of July following. The common order to amend was obtained on the 7th of December. On the 16th of December the amended bill was filed; and on the 29th of January, 1844, an answer thereto was put in, which was sufficient on the 25th of March. This last answer rendered it necessary to make an additional party, and accordingly,

Turner (Lewin with him) now applied to the Court specially for that purpose.

Wilcock, contra, stated that he had applied some days before to the Vice-Chancellor of England for a like order, and had been refused; and he would be unfortunate if he should fail here also. He argued that the 13th Order applied to answers to the amended bill, and not to the original bill only; and that the application should have been to the Master, and not to the Court.

The following cases were cited: Haddelsea v. Neville (4 Beav. 28); Bertolacci v. Johnstone (2 Hare, 632); Attorney-General v. Nethercoat (2 Myl. & Cr. 604); Davis v. Prout (5 Beav. 375); Matchill v. Palmer (10 Sim. 241); Wilson v. Wilson (reported in Leg. Obs.).

Saturday, April 27.—The MASTER of the ROLLS said, he had looked over the cases, and he thought the cases of Bertolacci v. Johnstone, &c. could not have been cited to the Vice-Chancellor of England in the case relied upon by Mr. Wilcock; and, therefore, the authority of those cases must govern the present. He was sorry there was a difference of opinion, but it might be remedied if a larger discretion were given to the Master. He must grant the motion, but would reserve the costs.

DENTON v. DENTON.

A testator by his will appoints trustees, and directs them to "pay to A (who is only equitable life tenant), or permit him to receive," the surplus rents and profits of certain lands, after making other yearly payments: the trustees acquiesce for a long time in A's receiving the rents, making the payments, &c. and in cutting timber, and otherwise acting as owner; afterwards, they bring an action at law to recover the title-deeds, to make A act as their receiver, &c.: an injunction is granted, except as to the title deeds (which A agrees to bring into court), and as to making leases without consent.

The testator by his will, dated the 21st of February, 1840, devised his estates to trustees during the life of Thomas Denton, the plaintiff, and directed them to pay certain annuities; and the surplus of the proceeds, after doing so, they were "to pay to Thomas Denton, or permit him to receive," for his life. The testator then devised the estates to the children of Thomas Denton, with a contingent limitation to one of the trustees (the defendant). Immediately upon the death of the testator in 1840, the plaintiff entered upon the estates, received the rents, paid the annuities, &c. and acted also as owner in all respects. He cut down timber, too, but applied it entirely to the improvement of the estate. No misconduct was attributed to him; but, on the contrary, it appeared he had managed the estate, &c. most beneficially. After the death of one of the original trustees, a new trustee was appointed in his room; and then it was that the plaintiff was required to give up the title-deeds, act as the receiver of the trustees, &c.; and on his refusing, they brought an action at law. The plaintiff then filed his bill to restrain them. It was suggested by the defendants that the plaintiffs had cut timber (in which the original trustees had, however, acquiesced), and that he might do so again. Some other things of little importance also were alleged.

Kindersley and J. Parker, for the plaintiff.

Turner and Malins, for the defendants.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The trustees have conferred upon the plaintiff the powers which he now exercises; and they have acquiesced in his doing so, and in cutting timber, &c. I will not interfere to deprive him of these. He must, however, continue to pay the annuities, and he must not cut timber without the consent of the trustees, nor grant leases without their consent. This being submitted to, and the title-deeds given up, as he has proposed, I will grant the injunction.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Wednesday, April 24.

CHAMBERLAIN v. The CHESTER and BIRKENHEAD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Injunction—Construction of railway company's Acts of Parliament.

In this case, which may prove of considerable importance to railway companies, Temple, Q.C. moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from opening their line until they had completed a communicating line, in which the plaintiff was interested, and which, it was alleged by the bill, the Act of Parliament required to be done. It appeared that, on the river Mersey, there are several ferries, which, on the Chester side, are known by the names of the Tranmere ferry, the Monk's ferry, the Woodside ferry, and the Birkenhead ferry. The plaintiff is the owner of the Tranmere ferry, for the use of which he constructed docks and purchased steam boats. Mr. Price was the owner of the other ferries, and he proposed, in 1836, to form a company for making a railway, which, by means of his ferry, should communicate with Chester and Liverpool. Plaintiff also projected a similar railway to communicate by means of his ferry. Two bills were accordingly brought into Parliament, and referred to Lord Sandon and others, to decide on their respective merits. This committee thought that neither of the lines gave all the advantage and accommodation that was desirable, but ultimately decided, at the suggestion of Stephenson, the engineer, that the first-mentioned line should terminate at a place called Grange-lane, which should be the converging point of the branch lines to be made from each of the ferries, Tranmere and Woodside, and that the branch line to the Woodside ferry should not be opened before that of the Tranmere ferry. The company afterwards purchased Mr. Price's ferries, and have made their branch line to the Monk's ferry, on the ground that it is part of the ancient Woodside ferry, contending that the Act of Parliament referring to the Woodside ferry applies to any spot within the ancient Woodside grant. It was contended for the plaintiff that the company were precluded from making any other branch line, until they had completed the one to the Tranmere ferry; and that they had no right to open any line to the Monk's ferry, as that was not specified in the Act, and could not be comprehended under the Woodside ferry.

Walker, Q. C. and Rolt, for the Company, opposed the motion, and contended that the meaning of the Act of Parliament, in these particulars, was not, as was insisted on the other side, compulsory upon the company, as to the limits and exact directions of the lines, but only enabling, for the facilitating of arrangements between the parties for the benefit of the public. It was also objected that the motion was made too late, inasmuch as the works had been allowed to proceed since the autumn of 1843.

Judgment deferred.

MUNDAY v. KNIGHT.

Demurrer—Adverse possession—Statute of Limitations—Concealed fraud.

Where a plaintiff seeks relief against a defendant holding property, as a purchaser from an adverse possessor, and the occupancy had been undisputed for more than twenty years, and the bill contained no specific allegations of concealed fraud, or of the capability of proof of the knowledge of the defendant, or of those through whom he deduced his title, of their wrongful possession; Held, that the bill was demurrable for vagueness and uncertainty.

In this case the plaintiff claimed to be the tenant by the curtesy, in right of his late wife, the daughter of Thomas Broaduox May, to whom the property in question was devised in the year 1726. The defendant acquired his title in 1797 by purchase, for valuable consideration, from the widow of the son of the guardian of the devisee, who, being an infant at the time of the devisor's decease, was entitled only, by the provision of the devise, to a certain maintenance out of the proceeds of the estate, the remaining portion being directed to accumulate until he attained his age of 21 years. It appeared, that upon the decease of the devisor, the guardian, in his capacity of trustee and executor, took possession of the estate, and kept the infant in total ignorance of his rights, supplying him only with a small maintenance; and that upon his coming of age, he was removed into the neighbourhood of his estate, his right thereto being still concealed from him, and of which he was never apprized up to the time of his decease in 1825, a period of 99 years. Upon the death of the guardian in 1781, having previously taken the name of Knight, his son took possession under some alleged deed or will, and whose widow, upon his decease in 1791, sold the estate for 40,000*l.* in 1797, to the defendant, who also took the name of Knight. It was alleged that Thomas Broaduox May received sums of money by way of support, from time to time; and that upon his decease in 1825, like payments were made to his son, William Broadnox May, at which period the fraud was first discovered. William Broadnox May dying intestate, the estate devolved de jure upon his sister, Mrs. Munday, the late wife of the plaintiff.

By the limitations of the devise, the legal estate became vested in Thomas Broadnox May and his heirs, on his attaining his age of twenty-one years, and, therefore, the defendant set up an old term of years to support his title by way of precedence of the freehold in the plaintiff. The bill prayed that the defendant might be restrained from setting up the term as a defence at law upon an action of ejectment, and also for general relief; a demurrer was filed to the bill, founded upon the Statute of Limitations; and the case now came on for argument upon the demurrer.

Romilly, Q.C. and Baily, for the demurrer, relied upon the fact of the defendant having been an innocent purchaser for valuable consideration, and in possession for more than twenty years.

Cooper, Q.C. and J. Stevenson, in support of the bill, contended that the fraud not having been discovered till 1825, the time would not begin to run against the plaintiff before that period—the discovery of the fraud—according to the 26th sect. of the Statute of Limitations.

Romilly, in reply, drew a distinction between cases of express trust, like this, and those of concealed fraud; contending that the statute limited the time as to when the trust might reasonably be discovered, i. e. during the continuance of the trust. The present owner, too, was a purchaser for valuable consideration, and had no notice of the trust or the will.

VICE-CHANCELLOR.—His Honour having gone through the facts of the case, and commented upon the allegations of the bill, said that the plaintiff relied upon the fact of the parties, through whom the defendant claimed, having first held the property under an express trust, and then by certain contrivances which amounted to a concealed fraud. As to the trust, that was one for accumulation of that portion of the rents and profits of the property not expended for the maintenance of the infant; and there was no allegation in the bill respecting that accumulated fund, or any relief sought concerning it. And with respect to the charge of a contrived and concealed fraud, there was no specific allegation, and he was at a loss to understand what it meant; as a mere occupation, without giving information to the infant of his rights, would, in a negative manner, be a concealed fraud, if known to the party occupying; the express trust had clearly ceased upon the infant attaining his age of twenty-one years, and since that period it must be considered as an adverse possession, running a very long time from 1746; so long, in fact, that it was difficult to presume that any of the parties adversely holding would have had notice of the facts alleged, as it is highly improbable that any one of them would have handed down to his successor the knowledge of his wrongful title. The allegations of contrivance and fraud are not specific, and in that and other respects the rule of intendment against the pleader must prevail; and even were the allegations of such a nature as could be supported by evidence, it is hardly possible that any witnesses would be now alive to support the bill; it is in fact a fishing bill, the plaintiff pretending to have found out that which Thomas Broadoox May and his family were unable to do; and it is impossible that the plaintiff can allege any thing of his own knowledge. There is so much vagueness and uncertainty in the whole matter, that I cannot do otherwise than allow the demurrer.

Thursday, May 2.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. POULDEN.

Accumulation—Annuities—Reduction of Public Stock.

Where there is a direction in a will to accumulate a fund, to commence at a certain event, the time legally allowed for accumulation must be computed from the death of the testator, without reference to the event mentioned; and therefore, at the expiration of twenty-one years from his decease, the trust for accumulation becomes void. Where annuities were by will charged upon a particular sum of money invested in one of the public stocks, and the fund having proved deficient by the conversion of the stock from 4 per cent. bank annuities to 3½ per cent. bank annuities; Held, that the annuities must be affected with a proportional abatement.

In this case, the information was filed by the Attorney-general, on the relation of certain parties, on behalf of a charity, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the Court on the construction of the will and codicil under which the charity claimed to be entitled.

The testator, by his will, bequeathed the sum of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. stock, to trustees upon trust, to pay certain life-annuities, amounting together to the yearly sum of 400*l.* and by his codicil, directed that the trustees should stand possessed of the 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. stock, and the dividends thereof subject to the annuities charged upon it by the will, upon trust, as to so much of the dividends of the fund as from time to time should fall in by the determination of the annuities charged thereon; and until one-half of the dividends should have so fallen in, to lay out the same, and the resulting income thereof, in the names of the trustees, in the purchase of stock in the same or other public funds, in order to increase the capital of the fund by accumulation in the way of compound interest; and when and so soon as the one-half of the dividends should have so fallen in, then, upon trust, to apply such moiety of dividends, and also such further parts of the same, as should from time to time fall in by the determination of the annuities, and the whole of such dividends, when all the annuities should have determined, for certain charitable purposes. Upon the decease of the testator, the trustees invested the 10,000*l.* 4 per cent stock in their names, but which stock was afterwards, in 1830, converted into 3½ per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities; and consequently the dividends of the trust-fund were reduced from 400*l.* per annum to 350*l.*, the trustees, therefore, reduced the payment to each annuitant in like proportion. Several of the annuitants died, and the trustees invested the surplus dividends as directed by the codicil. The bill, therefore, prayed, among other things, that the surplus dividends so accumulated might be decreed to form part of the fund applicable to the charity, and that the surviving annuitants under the will and codicils might be declared not to be entitled to be paid more than the Reduced Annuities, and that the surplus income of the trust fund, after providing for the Reduced Annuities, might be declared to be applicable to the purposes of the charity. The questions which now arose out of this case were, 1st. Whether, under the 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, the accumulation must not cease at the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of the testator, and not from the death of the first annuitant, and whether the future surplus dividends, till one-half are fallen in, belong to the charity, or to the residuary legatees of the testator. 2. Whether the interest of the accumulated fund will be payable, until one-half of the annuities have determined, to the charity or the residuary legatees. 3. Whether the annuitants ought to be paid less than the full amount of their annuities, in consequence of the reduction of the fund from 4*l.* per cent. to 3*l.* 10s. per cent.

Cooper, Q. C. for the Attorney-general, cited Webb v. Webb (2 Beavan, 493), in support of the computation of the twenty-one years from the death of the testator. He submitted that the annuitants were not entitled to have the deficiency made up out of the accumulated fund, or surplus dividends, on the authority of Scott v. Salmond (1 M. & K. 363), and Kendall v. Russell (3 Sim. 421).

Wood followed, on the same side.

Romilly, Q.C. and Allautt, for the residuary legatees.

Anderdon, Q.C. for the annuitants, contended that the annuities should be paid in full, and the deficiency by the conversion of the stock made good; citing May v. Bennett (1 Russ. 370), Davies v. Walter (1 Sim. & Stu. 463); Foster v. Smith (2 Y & C. Chancery Cases, 193).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR. According to the true construction of the will of the testator, and of the codicils thereto, his Honour decreed that the several annuities thereby given, and as a fund to answer which the sum of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. stock was directed to be set apart, became liable, on the conversion of the sum of 10,000*l.* 4 per cents. into 10,000*l.* 3½ per cent. reduced stock, to be reduced proportionably according to their respective amounts. That the direction, contained in the first codicil to the testator's will for the accumulation of so much of the dividends of the Bank Annuities as should, from time time, fall in by the determination of the annuities, until one-half of such dividend should have so fallen in, is void, so far as directing an accumulation for any more remote period than twenty-one years from the death of the testator. That the future dividends, which should accrue on the Bank Annuities, and shall not be required for the payment of the remaining reduced annuities, shall, until one-half of the dividends on the sum of 10,000*l.* 3½ per cent. stock shall have fallen in, form part of the general residuary estate of the testator, and that after one-half of the dividends shall have fallen in, then the future dividends, subject only to the payment of then existing Reduced Annuities, shall be applicable to the charitable purposes in the codicil mentioned; but that the accumulated fund must be excluded from the bequest to the charity, not having been expressly disposed of for that purpose, and must therefore be held to form part of the residuary estate.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, April 17.

REG. v. CORONER OF ROCHESTER.

Coroner's inquisition can only be held super visum corporis.

Platt, Q.C. and Bodkin shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Jervis, Q.C. for a certiorari to bring up an inquisition taken by the coroner of Rochester, in order that it might be quashed.

A body had been found dead in the river Medway, and had come to the shore out of the limits of the city of Rochester, and in the county of Kent. This rule was obtained at the instance of the coroner of Kent to try whether, under those circumstances, the coroner of the city had jurisdiction. The affidavits in opposition to the rule shewed that, from time immemorial, the coroners of Rochester had claimed to hold inquests upon bodies found in all parts of the river. In this case the coroner and the jury had gone out of the city into the county to inspect the body, and had then returned into the city, been sworn, and proceeded with the inquest within the city.

Jervis, Q. C. contended that the inquest could only be held super visum corporis.

He was then stopped by the Court.

RUNDLE v. LITTLE and ANOTHER.

Trespass — Liability of attorney in cases where execution has been levied, and judgment afterwards set aside.

This was an action of trespass, alleged to have been committed by the defendants, attorneys, in causing the writ of fieri facias to be issued; by reason of which, goods of the plaintiff were taken in execution and sold.

Plea — the general issue.

The trespass, and the fact that the sheriff's officer was set in motion by the defendants, were proved at the trial. The counsel for the defendants tendered the judgment in evidence, either as a substantive answer to the action, on their pleading, because serving to shew that the defendants had acted strictly within the scope of their duty as attorneys, or, at all events, in mitigation of damages. Coleridge, J. before whom the case was tried, received the evidence; and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages, one farthing. A rule nisi for a new trial having been obtained on the ground of the improper admission of evidence,

Cockburn, Q. C. and Montagu Smith, shewed cause. (Sedley v. Sutherland, 3 Esp. 209; Codrington v. Lloyd, 8 Ad. & E. 449.)

REG. v. BISHOP OF RIPON.

REG. v. LORDS OF THE TREASURY.

Denman moved for a mandamus commanding the defendants to award compensation to Mr. Reed on his retirement from the office of collector of taxes, which he had held for twenty years, at a salary of 90*l.* a year, with emoluments amounting to an average sum of 182*l.* more per annum. The Lords of the Treasury had recognized his claim for a compensation upon his salary, but refused to award him compensation upon his emoluments. He submitted that although it might perhaps have been optional with the Lords of the Treasury whether to allow him any compensation at all, that, having recognized his claim to compensation, they were compelled under the authority of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24, to award it upon the emoluments as well as the salary.

STANNIFORTH v. RYALL.

Where a cause is referred to an arbitrator before trial, he has no power to direct a verdict to be entered. A cause and all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator, all costs to be in his discretion. Held, that he could not award costs as between client and client.

In this case there were two rules; the one, for an attachment for disobedience to an award, which had been made a rule of this Court; the other, to set aside the award.

The cause and all matters in difference had been referred before trial to an arbitrator, all costs to be in the discretion of the arbitrator.

The arbitrator directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, and awarded 11*l.* to be due to him. He also directed the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs, to be taxed as between attorney and client.

Pashley now contended that the award was bad, on the ground that the arbitrator had no power, as the cause was referred before trial, to direct a verdict to be entered, and that he had no power to direct the costs to be taxed as between attorney and client.

MARRIOTT v. MACAULAY.

This was an action brought by one attorney to recover from another the amount of the disbursements made by the former, in opposing a projected extension of the Birmingham Railway, and in endeavouring to establish a company to be called the Churnett Valley Railway Company. Two questions were raised: first, whether, on the facts, the credit was given to the defendant or his principal; secondly, whether proof should be given of the statements in an allegation set forth by way of inducement to the first count in the following terms:—"And whereas disputes had arisen between the said plaintiff and the defendant, as to the liability of him (the defendant) and of other persons to pay the said sum of money, and as to the amount due to the plaintiff in respect of the premises; and thereupon heretofore, to wit on the 20th of May, A.D. 1839, in consideration that the plaintiff then agreed, and did then put an end to such disputes, the defendant then promised the plaintiff to pay all the plaintiff's outstanding liabilities in reference to the said business comprised in the said bill, including any debts which might be due to one J. W. Rastrick, and for advertisements, solicitors' charges, &c. when the accounts should come in." That is, whether proof should have been given that there had been disputes with other persons. A verdict passed for the plaintiff, and subsequently it was agreed that the whole matter should be brought before the Court in the form of a special case.

SPECIAL CASE.

JENKINS v. DAVIES.

The members of a board of guardians are not liable to be sued personally for contracts entered into with them in their corporate capacity. The action must be against the board.

This was an action for work and labour done to a union workhouse, in which the plaintiff had a verdict, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a special case.

The plaintiff had sent in his tender to the board of guardians, and had been employed by an order of the board. The defendant was the chairman of the board, and the question was, whether the defendant was liable to be sued personally, or whether the action ought not to have been brought against the guardians in their corporate character.

MERCER v. TEMPERLEY.

Personal liability of an agent for freight.

Platt, Q. C. and Robinson shewed cause against a rule obtained by Peacock, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover freight for certain goods which had been conveyed by the plaintiff's vessel, and received by the defendant. The declaration was a special one, setting out the charter-party and bill of lading, and alleging that in consideration of the plaintiff's delivering the goods to the defendant without his insisting upon his lien for freight, the defendant promised to pay, &c. There had originally been an indebitatus count, but it had been struck out by a judge at chambers, the plaintiff having elected to retain the special one.

The points raised were, first, whether, upon the evidence and some correspondence between the parties, the special promise had been made out; and, secondly, whether the defendant, who had received the goods as agent, and not as owner, was liable, on general principles.

The goods were imported in defendant's own name, and delivered into his own barges.

Peacock, contrà, contended that even if there were an implied promise to pay freight, there was no evidence of the particular contract alleged in the declaration, and that as there was no indebitatus count the plaintiff could not recover in this action.

By the COURT.—Upon this evidence the plaintiff could only have recovered on the indebitatus count.

On the 14th October the respondents received a notice of appeal for the next sessions. Neither party attended at the sessions on the 17th October, and the respondents did not attend the ensuing sessions in January, as they conceived that the notice of appeal, though a bad one, applied to the October sessions. The appellants, however, attended, and the order was quashed. This order of sessions was now sought to be removed. Rule nisi.

LUCAS v. JONES.

A document purporting to be a settlement in account, and a mutual discharge, requires a receipt stamp.

Platt, Q. C. and Barstow shewed cause against a rule obtained by Jervis, Q. C. for a new trial, and to set aside verdict for defendant.

The question was, whether the following document, which had been admitted for the defendant to prove a plea of payment, was admissible without a receipt stamp:—

"Mr. Jones having rubbed off the sum of 72*l*. 3s. 9d. off his mortgage debt, being five quarters' rent of his house, I hereby discharge him.

(Signed) "——."

The document had been a settlement of account between two parties, one of whom owed rent to the other, and had a claim upon his landlord for principal and interest of a mortgage.

REG. v. GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY.
Ex parte DODDS.

Mandamus—Liability for costs in cases of mandamus to assess damages.

Bovill applied for a rule calling on the defendants to pay the costs of a mandamus to them to assess damages done by them to Dodds in the construction of their line. Thirteen rules had been obtained on behalf of Dodds and other parties by the same attorney. When they came on to be argued, Addison, for the defendants, had suggested that a difficult point of law would arise, and the Court, in consequence, granted the mandamus in all the cases with a view to its being raised upon the return. The company, however, did not wait for the return, but almost immediately after the mandamus had issued, summoned a jury, and proceeded to assess damages. In Mr. Dodds's case, 165*l*. was awarded, he having previously claimed 300*l*. and the company having tendered him 100*l*.

Wortley, Q. C. and Addison, contrà, contended that great useless expense had been incurred by the prosecutors, and that they had not acted in a way to entitle themselves to charge the company with all their proceedings.

Rule absolute in the first instance.

Re BENNETT and SIDNEY.

When the clerk to commissioners, under an Act of Parliament, enters into an agreement of reference in his own name, and for himself, his executors, administrators and assigns, although as such clerk, he will be personally bound, and the Court will enforce the award against him.

The Solicitor-General, J. Henderson, and J. Gray shewed cause against a rule obtained by Barstow, calling upon Edward Bennett to shew cause why he should not pay to Robert Sidney the sum of 400*l*. pursuant to an award made between the parties under a rule of Court.

The commissioners of the town of Wolverhampton had required, for the purposes of some local improvements, a shop occupied by Sidney, in Wolverhampton. They had agreed that compensation was due to him, and, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount, it had been agreed to refer the claim to certain arbitrators. An agreement of reference was drawn up between Edward Bennett, as clerk to the commissioners, and Robert Sidney. The agreement, however, provided that each of them, their and his executors and administrators, should and would well and truly keep the said award, &c. The award found, that the amount of compensation which the said R. Sidney was entitled to receive from the said commissioners was 400*l* and ordered the said Bennett, as clerk to the said commissioners, should pay the same. The commissioners had afterwards come to a resolution, "that their clerk be instructed to resist Mr. Sidney's demand for payment of the sum awarded to him by Mr. Alexander."

On behalf of Bennett, it was contended that the commissioners had no power to refer, a method of ascertaining damage being pointed out by their Act, viz. by summoning a jury; and also, that Mr. Bennett was only a party to the reference, in his capacity of clerk, and could not, therefore, be made personally responsible.

On the other side, it was argued that Bennett had made himself personally liable by the terms of his agreement.

By the COURT. The words "for himself, his heirs executors, and administrators," shew that the intention was to bind him personally. Whether or not his goods might have been taken in execution if he had been sued under the Act as clerk to the commissioners, is beside the question. He has entered into a personal engagement and is liable. We cannot see that this award is bad on the face of it, and no other objection can be made to it upon this rule

REG. v. THE COMMISSIONERS FOR BUILDING CHURCHES.

Where the Church Building Commissioners have built a chapel under an Act of Parliament which directs them to allot certain convenient pews to certain parties, if the allotments made by them are insufficient, this Court can only interfere at the time, and not after a lapse of years.

Erle, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Kelly, Q. C. for a mandamus commanding the commissioners to allot sufficient pews in the church at Highgate to the master and wardens of Highgate grammar-school and their families. The school was established in 1666. The master and wardens were incorporated, and afterwards received a grant from the Bishop of London, duly confirmed by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, of the site of the old chapel. The old chapel fell into decay, and, upon its being proposed to erect a new one, it was referred to one of the masters in Chancery to report upon the subject. Among other matters, he reported that in the new chapel convenient sittings ought to be reserved and effectually secured for the master, wardens, and scholars. An Act of Parliament, 58 Geo. 3, was passed in consequence, in which it was provided that sittings should be reserved for the master and wardens, and their families. When the chapel was built, seats were reserved, which, however, were not, in the opinion of the wardens, &c. sufficient. Negotiations had taken place from time to time, but as nothing satisfactory had ever been agreed upon, this rule was, at length, applied for.

It was contended for the defendants that a sufficient accommodation had been provided for, that the wardens, &c. being a corporation, the words "and their families," were mere surplusage and nonsense, and could have no meaning; and secondly, that the commissioners had long ago fulfilled their duty, and were functi officio, and had no power of interference; and thirdly, that the lapse of time was a bar to the application, as against any one. On the other side it was argued that if there was any limit of time by which the Commissioners were exonerated, they might by their own negligence deprive the parties of their rights.

The argument took place yesterday, and the Court took time to consider, and delivered judgment this morning.

By the COURT.—We were very much struck with the great inconvenience which would arise if a new arrangement were to be made when parties are in possession of pews. We find that since their original duties have ceased, the commission have no authority whatever to do any thing with respect to the chapel. In the first instance, this Court might have been applied to, if they had refused to do any thing required by the Act; but if we were now to order them to do this, we should be ordering them to commit a trespass. We have no power to direct them to act, because they have no power to act.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF CORNWALL.

If quarter-sessions refuse to go into an appeal because they think the grounds of appeal insufficient, that is a hearing by them, and this Court will not renew their decision by mandamus.

Montague Smith shewed cause against a rule obtained by Greenwood for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

The appellants, in their grounds of appeal, set up a subsequent settlement by apprenticeship in a third parish. At the trial, the respondents objected to the appellants going into their case, because the grounds of appeal did not give the date of the apprenticeship. After hearing the question argued, the sessions held the grounds insufficient, and refused to hear the appellant's case.

On the part of the appellants it was now contended that the sessions, whether right or wrong, had entertained the appeal, and had decided it upon a point within their jurisdiction, and that the Court would not interfere by mandamus, and that this case was determined by Reg. v. Kesteven

By the COURT. What do you say to this Mr. Greenwood?

Greenwood. That assumes that every indenture of apprenticeship has a date.

By the COURT.—No; but the sessions have decided that it was necessary in this case that the date should appear in the grounds of appeal. The rule must be discharged.

Greenwood.—Not with costs, I hope; The case cited had not then been decided.

By the COURT. If the magistrates are the real defendants their costs must be paid.

Case cited Reg. v. Kesteven (LAW T. ante p. 55.)

SELBY v. BROWN.

Practice.—Issuable plea.

Hugh Hill shewed caused against a rule obtained by Fitzherbert to set aside a judgment signed by the plaintiff as for want of a plea. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably. The action was debt, on a demise for rent payable quarterly. The defendant pleaded two long pleas; one to a certain part of the rent for a time less than a quarter, and the other to the residue; each plea setting out the same facts, viz. that they were the fee-simple of a certain corporation who, before the plaintiff had anything in the premises, leased them to one Staly, the lease containing certain covenants, and also a clause of re-entry and forfeiture; that Staly assigned to the plaintiff, and that before the demise to the defendant, Staly and the plaintiff had committed breaches for which the corporation had availed themselves of their right of re-entry, and had ejected the defendant before the end of the first quarter. For the plaintiff it was contended, that these were not issuable pleas; that the first was in fact pleaded to nothing, as no rent became due till the expiration of the first quarter, and that they amounted to the general issue.

The defendant argued, that the pleas tendered material issues, and that even if they were bad on special demurrer, the plaintiff could not take the law into his own hands and sign judgment.

Re Charlotte Griffin.
The duties of coroners' juries.

Platt, Q. C. moved for a certiorari to bring up the inquisition of the coroner in this case, with a view to expunging parts of the finding of the jury, in which they had imputed blame to a clergyman named Scratchley, and which, having come to the ears of the bishop, had been attended with serious consequences to that gentleman.

By the Court.—These juries have no right whatever to take upon themselves a power which does not belong to them, and to make imputations under the semblance of authority. It is not clear that they do not subject themselves to the libel law by doing so. All parties should recollect that the jury have no power to decide upon matters which are not submitted to them, and that on attempting to do so, they attempt an injurious exercise of power which they do not possess. We do not find any authority for granting the rule, but the purpose will probably be answered by the opinion we have expressed.

Rule refused.

Reg. v. Dunn, Bennett, and Others.
In proceedings by certiorari, if there is any ambiguity as to who are the prosecutors, the Court, upon making an order for costs, should be asked to fix upon the parties, and the other side cannot afterwards do so.

The Solicitor-General, Erle, Q. C. and Cole shewed cause against a rule for an attachment for costs obtained by V. Lee. An order of the corporation of Lichfield had been brought up by certiorari, under the 44th section of the Municipal Reform Act. In disposing of the order, the Court had ordered that the prosecutors should pay the costs; but it had not been ascertained, and did not appear in any way, who the prosecutors were. It was now sought to treat as prosecutors a number of persons who had made affidavits and been active in promoting the original order.

By the Court.—It is to be regretted that when the Court decided that the prosecutors must pay the costs, our attention was not called to the peculiar practice of the Court with respect to removals by certiorari. The Court alone has power to fix upon the person who should pay these costs. It cannot be supposed that the parties are to be at liberty to choose at their own discretion from among those who made affidavits, and say, "You are the prosecutors." This omission cannot now be supplied by an attachment against any one whom the parties choose to fix upon. We ought to have been called upon to exercise our own discretion at the time. These persons are selected entirely at the will and pleasure of the persons who obtained the certiorari. Rule discharged.

Re Postlethwaite.
Striking an attorney off the rolls.

Watson, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Robinson, to strike a Mr. Postlethwaite off the roll of attornies. The ground for striking him off was, that he had charged in a bill of costs, and sworn to in an affidavit of increase, certain expenses of witnesses, which they had never received.

Reg. v. Frampton.

Barstow shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cockburn, Q. C. why defendant should not be discharged from an indictment upon which he had been convicted, of not repairing a road, which he was bound to do ratione tenuræ. A certificate had been given that the road was now in good repair. Barstow objected that the certificate was not sufficient, as it did not shew that the road had been repaired since the conviction, but might be merely the opinion of the justice in opposition to the jury.

Barlow v. Barlow.

Robinson shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pashley, to set aside an execution, and make the judgment-roll conformable to the truth.

A fi. fa. had issued into Middlesex, and afterwards a testatum fi. fa. into another county. The first fi. fa. had not been returned until after the issuing of the second, though the second recited its return in the usual way. Reg. v. Maryport and Carlisle Railway Company.

Robinson shewed cause against a rule obtained by Watson, Q. C. for a mandamus, ordering the defendant to summon a jury to assess further damages done to the prosecutor by their line, one assessment having been made already. There was a provision in the Act for ascertaining damages of less amount than 20*l.* before a magistrate. It appeared from the claims of the prosecutor, that the sum for which there was any pretence for making the prosecutor liable did not amount to 20*l.* Rule discharged.

Doe dem. Allanson v. Allanson.

Baines, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Watson, Q.C. for a new trial. The cause was set down No. 1 in the list at the last assizes, and no one appeared on behalf of the defendant. There was an affidavit that the attorney was taken ill the day before the trial, but it also appeared that he arrived at York an hour before the trial. Rule discharged.

Re Halley.
Re-admission of an attorney.

Platt, Q.C. applied for a rule for the re-admission of Mr. Halley as an attorney. Robinson opposed it on the part of the Law Society, on the ground that he had been struck off the rolls for misconduct many years ago. The Court, however, thought the time had come when he might be re-admitted.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Friday, May 3.

Boodle v. Cambell.

To a declaration in debt for rent, a plea to the further maintenance of the action pleaded to a portion of the rent, that since action brought, the defendant had been required to pay such portion of the rent, under threat of ejectment by the devisees of a person to whom the plaintiff had, prior to the demise, sold that part of the premises in respect of which such portion of rent was demanded, and that defendant had, in consequence of such threat, paid the same to the devisees, is bad in substance either as a plea of eviction or a plea of payment.

The declaration was in debt on a lease from the plaintiff to the defendant, by which certain premises were demised to the latter for 10 years, at the yearly rent of 76*l.* 10*s.* payable half-yearly. The declaration set out a covenant on the part of the defendant for payment of the rent, and alleged as a breach the non-payment of one year and a half's rent. The defendant's third plea was pleaded to 40*l.* 10*s.* parcel of the sum in the declaration demanded, and to the further maintenance of the action; and the plea was in effect that before the demise to the defendant, as set out in the declaration, the plaintiff by lease and release conveyed a portion of the demised premises to one E. Boodle, and that E. Boodle afterwards died, having previously devised by will the premises to Ann Boodle and one Pickstock; that after the commencement of the present action, Ann Boodle and Pickstock, the devisees under the will of E. Boodle, gave notice to the defendant to pay to them the rent not then paid to the plaintiff, which had accrued due in respect of that portion of the demised premises so conveyed by the plaintiff, and threatened to eject the defendant if he did not pay the same to them; that the defendant thereupon, and in consequence of such threat, paid the sum of 40*l.* 10*s.* to the devisees, and that the same sum of 40*l.* 10*s.* is the fair and proper apportioned rent due in respect to that part of the demised premises which had been so conveyed by the plaintiff, concluding with a verification. To this plea the plaintiff demurred.

Channell, Serjt. and Willes, in support of the demurrer.—The plea is bad in substance: this is pleaded as a plea of eviction; without its being an eviction, it would amount to a plea of nil habuit in tenementis, and therefore bad. Sapsford v. Fletcher (4 T. R. 511), Taylor v. Zamira (6 Taunt. 524), and Pape v. Biggs (9 B. & C. 245), are cases where a payment was made in respect of what was a charge upon the land at the time of the demise, which is otherwise in the present case. As an eviction it is bad, because it does not state that the eviction did not take place before the rent accrued due.

Tindal, C. J.—There must be some remedy for the tenant, but you say it is in equity.

Talfourd, Serjt. contrà.—This plea amounts to a plea of payment under compulsion, and is therefore good; it is analogous to Johnson v. Jones (9 Ad. & Ell. 809), with this difference only, that there was a mortgage of the whole premises; here a conveyance of only a part, and there a plea to an avowry for rent of payment by the tenant to a mortgagee, to whom the premises had been mortgaged prior to the demise, was held substantially to be a plea of payment, and not of nil habuit in tenementis, nor of eviction. [Tindal, C. J.—The present case seems certainly very much to resemble Johnson v. Jones. Cresswell, J.—You do not put it as a payment shewing an attornment of the tenancy?] No; I put it as a compulsory payment of a proportionate part of the rent to a person who derived through the plaintiff, the power of ejecting if not paid.

Channell, Serjt. in reply.—Johnson v. Jones is distinguishable. There, as in all the other cases where the payment has been allowed to be pleaded, the payment had been made in respect of what before, and at the time of the demise, was a charge on the premises. All the authorities decide merely this, that where A is bound to pay a sum of money, and the person entitled to receive it has a charge for the same on the premises in which B is the occupier, then B may pay out of the rent so much as is due on account of the charge; the party in such cases, to whom B has been permitted to pay, having some right, by distress, ejectment, or otherwise, to take some proceeding against the land itself for satisfying his charge. Here at the time of the demise there was no charge. [Cresswell, J.—You say here the tenant has not discharged what was previously a charge on the land.] Yes. It is necessary that the plea should shew that there was some debt due from the plaintiff, and also that the debt was a charge upon the land, or it cannot come within the cases which have been cited, as a plea of payment. [Cresswell, J.—What was there to be paid?—there was no debt.] It must then amount to a plea of eviction, and it is then bad, as being after the rent became due.

The Court.—This plea cannot be sustained either as a plea of eviction, or of payment of this portion of the rent by compulsion to a person authorized to receive it as a charge on the land; as an eviction, the plea should shew that it was before the rent became due, whereas here it is not until after action brought. How, then, is this a plea of payment to a special agent of the landlord? In the authorities cited, where such a payment has been allowed, there has been some charge on the land, either a ground-rent issuing from the premises, with a power of distress, or a mortgage. Here, before the present devise, there is stated to have been a conveyance to one in right of whom the devisees claim the rent in respect of part of the demised premises. In this case there is no means of apportioning the rent. If after a demise the landlord sells part of the demised property, that does not disturb the tenancy, but the tenancy of part goes with the reversion of such part, and the law will then apportion the rent. That does not apply here. Who is to say that the devisees will be content with the proportion that the jury may make? The law has not here the power of apportioning; all the parties are not before the Court. There was not here any charge on the land in favour of the party to whom this payment of rent was made; no debt was here due from the landlord, nor any authority to the party to whom this was paid given by the landlord to receive it; therefore this plea cannot be supported as a plea of payment.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Kaye v. Dutton.

Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff, and Dowling, Serjt. for the defendant, argued the demurrer in this cause. Cur. adv. vult.

Harper v. Phillips.
Writ of trial—Issue—Waiver.

Talfourd, Serjt. applied for a rule to shew cause why the writ of trial in this cause should not be set aside. The declaration was for goods sold and delivered, work and labour and account stated; the pleas were payment into court of 1*l.* 6*s.*, and except as to that sum, never indebted, and the Statute of Limitations. The plaintiff's claim was in respect of work done in the years 1835 and 1836; the defendant was not served with process until January 1844, but in the issue the plaintiff stated the writ to have been issued in July 1841. Objection was taken at the trial to this; but the under-sheriff of Gloucester, before whom the cause was tried, refused to take notice of the writ, except as it appeared on the record. The affidavit stated that the roll had been searched, and that the writ had not been returned and continuances entered to save the statute. [Cresswell, J.—Did not the issue disclose this objection?] Yes. [Cresswell, J.—Should not you have taken an earlier step, and instead of proceeding to trial, have applied to set the issue aside?]

The COURT.—Your objection is against the issue. The trial seems to have been right, and the objection comes now too late. Rule refused.

EMERSON v. BROWN.

Practice.—In this court a rule nisi is no stay of proceedings, unless previous notice of the application has been given to the opposite party.

Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside appearance entered by the plaintiff according to the statute, on the ground that no writ of summons had been served on the defendant.

The COURT granted a rule nisi, but as no notice had been given to the plaintiff of this application, stated that, according to the universal practice of this Court, this could not be any stay of proceedings; accordingly, Byles, Serjt. declined then to take his rule, leave being given him to renew his motion on a subsequent day, after notice should have been given of the same.

HOLLINGSWORTH v. BOUSER.

A prisoner is entitled to his discharge under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, notwithstanding the debt is for rent of premises, which he perversely refuses to deliver up to his landlord.

Dowling, Serjt. applied for the defendant's discharge under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, the debt being under 20*l.* and the defendant having been in prison for more than a year.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause in the first instance, on the ground that the debt was in respect of rent for premises of which the defendant is tenant, and that he perversely refuses to deliver up possession.

The COURT.—We do not think we have any discretion in the matter. The defendant is entitled to his discharge as of right. Rule absolute.

Monday, May 6.

BROOKS v. HODSON.

Practice—Judgment on a judge's order—Amendment.

In this cause a judge's order had been made by consent, authorizing the plaintiff to sign judgment and issue execution for the sum of 1,452*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* if the same should not be paid by certain instalments mentioned in the order; default was made in payment of the first instalment. No declaration had been delivered prior to the order of the learned judge, but at the time of signing judgment the plaintiff prepared a declaration in debt, in which the aggregate sum demanded was 4,800*l.* Judgment was signed for this amount, and execution was issued accordingly for the same; but a direction to the sheriff's officer was indorsed to levy the sum really due by the judge's order. On a former day, Sir Thomas Wilde obtained a rule to set aside this judgment and execution.

Channell, Serjt. now moved for a cross rule, either to be allowed to amend the declaration and judgment roll, and fi. fa. to the proper sum for which the plaintiff had leave by the judge's order to sign judgment, or to let the same stand in the declaration, and be allowed to enter a remittitur for the residue; the plaintiff submitting to such terms as to payment of costs, or otherwise, as this Court should think fit.

Rule nisi accordingly, to come on for argument with the rule obtained by Sir Thomas Wilde.

The cases of Webber v. Hutchins (8 M. & W. 319), and Phillips v. Birch (5 Scott, N. R. 178), were referred to.

LANGFORD v. WOODS.

Practice—Amending declaration by adding a new count after two Terms had elapsed since appearance—Good faith.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the amendments of the declaration in this cause, made pursuant to the order of Coltman, J. should not be disallowed or struck out, and why the plaintiff or his attorney should not pay to the defendant his costs occasioned by such amendments, together with the costs of his application.

The defendant's appearance to this action was entered on the 29th June last. On the 3rd Nov. the declaration in an action on the case was delivered, complaining of the defendant having wrongfully pulled down a chimney belonging to a messuage in the occupation of plaintiff's tenant. The defendant having pleaded not guilty, and two pleas of justification, took out a summons on the 23rd Nov. for liberty to add another plea. The plaintiff was also desirous to amend his declaration, and on the 24th Nov. some understanding was apparently come to between the attorneys for the respective parties, though from the affidavits now filed there were very conflicting statements as to what such understanding was; the question being, whether it was not then agreed between the parties that the cause should stand over, the defendant being allowed to amend his pleas without payment of costs, and the plaintiff to be allowed to apply, when he should think proper, for leave to amend his declaration. The plaintiff took out his summons to amend the declaration on the 22nd January last, which was returnable before Coltman, J. who made the order to amend generally, now objected to. The objection to the allowing this amendment was, that in the absence of any agreement between the parties, the plaintiff was too late, inasmuch as the amendment, which was to add a new count to the declaration, must necessarily be in respect of a new cause of action, or otherwise it would be in violation of the new rules of pleading. Therefore to allow such an amendment, would, it was said, on the part of the defendant, be tantamount to allowing the plaintiff to declare after two Terms had elapsed since the appearance.

Byles, Serjt. was heard in support of the rule.

The COURT said that the question was, what was the understanding between the respective attorneys of the parties on the 24th Nov. last. It appeared to the Court from the affidavits that the defendants knew at that time of the plaintiff's intention to amend his declaration, and that there was such an understanding between the parties as to lead the plaintiff to suppose that no such objection as this would have been made. The defendant ought not now to be allowed to set up the strict rule of law. The real question was, whether, if the plaintiff had not declared at all up to the 23rd Nov. and the defendant had signed judgment of non pros. the Court would not, after such an understanding come to as the affidavits disclosed, have set such judgment aside as being contrary to good faith.

Rule discharged without costs—defendant to have a week's time to plead.

HEWITT and OTHERS, Assignees of the Sheriff of Surrey, v. RAYMOND and OTHERS.

Replevin—Action on bond—Staying proceedings.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to stay the further proceedings in this cause.

This was an action on a replevin bond brought in this Court against the plaintiff in the replevin suit and his sureties, for an alleged breach of the condition to the bond. A distress had been made in the name of Deborah Hewitt, the administratrix of one — Hewitt, deceased. This distress was replevied, and the bond taken by the sheriff upon that occasion was conditioned to prosecute the action with effect against James Hewitt, Deborah Hewitt, and one Sampson. Deborah Hewitt being a married woman, the plaintiff in replevin felt himself unable to comply strictly with the terms of the condition, and declared, therefore, against James Hewitt and Sampson only. The replevin suit was removed by re. fa. lo. into the Queen's Bench. Notice of trial was given for the last Lent Assizes at Kingston, but by agreement between the parties a suggestion was entered on the record, and the venue changed for Middlesex. After thus acquiescing in the change of the venue, the defendants in the replevin suit take an assignment of the bond from the sheriff, and bring an action thereon in this court against Raymond, the plaintiff in the replevin suit, and his sureties, for not having complied with the condition of the replevin bond. Wilson v. Hartley (7 Dowl. 461) was referred to. Rule nisi.

MOFFAT v. PITCHER.

Practice—When the plaintiff is known to the defendant, and has no other residence than a coffee-house, such place may be given in compliance with an order for the description of his place of abode.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the issue and notice of trial delivered in this cause should not be set aside, and why the plaintiff should not pay the costs of this application.

It appeared that the plaintiff, who had formerly been a lieutenant, hired the house of the defendant, No. 17 Charles-street, Covent garden (then in the occupation of a tenant of the defendant, of the name of Hembert), under a written agreement, by which the defendant engaged with the plaintiff Moffat, who was there described as late lieutenant in her Majesty's regiment, not to distrain on the goods of the plaintiff for rent due from the tenant Hembert. In violation of this agreement, the defendant, however, did distrain, and the present action was in consequence brought to recover damages in respect of such distress. The defendant took out a summons, calling upon the plaintiff to declare his profession, occupation, quality, and place of abode, upon which, by consent, a judge's order was accordingly made. In compliance with this order, the plaintiff delivered the following particular, properly entitled in the Court, and between the parties—"The plaintiff resides at No. 6, Agar-street, Strand, and is by profession a late lieutenant."

The defendant objected to this description, and took out a summons for a further and better particular, but which was dismissed, the learned judge refusing to make any order. The objections made before the learned judge to this particular were, 1st, that the description "lieutenant" was too general and vague; and 2ndly, that No. 6, Agar-street, was the British Coffee-house, and not the proper residence of the plaintiff.

CRESSWELL, J.—Did the defendant make an affidavit that he did not know what lieutenant the plaintiff meant by his particular?—No; and as to the residence, it was a true description, and the only one the plaintiff could give; he had gone and slept at the coffee house the night before he gave this particular, and it appears that he continued afterwards to reside there for nearly a month, and had no other place of residence whatever, having previously been obliged to leave the house in Charles street.

TINDAL, C. J.—Supposing he had gone there only that morning, where else could he have given as his place of residence?

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—This particular was delivered on the 23rd January last, and by the affidavits it appears, that on inquiry at the British Coffee-house on the 24th January, it was ascertained that a gentleman of the name of the plaintiff had slept there for the first time on the previous night, and had then gone out, and it was not known whether he would return and sleep there or not. This is not therefore a sufficient compliance with the order. Hodson v. Gamble (3 Dowl. P.C. 174) was cited.

The COURT.—The object of this order for the particulars of the plaintiff's residence, was to learn where the defendant might be able to find the plaintiff, and this has been satisfied by the account which was so furnished. It is not like the case of an unknown plaintiff, as to whether there is really any such person answering to the name of the person suing, but here the plaintiff had been a tenant to the defendant, and was therefore well known to him. The rule must be discharged, and as it was moved with costs, it must be Discharged with costs.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

METCALFE v. BUSBY.—Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to set aside the verdict which had been found for the defendant, on the ground of its having been against evidence. Rule nisi.

CONWAY v. NALL.—Byles, Serjt. applied on behalf of the bailiff of the liberty of Chesterfield, in the county of Derby, for an interpleader rule. Rule.

HOGG v. TALBOT.—Channell, Serjt. applied for a new trial; the cause having been suddenly called on, and tried as an undefended cause in the absence of defendant's counsel. The Court granted a rule nisi for the last day of term, on the condition that the defendant should bring money into court to the amount of the verdict.

FISH v. PRESTON.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment in this cause, and the execution issued thereon, should not be set aside for irregularity, as having been against good faith, and why in the meantime all further proceedings should not be stayed. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, May 7.

BATE v. LAWRENCE.

Assignees of B, a bankrupt, have notice on the 16th January, that a judgment against B had been signed on a warrant of attorney. In Easter Term an application was made by the assignees to set this judgment aside, on the ground that the warrant of attorney did not authorize a judgment to be signed in a vacation. Held that this objection to the judgment was waived by the lapse of time.

Sir T. Wilde shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained on behalf of the assignees of the defendant, a bankrupt, to set aside the judgment which had been signed against the defendant, and the execution which had issued on such judgment. The judgment had been signed on a warrant of attorney, which authorized plaintiff to sign judgment "as of Trinity Term then last, Michaelmas Term then next, or any subsequent Term." Judgment had been signed on this warrant of attorney on the 30th November last, and the rule had been obtained on the ground that the warrant of attorney did not authorize a judgment being signed in vacation, and the latter was therefore bad, on the authority of the cases of Coulson v. Clutterbuck (2 Dowl. N.S. 391); Cobbold v. Chilver (4 Scott's N.R. 678); and Rayment v. Smith (3 Dowl. N.S. 166).

The judgment of the Court being confined to the question of the objection being made too late, the arguments on the other point are omitted.

Sir T. Wilde.—As to the objection being too late, the levy under the execution was on the 6th of December last. The fiat in bankruptcy against the defendant was on the 18th December, and the assignees were chosen on the 3rd January in the present year. No motion is made on the subject of this irregularity until the present Easter Term. It appears, from the communication that took place between the assignees and the plaintiff, that on the 16th January they were aware that plaintiff's judgment was founded on a warrant of attorney, they ought then to have inquired into this irregularity.

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—The judgment not being signed as authorized is not an irregularity which may be waived, but the judgment is void. [CRESSWELL, J.—Irregularity is a violation of some rule of practice, but this is said to be against an authority given by a party.] Yes; that is the distinction. [TINDAL, C. J.—If it is a nullity, you need not apply to this Court to set it aside. You may plead in justification.] It is not in such sense a nullity. The rights of third parties have, by the bankruptcy, intervened; it is not an irregularity, therefore, which can be waived.

(Webber v. Hutchins, 8 M. & W. 319.) In this case the examination of the bankrupt was on the 3rd February, and not until after there was a search made as to the signing of this judgment. Although aware of the judgment, the assignees were not, until then, aware that it had been signed not in pursuance of the authority.

TINDAL, C. J.—If it had been necessary to decide this case with reference to the authorities of Cobbold v. Chilver and Bird v. Manning, which have been cited in support of this rule, we should have found it extremely difficult to have distinguished this from those authorities. But a party seeking to set aside a judgment on such an objection as this should come to the court with due diligence. Here the levy was made on the 6th December, and the application to this court was not made until the present Easter Term; seeking to compel the plaintiff to refund money which he has so long ago received, and may have disposed of. The position of the plaintiff is, therefore, greatly altered by this delay. It is very different from where the money has only been recently received before the application is made. This is only a non-compliance with a technical rule, the very introduction of these words, "as of Trinity Term," &c. shewing that the parties themselves really intended that judgment might be signed in a vacation. The levy was on the 6th of December; and I am not prepared to say that the delay from that time to the 18th of December, when the fiat was issued, was not sufficient to have deprived the bankrupt of the benefit of this objection to the judgment; and the assignees who claim under the bankrupt ought not to be placed in a better situation. The assignees were appointed on the 3rd of January, and it appears from the correspondence that took place, that at all events on the 16th of January they knew that the judgment was founded on a warrant of attorney. Allowing them, therefore, a reasonable time to make inquiry, they might have made this application in Hilary Term; but they suffer not only the whole of that Term to pass without taking any step to set aside the judgment, but also the vacation, though they might then have gone before a judge at chambers. The Court, after this delay, cannot now attend to this application.

COLTMAN, J.—This is an application founded on an objection strictissimi juris, we are therefore justified in holding the parties to the rules of the Court, one of which rules is, that after notice of the proceedings in which the irregularity is contained, the party is bound to use due diligence in inquiring into the same, and to promptly apply to the Court after knowledge of the irregularity has been obtained.

CRESSWELL, J.—This objection is like that which is made when a judgment is not signed at a proper time, and is therefore an irregularity. In ordinary cases, when a party consents to a judgment being signed against him, it is the Court which gives the authority, and if the judgment is signed at a different time from that authorized, it is treated merely as an irregularity. Rule discharged, with costs.

YOUNG v. WARREN.

Where, in moving for an attachment for non-payment of a sum of money, the affidavit that a demand of the money was made is contradicted in this respect by the affidavit of the opposite party, the Court will not grant the attachment.

Sir T. Wilde shewed cause against a rule for an attachment against Mr. Beck, the attorney of the defendant, for non payment to the defendant of the sum of 21*l*. 13s. 6d. ordered to be refunded to him on the taxation of the bills of costs of Beck. There were contradictory statements in the affidavits of the respective parties, as to a demand of this sum having been made on Beck at the time he was served with a copy of the rule and Master's allocatur.

Dowling, Serjt. appeared in support of the rule.

The COURT.—It is for the party seeking to make this rule absolute to shew that a demand of the sum was made. Where what is affirmed on the one side is denied on the other, the Court have no means like a jury of determining the matter.

Rule discharged.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, May 3.

WHITMORE and ANOTHER, Assignees, &c. v. GILMOUR.

The defendant contracted with the bankrupt for the printing of 500 impressions from an engraving which the bankrupt had engraved for him, part of these impressions were sent in before the fiat issued, and the remainder afterwards. Held, that the assignees were entitled to maintain an action in their own names for the printing of the whole of the 500 impressions.

Peacock shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs, and to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages to the sum of 5*l*. 17s. 6d.

This was an action brought by the assignees of a bankrupt for work and labour by themselves as assignees, to recover the price of printing off 500 copies of a certain engraving, the plate of which had been finished before the issuing of the fiat. After the act of bankruptcy, but before the fiat, an order was given to strike off a certain number of impressions; part of these impressions had been struck off before the fiat, and the assignees had provided the bankrupt with money since the fiat, to enable him to complete the order. It was now submitted that the order was entire, and therefore that no right of action existed until the completion of it in the time of the assignees, and therefore the action was properly brought in their names; but that, at any rate, they were entitled to retain the verdict for the amount of 5*l*. 17s. 6d. for that part of the order which had been completed since the date of the fiat, because the payment of the money by the assignees was evidence from which the jury might infer that the bankrupt was merely acting as their agent in completing the work for the benefit of the estate; citing Aldred v. Kitteridge (8 B. Moore, 372); Stead v. Thornton (3 B. & Ad. 357); 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56; 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 31.

James, in support of the rule, contended that, although it might be true that the action would have been properly brought in the names of the assignees if their property had been used, yet, in the present case, the contract was for the mere personal labour of the bankrupt in printing off these impressions; and that a bankrupt is not so far the agent of the assignees as to make it competent to them to come forward at any time and say, they will adopt his contract, and therefore the action should have been brought in his name; citing Crofton v. Poole (1 B. & Ad. 568).

The COURT held it clear that this was one entire order for 500 copies, and that no right of action arose until the 500 copies were completed; and as that event did not happen until after the appointment of the assignees, it was they, and they alone, who ought to sue, for it was only on the completion of the work that any debt was contracted to be paid; and therefore the assignees were entitled to the full amount claimed. With respect to the question of agency, that was a question of fact; but in the present case there was ample evidence from which they could infer that the bankrupt was acting on behalf of the assignees. Rule discharged.

WHITTOME and OTHERS, Administrators of ALICE HUTCHINSON, v. LAMB.

A testator, by his will, devised certain lands to the use of his sons in fee, and then declared his will to be that his wife should have the use and occupation, or annual increase thereof, at her pleasure, during the minority of his said sons, she keeping them in order. Held to be a devise of a chattel interest, which at her death survived to her personal representatives, so as to enable them to maintain an action upon a lease granted by her.

Byles, Serjt. and Gunning, shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant.

This was an action of covenant for the non-payment of half a year's rent under an indenture whereby the said Alice Hutchinson demised certain premises to the defendant for the term of twelve years.

Pleas.—1st. Non est factum. 2nd. A special traverse of the said Alice Hutchinson being possessed of the reversion.

The lands in question had been devised by the will of Coteley Hutchinson, the husband of the intestate, to the use of his sons in fee, subject to the following declaration:—"And it is my will and desire that my said wife shall have the use and occupation or annual increase thereof at her pleasure, during the minority of my said sons, she keeping them in order." Neither of his sons had yet attained their majority.

It was submitted that this was a bequest of the lands to the wife for so many years as should elapse between the death of the husband and the sons attaining their majority, defeasible only on their dying under age; and would, therefore, go to her executors after her death; citing Bishop Bath's case (6 Co. Rep. 35); Borraston's case (3 Co. Rep. 19); Say v. Smith (Plowd. 273 (a)); Paramour v. Yardly (Plowd. 543). It was also submitted that the action was properly brought by the administrator, and not the heir, notwithstanding the defendant's covenant was with the intestate, her heirs, executors, and administrators, and that it was no variance to describe it in the declaration as a covenant with the deceased, her executors, and administrators only, omitting the word heirs; citing Sacheverell v. Froggatt (1 Ventr. 161); Whitlock's case (8 Rep. 70 (b)); Burrows v. Stephens (1 Marsh R. 217); Baker v. Laird (2 Ventr. 145, S. C.; 4 Mod. 149); Smith v. Havens (2 Cro. Eliz.).

B. Andrews and O'Malley, contrà, contended that the intestate had merely an estate for her life in the lands in question; and, therefore, although the sons had not attained their majority, her estate determined by her death, and no interest in the reversion accrued to her administrator, who, therefore, could not maintain the action: citing 2 Jarman on Wills, 744; and that the omission of the word heirs in the declaration was a variance, citing 2 Leon. 221.

The COURT held that the use and occupation of the lands, bequeathed by the will, gave the intestate an estate during the son's minority, liable to be divested by their dying under age; and that she had a chattel interest which would enable her to grant the lease, which, at her death, survived to her executors; and that the omission of the word heir was no variance.

Rule discharged.

CHANTER v. DEWHURST and ANOTHER.

Patent—Construction of clause, requiring license under the patentee's hand and seal.

Humfrey and Corner shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit.

This was an action brought to recover from the defendant the sum of 31*l*. 10s. for a license to erect and use a certain patent invention, called Chanter's furnace. At the trial, the plaintiff obtained a verdict, and the present rule was obtained upon the ground that the license, when produced, was found to be only under hand, whereas the clause in the patent, enabling the plaintiff to grant the license, was as follows: "That no person, &c. either directly or indirectly, do make, use, or put in practice, the said invention, nor in any wise counterfeit, imitate, or resemble the same, nor shall make or cause to be made, any addition thereunto, or subtraction from the same, whereby to pretend himself or themselves the inventor or inventors, devisor or devisors thereof, without the license, consent, or agreement of the said plaintiff, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in writing, under his or their hands and seals first had and obtained in that behalf."

It was submitted, that it was unnecessary to have a license under seal where it was only intended the license, should use the invention, and that a license under seal was only required where the object of the license was to make the patent article for sale; the prohibition was against using the invention, not against using any article produced by that invention, otherwise every purchaser of a furnace would be obliged to obtain a license under the plaintiff's hand and seal: citing Protheroe v. May (5 M. & W. 675); Chanter v. Lees (4 M. & W. 295).

Rawlinson, contrà.

The COURT held, that the meaning of the clause was, that a license, under hand and seal, was necessary to enable any third party to deal with the invention as the patentee himself could do, and that it was clear the license in question was not such an one.

STANLEY v. AGNEW.—Talfourd, Serjt. and Flood, shewed cause against rule to set aside verdict for plaintiff, and enter same for defendant. Keating, contrà. Rule discharged.

LEWIS v. MUSGROVE and ANOTHER.—Part heard.

Saturday, May 4.

HAWKINS v. HASSELL.

When a defendant takes out a judge's order "to stay proceedings on payment of debt and costs, and, in case of default, the plaintiff to be at liberty to sign final judgment," if no appearance has been entered, the plaintiff must enter it before he can sign final judgment, otherwise the defendant may set it aside as a nullity.

Erle shewed cause against a rule to set aside the judgment signed, and all subsequent proceedings thereon, upon the ground of irregularity. It appeared that about the 27th Nov. 1843 the declaration was delivered to the defendant's attorney, and returned by him, on the ground that no appearance had been entered; on the 13th of December a judge's order was obtained by the defendant to stay proceedings on payment of the debt and costs, and, in case of default, the plaintiff to be at liberty to sign final judgment. On the 16th December final judgment was signed. On the 15th December, the costs of the rule of the 13th were taxed and paid, but it was not until the 12th March, 1844, that the defendant became aware that any appearance had been entered, or that judgment had been signed. On that day he was served with the Master's allocatur. It was submitted that the judge's order of the 13th December, according to the decision in the case of Lloyd v. Kent (5 Dowl. 127), must be considered as tantamount to an appearance by the defendant, and, therefore, the judgment was regular.

Knowles and Bagley, contrà, contended that the judge's order was equivalent to a cognovit, and that judgment having been signed, without an appearance entered, it was a nullity: that the payment of costs under the judge's order of the 13th December was made for the purpose of saving the defendant from the costs of final judgment, and, therefore, that it did not prevent his raising the present objection: citing Roberts v. Spurr (3 Dowl. 551); Watson v. Dore (2 M. & W. 386); Richardson v. Daly (4 M. & W. 384); Cook v. Raven (1 T. R. 655); Dean v. Calvert (4 T. R. 578).

The COURT said that the Master certified it was the universal course to require an appearance to be entered before final judgment was signed, and that he should not have made his allocatur unless he was satisfied that an appearance was entered upon it; and, therefore, it must be referred back to him to ascertain whether, from the facts of the case, the defendant must have known that an appearance had been entered; and if not, that he was entitled to set aside the judgment as a nullity, and the rule must be made absolute. Referred to the Master.

DUCKETT (by Wm. Duckett, his next friend) v. SATCHWELL.

The Court will vacate an order for the father of an infant plaintiff to sue as prochein ami, if it appear that he is insolvent, and that reasonable endeavours have not been made to find a more substantial party who is willing to undertake the office.

Jerris moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why Wm. Duckett, his next friend, should not be removed, and all proceedings stayed, unless and until he give security for costs.

It appeared that the said Wm. Duckett was the father of the plaintiff, and that on the 18th of April, 1844, he was appointed prochein ami, before which period he had been discharged as an insolvent debtor; that the plaintiff had lived with, and been brought up by, a person of the name of Alder, a person in good circumstances, but that he had been not applied to. The action was for slander; the declaration was delivered on the 18th of April last, the day on which the prochein ami had been appointed, but no plea had been pleaded. The practice of the Court of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas is at variance in this respect, for according to Yarworth v. Mitchell (2 Dow. & Ry. 423) the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere as soon as it appears that the father is the prochein ami, but the Court of Common Pleas make no difference on that account, but act upon one general principle: citing Doe dem. Selby v. Halston (1 T. R. 491); Turner v. Turner (2 P. W. 297); Squarrell v. Squarrell (ib. note); Mann v. Berther (4 M. & P. 215); Watson v. Frazer (9 Dowl. 74, S. C.; 8 M. & W. 660); Heaford v. M'Night (2 B. & C. 579).

Baddeley shewed cause in the first instance, and submitted that the application was too late, because the defendant had notice of the appointment on the 18th of April, and on the 23rd and 29th of April obtained time to plead, on the condition of taking notice of trial for the sittings after Term, and therefore, according to Muller v. Gernon (3 Taunt. 272), was not at liberty to raise the objection; that the bankruptcy or insolvency of the plaintiff is no ground for calling upon him to give security for costs: citing Ray v. Brown (8 Dowl.); Ross v. Jacks (8 M. & W. 135; and cases cited, 2 Ch. Arch. 1014); and that it would be a case of great hardship upon the son if the Court made the rule absolute, as the father swore there was no probability of his finding any one else, and in that case the son would be without remedy, in a matter seriously affecting his character.

The COURT admitted the hardship, but considered it did not sufficiently appear that any exertion had been made to obtain a solvent party to act as prochein ami, and that until that was shewn, it would be unreasonable to confirm the father's appointment.

Order vacated, with power to the plaintiff to renew the application, or to substitute another party.

REG. v. THOMAS JAMES STOWELL.

Semble,—that the proper course for a party to adopt, who is wrongly charged upon a recognizance, is to come in and traverse it.

Charnock moved for a rule, calling upon the Attorney-General to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue, for the purpose of quashing a certain recognizance, or the writ of execution founded thereon, or to discharge the defendant out of custody of the sheriff of Surrey.

It appeared, that in the year 1842, a person of the name of Smith had been indicted at the Aylesbury sessions for horse-stealing, and that the defendant had then become bail for his appearance at the sessions. Smith afterwards removed the indictment by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, and, upon that occasion, again applied to the defendant to become bail for him; but he refused, and heard no more of the matter until he was called upon to pay 2*l.* to save his recognizance being estreated. This he refused to do, upon the ground that he had only entered into the recognizance for Smith's appearance at the sessions, and that had been satisfied by the certiorari, that he had never entered into any recognizance in the Queen's Bench, from which the writ of execution issued; and that the present recognizance appeared to be given in the name of Thomas Stowell.

The application was made upon the ground, that some other person had represented himself to be the defendant, and had entered into the recognizance without the consent of the defendant.

The matter stood over until to-day, when the COURT said the proper course would be to traverse the recognizance, according to the practice laid down in Price's Crown Practice, 657; but as the defendant stated himself to be utterly unable to incur any such expense, they would grant the rule, but would say nothing of the effect of it, in case the Crown took no notice of it.

Rule nisi, to be served on the solicitor to the Treasury and the prosecutor.

CARR v. HOPKINS.

Repleader.

Ogle shewed cause against a rule for setting aside the verdict for the defendant, and for a repleader, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his declaration.

This was an action of debt for half a year's rent, and the declaration, after averring the demise to the defendant, went on to allege that, by virtue of the said indenture, the defendant entered into the said demised premises.

To this, the defendant pleaded non est factum, and issue was joined upon it. At the trial, the plaintiff was unable to prove the execution of the lease by the defendant, and the defendant therefore had the verdict. It was submitted that the defendant had not committed any error in his pleadings, and although the plaintiff may have done so, that was no reason why the Court would grant him a repleader, citing Williams v. Bosey (1 B. & B. 257); Stephens on Pleading (138); Goodburn v. Bowman (9 Bing. 532).

Palmer, contrà, contended that he was entitled to the rule, because, if the cause were removed into a court of error, it would appear that non est factum had been pleaded to an action of debt, and therefore no issue would appear to have been raised between the parties on which the merits could be tried.

The COURT held, that although a repleader is generally only granted where both parties have committed some error, it was clear that the suit had been determined upon an immaterial issue: that this must, therefore, be considered rather as an application to the discretion of the Court, and in substance, as a motion for a new trial, and, therefore, they would make the rule absolute on payment of all costs. Rule absolute.

Re ROWSELL.

Legacy duty.

Erle, F. A. Rogers, and Bing, shewed cause against a rule calling on the executors of the will of a party of the name of Rowsell to pay the legacy duty in respect of a certain annuity of which the deceased was entitled to dispose, as a contributor to the fund established under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 73, being "An Act for establishing and regulating a fund for the widows, children and relatives of officers or persons belonging to the department of the customs in England." It was submitted that this was not property of the testator, nor assets that he might share as he thought fit, but was confined to a particular class of persons, and therefore not within 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 7: citing Re Cholmondeley (3 Ves. 10), Platt v. Routh (6 M. & W. 756); Lord Townshend v. Wyndham (2 Ves. sen. 1); 1 Sugden on Powers, 342; Brereton v. Brereton (2 Ves. sen. 157).

H. Twiss and Crompton, contrà.

The COURT were clearly of opinion that the testator had no general power over the fund, but that it was like the ordinary case of a man insuring his life for the benefit of his wife or children, and therefore no duty was payable. Rule discharged.

WILTON v. SNOOK.

Costs—Amendment—Plea de novo after cause made remanet.

H. Hill shewed cause against a rule for a review of taxation of the plaintiff's costs.

It appeared that a declaration in debt for work and labour, and goods sold and delivered, to the amount of 70*l.* 0s. 5*d.* had been delivered on the 5th January, 1843. The declaration gave credit on the face of it for 38*l.* 10s. 8*d.* and alleged as a breach the non-payment of the balance. A bill of particulars was delivered under a judge's order, giving credit for 38*l.* 10s. 8d. cash on account, and claiming 31*l.* 19s. 9d. as the balance due. The defendant pleaded never indebted. Notice of trial was given for the London sittings in Hilary Term, when both parties attended and were ready to try, but the cause was made a remanet for the sittings after Term. Before the adjournment day viz. on the 14th Feb.—the plaintiff took out a summons for leave to amend, and on the 16th an order was made that on payment of costs the plaintiff be at liberty to amend his declaration and particulars; the defendant to have eight days time to plead. The record was thereupon withdrawn, and the plaintiff amended it, altering the sum in the count in the declaration to 31*l.* 19s. 9d., the balance claimed as the declaration originally stood. The defendant pleaded payment into Court of 20*l.* 5s. 9d., and never indebted, as to the residue. The plaintiff replied by taking that sum out of Court, and entering a nolle prosequi as to the residue. An appointment was then made to tax costs, and upon the taxation the plaintiff contended that he was entitled to the costs of the original issue, record, brief, fees to counsel, costs of trial, and witnesses. The defendant objected, that he having had leave to plead de novo, and having done so, a new state of facts had arisen, in which neither witnesses, brief, nor record were necessary, and that the plaintiff could not, therefore, be entitled to them. The Master disallowed them, and only allowed such costs as he would have allowed if the defendant had paid money into Court at once.

Prideaux, in support of the rule, contended that the defendant was entitled to all the costs attending the trial of the cause up to the time of its being made a remanet, which was the act of the Court, and not of the plaintiff; that there was nothing to prevent the defendant pleading the same pleas at first, and, in order to obtain the verdict, it would have been necessary for the defendant to pay money into Court at first; by not having done so, he must have lost it if the cause had been tried at the proper time, and ought not to be placed in a better situation now: consequently, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs in question: citing Morris v. Jones (1 Q. B., 397); Bosh v. Bettle (Q. B. E. T. 1844).

The COURT held it decided by Smethurst v. Taylor (2 Law T. 448), that payment admitted on the record calls upon the plaintiff to go further than the demand made, and, therefore the plaintiff was right in amending his declaration, but by so doing he had obliged the defendant to plead de novo, and as he had so done, a new state of facts had arisen, upon which no issue at all had been raised, and, therefore, the Master was quite right in disallowing these costs. Rule discharged.

Wednesday, May 8.

EMBLIN v. DARTNELL.

Where a defendant intends to move to set aside a verdict for the plaintiff, but being unable to do so in consequence of the business of the Court, enters it on the list on the fourth day of Term, and actually moves it on the fifth day, but before notice, the plaintiff has signed judgment, the defendants must pay the costs of signing judgment, or the Court will not make the rule absolute.

Petersdorff shewed cause against a rule to arrest the judgment on the first count of the declaration, and also to enter a verdict for the defendant on the second issue. This was an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, which was stated in the declaration to be payable at No. 2, Philpot-lane; and the rule was obtained upon the ground, that the first count was bad for not averring presentment at that place: and secondly, because there was no breach of promise alleged in that count, but merely a general breach to that, and the count upon the account stated. A preliminary objection was taken that the motion was not made until the fifth day of Term, and therefore it was too late, as no notice had been given to the plaintiff's attorney, who had signed judgment about 11 o'clock on the morning of the fifth day, before receiving any communication from the defendant: citing Doe dem. Duncan v. Edwards (7 Dowl, 547).

Hurlstone, contrà, submitted that the motion was made in time; because, although not actually made before the fifth day, it was virtually, because it had been entered on the list on the fourth day, and it was only owing to the business of the Court that the motion was not made.

The COURT held that it was the defendant's duty to have given notice to the plaintiff, and not having done so, he must pay the costs of signing judgment, which was perfectly regular.

Petersdorff then abandoned the first count, but submitted the defendant could not enter a verdict on the second, as no leave had been reserved.

The COURT held that as there was a good and a bad count, and no evidence at all upon the account stated, there must be a venire de novo.

Venire de novo awarded.

SHIRWIN v. SWINDALLS.

The statute 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, s. 4, is not affected by stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, and therefore a judge has still power to certify under the former statute, that a trespass is wilful and malicious.

Martin shewed cause against a rule to rescind a judge's certificate.

This was an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house; and it appeared that the defendant had broken open the door of the house in order to obtain certain goods to which he considered himself entitled; that he had done so after refusal by the plaintiff, and a request by her to wait until she had been to a magistrate, to know whether or not he was entitled to them. Whilst she was gone for that purpose, the defendant broke open the door and committed the trespass complained of. The learned judge was of opinion that this was not a case in which any personal malice existed, but certified, under the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c 11, s. 4, that the trespass was wilful and malicious. It was now submitted, that he was correct in so doing, as the stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, s. 4, was not affected by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, and this was a trespass exactly within the meaning of that statute: citing Reynolds v. Edwards (6 T. R. 11); 2 Stark. Ev. 673, tit. Malice; Brommage v. Prosser (4 B. & C. 247); Harrison's Woodfall, 723.

Whateley and Flood, contrà, submitted that the stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, was repealed by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24; that under the 3rd section of that Act, notice in writing must have been given, unless personal malice was proved, which was expressly excluded from this case: citing Foster v. Pointer (8 M. & W. 397).

The COURT held, that the stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3, was not repealed by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, and therefore the learned judge was correct in certifying under that statute; and that the construction contended for as to the malice within the statute of Vict. being personal only, was not borne out by Foster v. Pointer.

Rule discharged.

Ex parte WESTHAM, Appellants, and EASTBOURNE, Respondents.

Mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal. Quære, whether the recital in an order of removal, of complaint having been made by churchwardens, is conclusive of the fact, so as to preclude an appellant parish from negativing its truth.

Quære, whether, when an examination discloses that the pauper has been relieved by the appellant parish out of the parish in the union workhouse, and the appellants by their grounds of appeal do not deny this, they can dispute their liability.

The Solicitor-General applied for a mandamus commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

It appeared that an order of removal having been made from the parish of Westham to the parish of Eastbourne, the latter gave notice of appeal, and the 13th ground of objection was, that the churchwardens did not make any complaint, as set forth in the order of removal. At the sessions, the appellants proposed to shew that the order of removal was not made in fact on the complaint of the churchwardens; the justices, however, held, that as the order recited that it was made upon the complaint of the churchwardens, that they were bound by the recital, and they refused, therefore, to hear the objection. (Weston Rivers v. St. Peter's, 2 Salk. 492.)

The appellants then proposed to go into their other objections; but the Court held, that, inasmuch as the examinations disclosed the fact that the pauper had received relief from the appellant parish whilst residing in the union workhouse, which was situate out of the appellant parish, and as the appellants had not negatived this in their grounds of appeal, that they were precluded from now denying it, and that such a fact was, in itself, conclusive of the appellant parish's liability; and the Court therefore refused to hear the appellants, and confirmed the order of removal.

It was now contended that the sessions were wrong, for that the giving of relief out of a parish in a union workhouse, is not conclusive evidence of a settlement, and that the appellants ought not to have been precluded from enforcing the grounds of appeal. ELLIMAN v. WILLIAMS.

Motion to review Master's taxation—Application of R. H. T. 4 Wm. 4.

Huddleston shewed cause against a rule obtained by Jervis, Q. C., for a review of the Master's taxation.

This action had been referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator had awarded 17*l*. 3*s*. to the plaintiff. On the taxation of the costs, the Master had taxed them on the higher scale; and, in opposition to this rule it was contended that he was right in so doing, for that the Master in taxing has a discretion with which the Court should not interfere. (Williamson v. Heath, 12 L. Jour. Q. B. 168.) Also, that the rules H. T. 4 Wm. 4, as to taxation, apply only to cases where, 1st, the sum is recovered,—that is, by verdict or judgment (Holden v. ——, 2 Ad. & El. 445; Wallen v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 138); 2nd, or paid into court; 3rd, or accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction of his demand; and that this sum of 17*l*. 3*s*. being given under an award, and the arbitrator having no power to direct judgment to be entered up, the case was not within the rule, as not coming within the terms of any one of the three provisions.

Jervis, Q. C. contrà, was stopped by COLERIDGE, J. who considered that this case must be considered as an agreement by the parties to take whatever the arbitrator should award, and therefore, within the three provisions of the above rules. His Lordship further expressed himself as quite satisfied that the Master could exercise no discretion upon such a subject, but was bound to tax on the lower scale when the amount does not exceed 20*l*.

REG. v. THE VERDERERS OF THE COURT OF ATTACHMENT FOR THE FOREST OF WALTON.

Ex parte E. JONES WILLIAMS, ESQ.

Mandamus commanding the verderers of the Court of Attachments to enrol a license to sport in the forest of Walton, granted by the Chief Justice in Eyre.

Marsh shewed cause against this rule (see 2 Law T. 316), and contended, 1st, That the application should have been made to the justice-seat of the Chief Justice in Eyre, and not to this Court.

2nd, That the license to sport in the forest of Walton (to compel the enrolment of which this application was made) is illegal.

3rd, That the verderers in declining to enrol the license were perfectly justified. (Manwood's Forest Laws, pp. 5, 65, 21, 71, 350; 4 Co. Inst. c. 73, p. 295; Com. Dig. tit. Chase, H. 1, H. 2, H. 3.)

The Solicitor-General, contrà, was not called on,

COLERIDGE, J. thinking that the first and third objections could not be supported, and that the second one would be a proper subject for a return to the mandamus.

LOWE v. JENNINGS.

Filing satisfaction on a judgment.

Simon moved for a rule authorizing the Registrar of Judgments to file a satisfaction piece on a judgment obtained in this action. The facts were, that the judgment had been satisfied in October 1843, and the satisfaction piece had, by the mistake of a clerk, been filed in this court instead of with the Registrar of Judgments, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11. Since that time, the rule of Easter Term, 7 Vict. had been promulgated which requires an attestation of the satisfaction piece, similar to that required to warrants of attorney and cognovits by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The mistake having been discovered, the satisfaction piece was obtained from the officer of this Court, and taken to the Registrar of Judgments to be filed, who felt a difficulty as to receiving it in consequence of the late rule. The facts were brought before Mr. Justice Coleridge at chambers, who considered that a new satisfaction piece should be obtained properly attested.

It was now contended, that the late rule did not extend to bygone matters, but was merely prospective; that the judgment had been regularly and properly cancelled according to the practice of the Court, at the time the satisfaction piece had been signed by the plaintiff's solicitor, and filed, and that it was not a question between the plaintiff and defendant, but between the Court and the Registrar of Judgments. It was also stated, that it was important as a matter of time that the entry of the judgment in the books of the Registrar of Judgments should be cancelled by filing the satisfaction piece in that office.

His LORDSHIP, after some hesitation, granted the application.

Motion to set aside a warrant of attorney, on the ground that the attorney who attested the signatures of the defendants was off the roll at the time.

The ground of the application was, that the attorney who attested the execution had ceased (by virtue of his omitting to take out his certificate) to be, in fact, an attorney at the time when he so attested. In this case a fi. fa. had issued against the goods of the defendant, which were afterwards sold under a bill of sale. The sheriff had deducted the above amount as and for his percentage upon the appraisement; and it was now contended that he had no right to do so; for that the scale of fees made by the judges, by virtue of the 1 Vict. c. 55, allows this percentage only when the property is sold by auction.

COLERIDGE, J.—I should have thought that the rule would have been the other way.

Ex parte RICHARD ANDREWS.

Where a true bill has been found against a party for a capital felony, as for murder, a judge will not admit him to bail, even though it is clear that he will be acquitted upon his trial.

Miller, on a former day (Wednesday, May 1), applied for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the applicant, with the view to his being admitted to bail. The prisoner had been committed to the Warwick gaol on the coroner's warrant on a charge of murder. At the last assizes the grand jury returned a true bill, but in consequence of the absence of two material witnesses the trial was postponed; it had been proposed at that time on the prisoner's behalf, that the depositions taken before the coroner of these witnesses should be read on the part of the prosecution, rather than the trial should be postponed. This, however, the learned judge (Gurney, B.) refused to permit, holding that in a criminal case he had no power to allow it. At the same time an application was made that the prisoner might be admitted to bail, which application was unsuccessful. From the statement of the facts of the case, it would appear that the evidence upon which the grand jury found the bill was illegal, and that there was really no case whatever upon which a petty jury could convict.

WIGHTMAN, J. after taking time to look into the authorities, this day refused the application; his lordship said, that no single instance had been adduced of a party having been admitted to bail on a charge of murder after the grand jury had returned a true bill; and that the case which had been cited of the Queen v. Scaife and Wife (9 Dowl. 553) was not a case of a capital felony, for which reason it was clearly distinguishable from the present one; that the instances where parties had been admitted to bail on a coroner's inquisition proceeded upon the ground that the depositions were before the Court, which was not the case where a bill is returned by the grand jury, in which the Court is in ignorance of the evidence upon which the jury have acted; that the decisions upon the point had been uniform, and that there was a case precisely in point, namely, that of Lord Mohun, 1 Salk. 103; that there were other authorities in Bac. Abr. title Bail in Criminal Cases, b, Kirk and Case, 12 Wm. 3, in which it had been held that the Court would not bail after a bill found for murder, although the party were clearly innocent. His lordship also referred to Reg. v. Chapman (8 C. & P. 558), and Reg. v. Guttridge (9 C. & P. 228), and said he felt himself, upon all the authorities, bound to refuse the application.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF CARMARTHEN.
Certiorari to remove justices' certificate for directing a highway under the General Highway Act, for certain defects.

The Solicitor General moved, on the part of the Crown, for a certiorari to remove a certificate of certain justices of the peace of Carmarthenshire, together with the order of sessions thereon, for stopping up and diverting a certain highway leading to the sea-side, with the view to quashing the same. The certificate in question had been made by two justices, under the authority of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, ss. 84, 85 (the General Highway Act), which certificate had been enrolled at the sessions in January last, pursuant to sec. 85; and on the part of the Crown it was contended, 1st, That it did not appear on the face of the certificate that the request of the surveyor to the justices to view the road was preceded by any meeting of the inhabitants. 2nd, That it did not appear that the view of the justices was a joint one. (Rex v. Cambridgeshire, 4 Ad. & Ell. 111.) 3rd, That it did not appear that the justices came to their decision exclusively upon the view. (Reg. v. Stephen Jones, 12 Ad. & Ell. 684.) 4th, That it did not appear that the requisitions of the 85th sec. that a plan should be delivered at the same time that proof of the due affixing of the notices was given, had been complied with. 5th, That it did not state that the notices were in legible characters, nor that they were inserted in a newspaper, published or generally circulated in the county. Rule nisi.

Ex parte ROBINSON.

Where a party was admitted in 1805, but has not practised, and since which year he has acted as a magistrate and a commissioner, the Court refused to re-admit him, but directed him to be re-examined, and to give his notices for the next Term.

M. Smith moved for the re-admission of the above gentleman.

The applicant had been admitted in 1805, but had never practised, having had considerable property left him. He had since then acted as a magistrate and a commissioner of taxes; but having been defrauded of a considerable portion of his fortune by a trustee, and being recently appointed to the office of steward to a lady of large landed property, in which capacity he would have to draw leases, &c. he was anxious to be re-admitted.

COLERIDGE, J.—There is the case of Ex parte Billings (5 Dowl. 395), in which the re-admission was refused where the party had discontinued his practice for thirty years, and was employed in the meantime as an officer of customs. Here the utmost legal information which the applicant would derive would be from Burn's Justice, which would be of very little service to him in drawing leases. There can be no harm in his being examined. Let him give his notices for examination next Term.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF THE NORTH RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.
Mandamus to compel justices to appoint a person to view a highway under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 5, s. 94 (the General Highway Act).

Martin, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus to the above justices, commanding them either to appoint some competent person to view a certain highway, or to view it themselves.

This was an application to compel justices to carry out the provisions of the General Highway Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), the 94th section of which provides that if information on oath shall be given that any highway is out of repair, it shall be lawful for the justices to issue a summons requiring the surveyor of the parish, &c. to appear before them, and the justices shall either appoint some competent person to view the said highway and report thereon, or the said justices shall view it themselves. On the surveyors being summoned, it was objected by them that the applicant ought to have gone into evidence of the non-repair; and the justices being of that opinion, and such evidence not being offered, they refused to appoint a person to view. Rule nisi.

SHOWLER v. STOAKES and YEOMANS.
Where, in a joint action of contract against two defendants, judgment against them both is set aside for irregularity, with costs (there being no rule to plead), at the instance of one defendant only, a payment of the costs to the other defendant will be bad, and of no avail.

Erle, Q. C. shewed cause against the rule obtained herein by T. W. Saunders, for discharging a rule making a judge's order a rule of court. (See 3 Law T. 79.)

In this case, the two defendants, who were partners, were sued for use and occupation. They appeared in person, and, not having pleaded, judgment was signed against them both by default. A summons was afterwards taken out by an attorney, to set the judgment aside for irregularity, on the ground that no rule to plead had been entered. On the hearing, the judge made an order for setting the judgment aside, with costs. The costs were afterwards taxed at 3l. 6s. 8d. which sum the plaintiff the next day paid to the defendant Stoakes, who received the amount, and gave a receipt in the action for himself and partner. Subsequently, the attorney applied to the plaintiff for the costs by letter, when an answer was returned that they had been paid as above. A formal demand was afterwards made, and, on non-payment, the judge's order was made a rule of court.

Erle, Q. C. now contended, upon affidavits, that the application to set aside the judgment having been at the instance alone of the defendant Yeomans, a payment of the costs to Stoakes was no satisfaction.

T. W. Saunders, in support, urged that, primâ facie as the proceedings were for the benefit of both defendants, the action being joint, and the judgment against the two entire, and necessarily set aside as against both, it must be taken that the proceedings were taken on the behalf of both; and that, if in fact the judgment was set aside only at the instance of Yeomans, that express notice ought to have been given of the fact; and that, in the absence of such notice, and as the money was paid to Stoakes, the other defendant, who was the partner of Yeomans, it must be deemed a sufficient payment; and that the order ought not, under such circumstances, to have been made a rule of court.

COLERIDGE, J. thought that sufficient appeared on the affidavits to shew that the judgment was set aside at the instance only of Yeomans, who therefore was the party properly entitled to the costs, and that the payment to his co-defendant was no answer to the demand made upon the Master's allocatur.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Wednesday, May 8.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re WRIGHT and OTHERS.

Auctioneers' charges.

In this case an application was made by Hamilton, the solicitor to the assignees, to rescind an item of 100*l*. paid by the official assignee to Mr. Alderman Farebrother, for the alleged sale of a policy of insurance which was valued by the Rock Company at 2,640*l*. and which, in point of fact, was bought in by the family of Mr. Berners, who was a debtor to the bankrupts' estate. At the last hearing, on the 2.' d of April last, Mr. Farebrother expressed his willingness to leave the matter in the hands of the Court, when his Honour said, that he would undertake the inquiry with the consent of both the parties, although in strictness, as the item objected to had been passed at the previous "audit" (and no matter how that had happened), he could not judicially interfere except in the manner he had just stated. Of course, however, he would not decide upon the matter without hearing such evidence as the parties might feel it necessary to produce, this being the state of the case at the last hearing, and the principle of auctioneers' right to charge for sale or no sale of policies of insurance, being considered of much more importance than the amount of the charge in question,

Hamilton now applied to his Honour, to know if he were prepared to enter upon the examination of witnesses, to justify the extraordinary charge which had been made by Mr. Farebrother for the alleged sale of this policy of insurance for 5,000*l*. On the 19th of February, 1841, sixteen policies of insurance were to be sold for the benefit of this estate. Several were sold, and five or six lots were bought in. The charge on the policy in question was upon the life of Mr. Berners (then living at Versailles), and, upon the morning of the intended sale, the assignees discovered that they had no power to sell it, as it was held by the bankrupts as a collateral security; and, ultimately, Mr. Archdeacon Berners purchased his brother's debt for 5,000*l*. The Court can easily judge of the surprise of the assignees when they found that a charge was made for commission by Mr. Farebrother upon a sum of 5,375*l*. the office value being only 2,640*l*. The charge, however, was objected to. Mr. Farebrother settled with the official assignee, who gave him cheques for the amount of his account. Somehow or other it got into the "audit," and therefore was allowed. Upon some remonstrance being made, a second account was sent in by Mr. Farebrother, differing only to a small extent from the former; and as he (Mr. Hamilton) understood it, the whole question now in issue was one of quantum meruit in relation to Mr. Farebrother. It was quite clear that a distinction was to be made between the charges for a sale of landed property and policies of insurance; but the fact appeared to be that auctioneers thought themselves entitled to charge commission as well for what they did not as what they did sell. The sale of this particular policy did not depend upon Mr. Farebrother, and for once, at least, common sense and common law agreed together, in the decision of the case of Rainy v. Bainbridge (newspaper reports). Mr. Rainy thought himself entitled to a certain amount of charge; the defendant paid in a sum which he thought reasonable into court; the jury did not think it sufficient; and, therefore, the plaintiff had a verdict; but three, at least, of the learned judges held that liability to the charge of commission was not always to be inferred in the employment of auctioneers.

Mr. Farebrother.—Always.

Hamilton.—Well, be that so or not, this policy was passed over, and Mr. Farebrother was only entitled to a quantum meruit, to which I do not object; but I think, for his one day's sale of these policies, he might be satisfied with the receipt of 80*l*. or 90*l*. I have thus far stated my objections to the charge of Mr. Farebrother, and I want to hear evidence in support of his charge, or even of the existence of the "custom" in his trade which he has set up in his justification.

Mr. Farebrother.—The account has already been settled and closed in law; but yet, if it be fairly questionable, I have no objection to have it opened. There is an established commission upon sales by respectable auctioneers, although I know full well you may get a man in almost any occupation, who will offer to do your business for one-half the amount of another person's charges. My object here is not to put a few miserable pounds in my pocket, but to assert the right to maintain the charges I have made.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—You are not, Mr. Alderman, to get remuneration for that which you did not do, though for what you have done you are entitled to a fair and liberal remuneration. This policy was sold by private contract, and not by you.

Mr. Farebrother. –It was a nomination policy, your honour; it was advertised in my particulars of sale. I also think that it was advertised a second time, which induced the friends of Mr. Berners to settle their debts to the bankrupts, and buy it in.

Hamilton.—Not exactly so. Mr. Berners was found to be in negotiation for the sale of his debt before the policy was ever put up by Mr. Farebrother; and the sale was not brought about by any labour of the auctioneer.

Mr. Farebrother.—It was only withdrawn from sale because Mr. Berners was then at Versailles.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—Even though the sale were effected by private contract, yet if it were brought about through the skill and labour of the auctioneer, it is quite clear that he should be paid a reasonable sum for his labour. In the absence of any express contract for commission you should be fairly rewarded for your skill and labour, but nothing more.

After some further discussion, the hearing was adjourned for the production of evidence to substantiate the claim of Mr. Farebrother.

Practice.

Solicitors will not be permitted to attend to oppose insolvents on the behalf of loan societies.

His HONOUR said, in an insolvent case which came before him this morning, he should take especial care not to allow solicitors attending on the part of loan societies to oppose insolvents, without they appeared properly clothed with authority. It appeared in the case alluded to that the insolvent was opposed by the secretary of a loan society, who had deputed a solicitor to attend, but as the promissory note upon which the money had been advanced was only made out in the name of one party, and the solicitor did not pretend to say that he had been directed by that party to attend, his Honour declared he had no locus standi in the Court. On the other hand, if attending as the representative of the society, the promissory note ought to contain all the names of the partners associated; but that was not the case, and hence there was a fatal objection on that ground. The Commissioners were determined, his Honour said, to give no facility to loan societies in the administration of bankruptcy or insolvency, without those societies chose to undergo the ordeal and test of applying for charters, and submitting to the pains and penalties therein contained, since it was most certain that numbers of them worked much evil among the community.

Sturgeon, who raised the point, said, in one case which had passed through his hands a poor cobbler, for an advance of 2*l*. had been obliged to pay 2*s* per. week for twelve months.

His HONOUR did not mean to say that the society now seeking to oppose was oppressive in their charges or proceedings, but of this he was quite certain, that many of them were the engines of extortion to those whom they proposed to assist. He was therefore desirous that this determination of the Court should be as speedily promulgated as possible.

SAVINGS-BANK BILL.

A printed copy of the new Government Bill to amend the laws relating to savings-banks, and to the purchase of Government annuities through the medium of savings-banks, has just been issued by the printers of the House of Commons, according to its orders of Thursday week. The names endorsed on the Bill are those of the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Sir George Clerk, Bart. the Secretary of the Treasury. The number of clauses amounts altogether to 16. The first enacts, that after the 20th day of Nov. next the annual deposits of any present or future depositor in savings-banks are not to exceed 20*l*. in the whole, exclusive of compound interest; nor is any person to be allowed to deposit more than 120*l*. in the whole; it being provided that when the investments of any depositor amount in the whole to the sum of 150*l*. (principal and interest included), the interest shall entirely cease, so long as they shall continue to amount to the said sum of 150*l*. At present depositors are allowed to invest the sum of 30*l*. annually, until their deposits reach a total amount of 150*l*. This clause is not, however, to affect deposits of or above the sum of 200*l*. on the 28th of July, 1828, or deposits which shall amount to or exceed the sum of 150*l*. on the 20th day of November next. The third clause enacts, that from and after the 20th day of November next ensuing, the interest payable to the trustees of savings-banks by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt shall be at the rate of 2d. per cent per diem; and the 4th enacts that after the same date, the interest payable to the depositors by the trustees or managers of any savings-bank shall not exceed the rate of $1\frac{3}{4}$d. per cent. per diem. This will reduce the rate of interest per diem (365 days) to about 2*l*. 13s. $2\frac{1}{4}$d. per cent. whereas at present it amounts, we believe, to 3*l*. 5s. per cent.; and thus depositors in savings-banks will be curtailed of 11s. $9\frac{3}{4}$d. per cent. per annum interest. Depositors on making their first deposit are required to sign the declaration required by the existing Acts of Parliament, and a copy thereof is to be annexed, duly signed and attested, to the deposit-book. Actuaries, secretaries, cashiers, or other officers of savings-banks, who shall receive deposits, and not immediately pay them over to the managers, on being convicted thereof will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour. Every depositor must produce his book at the institution at least once in every year, for the purpose of being examined. The 8th clause defines and limits the responsibility of trustees and managers. No "trust accounts" are to be opened after the passing of this Bill and when deposits shall be made in more names than one, the signature of all the parties will be required on repayment. Annuities are not to exceed 40*l*. nor to be less than 4*l*. per annum.; at present they are limited to 20*l*. In cases where the deposit and interest of deceased depositors do not exceed 50*l*. if no will is proved within three months the money may be paid over to the widow, or the party entitled to the effects of the deceased depositor. Such are the chief provisions of the new Bill, which, whatever may be its merits or demerits, will, if passed into a law, have a very important bearing upon the interests of the working classes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE MAGISTRATES OF WINCHESTER.

MONDAY, May 6.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from a person whose name we understood was Dennis, and who represented himself to be a master of arts, stating that being unemployed he went to Winchester to canvass for an appointment as schoolmaster, and that he took with him some religious tracts, which, being poor, he endeavoured to dispose of in the town, but that the magistrates interfered and committed him to prison as a vagrant. The petitioner complained of having undergone this sentence, prayed that the hardship of his case might be taken into consideration, and stated that he was prepared to verify his statement.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Lord BROUGHAM placed on the table the document to which he had referred on a former occasion, relating to mercantile law.

PENAL STATUTES.

Lord BEAUMONT having heard that it had been stated by the right honourable Secretary of State in another place that the Government intended to carry out the recommendation contained in the 6th report of the criminal law commissioners, with respect to the penal statutes against Catholics, wished to say that the Bill he held in his hand was not intended in any way to forestal the intentions of the Government, but he merely wished the Bill to be read a first time and printed, as it contained a recital of all the grounds of grievance now existing.—The LORD CHANCELLOR was understood to say, that it was not the intention of the Government to carry out the recommendation, but that it was under consideration. The Bill was then read a first time.

COURTS OF COMMON LAW PROCESS (ENGLAND) BILL.

On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the above Bill went through committee, with amendments. Report to-morrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE LAWS OF MORTMAIN.

TUESDAY, May 7.—Lord J. MANNERS, in rising to move for a select committee to inquire into the operation of the laws of mortmain, and the expediency of revising the same, said that last year, when he brought forward this subject, some formal objection was made to the course which he had adopted, and he then announced his intention of bringing the subject forward again in a less objectionable shape. The laws of mortmain were passed in times altogether different from the present, for the purpose of guarding against those evils which were now unknown in England, and to prevent the doing of that which it was wished might now be done. Although his motion last year was opposed so strongly, he did not think that anybody would contend that these Acts ought to remain on the statute-book, more especially that last and most stringent one which was passed in the reign of George II. The noble lord mentioned some cases in which the law, as it stood at present, had prevented the good intentions of benevolent persons from being fulfilled, to the great disadvantage of the persons they designed to benefit. All he asked upon the present occasion was, not a repeal or alteration of the laws, but for a committee of inquiry into their operation; and he would produce witnesses to shew what their effect was. If the house refused to grant the committee, he presumed it would not be because the present law was so good as to be above all doubt and suspicion, and all necessity for inquiry, but because it was so great an anomaly, and so gross an absurdity, that it could not bear investigation.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, he certainly had opposed the motion of the noble lord last year for altering the law; but he was not prepared to say upon this occasion that an inquiry into the operation of the law might not be expedient. The great question of the policy of altering the law must, however, be left to the consideration of the house. He had great pleasure in acceding to the motion of the noble lord. The motion was then agreed to.

Sir W. HEATHCOTE moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the collection of county-rates, and to relieve high-constables from compulsory attendance at quarter-sessions

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE have only to direct attention to various important cases reported in this day's LAW TIMES, and especially to one in which it has been held that a prisoner charged with murder cannot be admitted to bail, even though the evidence against him is clearly illegal, and insufficient to convict.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM, 1844.

Wednesday, May 1.

REG. v. FEWSTON.

When a pauper has been previously removed as the wife of B. K. without appeal against the removal, it is primary evidence of the husband's settlement; and the Court will not send a case back to be re-stated, in order to raise the question of whether the removal was to the wife's maiden settlement.

On appeal to the Borough Sessions of Leeds against an order, dated Feb. 1, 1843, for the removal of Elizabeth Lane from the township of Leeds to the parish of Fewston, the order was confirmed subject to a case, of which the main facts were these:—

The examination of Elizabeth Lane, who, in 1840, had been deserted by her husband, and then applied for relief to the overseers at Leeds stated that in that year "an order was made by two magistrates of Leeds for my removal from Leeds to the township of Fewston, as the last place of my lawful settlement derived though my husband, which said order was duly executed, and the overseers of the poor of Fewston received me without dispute."

This was also stated in the examination of another witness, and an order was put in for the removal of "Elizabeth Lane, the wife of John Lane," reciting that the last place of settlement of the said Elizabeth Lane is in the parish of Fewston.

The grounds of appeal upon which the case turned were, that there was no legal evidence that John Lane was settled in Fewston; that there was no consent on his part to his wife's prior removal there, and that he was then settled in Leeds.

Hall, R. in support of the order of sessions.—The order of removal of the pauper in 1810 not being appealed against, is conclusive evidence, not only that the wife was settled there, but of every material statement then made; amongst these was the fact that she was the wife of John Lane. It is conclusive as to her, her husband, and her children. (Rex v. Hinxworth, Cald. 32; Rex v. Rudgeley, 8 T. R. 620). The appellants not having appealed when they were originally aggrieved cannot afterwards deny the settlement. (Rex v. Leigh, Cald. 59; Rex v. Towcester, 2 Burr. 679).

Pashley, contrà.—The former order is conclusive only of the wife's settlement, which was then alone in discussion, and not the husband's. [DENMAN, C. J.—But that is the same.] I admit that Rex v. Rudgeley so decides it, but in Rex v. Wrighton (Cald. 39) the wife was removed as the wife of B. K. to her maiden settlement, without reference to that of her husband, and such may have been the case here. [COLERIDGE, J.—Here the removal was expressly to the maiden settlement.] It might have been shewn that Elizabeth Lane was equally sent to her maiden settlement. [PATTESON, J.—You mean that you ought, then, to have been let in to prove that?] Yes. How are we estopped from doing so? There is only the case of Rex v. Rudgeley, which I ask the Court to overrule. [PATTESON, J.—We cannot, under this case as it is here stated, go back to the evidence that might have been given under the former order. The case says nothing about your having tendered any evidence of that. The statement is explicitly made that the pauper was removed to F. as "the last place of my legal settlement as derived through my husband." [COLERIDGE, J.—You have selected two grounds of appeal, and this is not one of them. Is there not primary evidence, if not explained?] It was agreed between counsel on each side that this should form a main point of discussion. I ask the Court to send the case back to be re-stated. (Reg v. Ellal, Q. B. Hil. T. 1844.)

DENMAN, C. J.—There must be an end to litigation somewhere. If the parties wished to stir a question settled for three-score years, counsel having an opportunity of conferring upon the case should bring it properly before us.

Order confirmed.

Tuesday, May 7.

REG. v. W. S. WOOD, Esq.

If two surveyors of roads are appointed for two separate portions of the same parish, and the road-rates in each are separately collected, but form only one whole rate for the entire parish, payment of the rate to either surveyor suffices.

A rule had been obtained in this case, calling on William S. Wood, a magistrate for the county of Hereford, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, "commanding him to join and concur with Francis Hemp, esq." another magistrate of the same county, in granting warrants of distress for enforcing certain road-rates in the parish of Abbey Dore. The affidavits shewed that there were two surveyors appointed; one for the upper, and one for the lower division of Abbey Dore; and that the road-rates had for twenty-six years been separately paid to them, and the payments of individual parties divided, in respect of land lying in each division; but that the rate thus collected formed one rate for the entire parish, the words upper and lower division being not mentioned in the rate-book. The parties summoned had refused to pay rates to one of these surveyors, on the ground that he was in insolvent circumstances, that he had not kept proper accounts, and that he intended to apply the rate to the repair of a road which was not a highway; they, however, expressed their readiness to pay the rates due from them to the other surveyor. Mr. Hamp, the justice who was willing to grant the warrant of distress, was, it appeared, an interested party.

Talfourd, Serjt. (with whom was Greaves).—Either the appointment of the surveyors or the rate was bad. If there were two separate surveyors the rate was bad, because made for the entire parish, or if the rate was for the whole parish, there ought not to have been two separate appointments of surveyors. It is impossible that the rate can be maintained, and where it is not clear that it can, the Court will not interfere. The application is wrong also in form; it asks that Mr. Wood be made to concur, and, therefore, ought not to be directed against one person only.

Greaves, on the same side, was stopped by the Court.

Sir G. Lewin, in support of the rule.—There have been separate surveyors for twenty-six years, and rates have been paid separately for each district, and there has been no appeal.

PATTESON, J.—Are they separate rates?

Talfourd, Serjt.—No; they are set out for the whole parish.

DENMAN, C. J.—The rate in this case appears to have been clearly one entire rate; nor is it less so because the surveyors have been appointed, and have collected the rate for two separate districts.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. LEEDS.

Tenement settlement under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.

The words "I paid rent for the whole time of my tenancy," though preceded by a statement of a hiring for a year, at a rental of above 10l. do not sufficiently shew what rent was actually paid.

On an appeal at the Preston Quarter-Sessions in the county of York, against an order for the removal of Matthew Redmayne from Preston to Leeds, the order was confirmed, subject to the opinion of the Court, upon a case which set out the complaint of chargeability made by "Thomas Dixon, as general assistant-overseer of the poor of the Preston union, of which union the township of Preston, in the said borough, is part."

The examination of the pauper stated that he had become the tenant of a house in the town of Leeds in May 1820; he also stated, "I took the house for a year, at, I believe, 19l.; but I am not certain whether it was a pound more or less; I entered on and resided in the house in the said month of May, and continued to reside upon it with my family until the month of October 1821, when I left it. I paid rent for the whole time of my tenancy."

The material part of the grounds of appeal was, that the information and complaint of Thomas Dixon, and the examination of Matthew Redmayne, are bad and defective, inasmuch as they shew the said order to have been made, not on the complaint and prayer of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said township of Preston, but on the complaint of the said Thomas Dixon; and yet that the said information and complaint of the said Thomas Dixon, and the said examination of the said M. Redmayne, do not, nor does either of them, contain any evidence shewing any authority of the said Thomas Dixon to make such complaint before and to the said justices. In another ground of appeal it was stated, that "he had not in fact any such authority, and that the said order of removal is null and void, as made on the complaint of a person wholly unauthorized to make the same." Another ground of appeal was, that "the said examination was insufficient, inasmuch as it does not state the house therein mentioned to have been a separate and distinct dwelling-house, bonâ fide hired at and for the sum of ten pounds a year at the least; and inasmuch as they do not state that such house was held, and the rent for the same actually paid, for the term of one whole year at the least, by the said Matthew Redmayne, who is alleged to have been the person hiring the same."

Cowling, in support of the order of sessions.—It was not necessary to send the complaint of chargeability to the appellant at all. It is not required by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79. The act of the assistant-overseer is the act of the overseer. (Reg. v. Bedingham, 3 Law T. 53.) The order is perfectly regular, and speaks of the complaint of the overseers, therefore the appellants had distinct notice that it was the act of the overseers. It is, moreover, a question whether the assistant-overseer may not go to make the complaint. The statute of Charles does not require the overseers to make the complaint in person; if made on their behalf, it will satisfy the statute. The 46th sect. of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, gives the power to the guardians and overseers of appointing proper officers to carry out the Act, and s. 109 includes within this power the appointment of assistant-overseers, who are often the fittest persons to mingle with the poor, and ascertain their condition and the facts which make them chargeable. (Nolan, 45, 4 a.) The order is drawn up as the order of the overseers, and it is quite consistent with probability that the overseers might be present at the time the complaint was made, which need not be in writing. (Reg. v. Bucks, 2 Gale and Dav. 560, per Denman, C. J.) No notice of complaint need be given, except that in the order. (Reg. v. Rotherham, 2 Gale & Dav. 523.) The objection, therefore, amounts to this, that a scrap of paper informally drawn is unnecessarily sent.

The renting of the tenement is sufficiently stated to satisfy 59 Geo. 3, c. 50 (a), under which it falls. The name of the landlord is not essential. (Reg. v. Pontefract, 2 Q. B. 518.) The taking and renting of the tenement are sufficiently stated; for although it is not expressly said that the rent for the whole time stated to have been paid by the pauper was the same rent he had agreed to pay, and in respect of the same hiring, that must be the meaning of the words; and they would be understood by every one except a special pleader or some captious person. In ordinary language there can be no doubt whatever. (R. v. Pilkington, 3 Gale & Dav. 319.)

M. C. Hall (with whom was Whigham), contrà.—Thomas Dixon is not described as assistant-overseer, but as "general assistant-overseer of the union," and therefore he is not assistant-overseer of the township. The act of the overseers afterwards in sending the order could not ratify that which was itself a void, and not merely a voidable act. (Reg. v. Alternum, 1 Gale & Dav. 261; Harmley v. Rothwell, 13 Law Journ. M. C. 39.) Great strictness is required in the statement of the payment of the rent. (Reg. v. Pontefract, 2 Gale & Dav. 700.) The statement made is consistent with the payment of something towards the rent all the time.

By the COURT.—We do not find a settlement there; we do not know, from this examination, what rent was paid.(b)

(a) This Act requires the tenement to be "bonâ fide hired by such person, at and for the sum of ten pounds a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; and that the rent for the same be actually paid for the term of one whole year at least."—S.

(b) This case is a good example of the slovenly mode in which examinations are taken. Nothing can be more likely than that the pauper meant he paid THE rent for the whole time. But why was the word "the" or the sum paid omitted? It is equally clear that the words, "I paid rent the whole time" (not for the whole time) may mean some rent only: and it is perfectly right to prevent the trickery that might be let in were such loose language to pass.—S.

Tuesday, May 7.

Ex parte THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

A criminal information will not be granted for mere words spoken against a magistrate, imputing to him corrupt conduct in his magisterial capacity, if unaccompanied by acts tending directly to obstruct the exercise of his functions.

The Solicitor-General moved for leave to file a criminal information upon the complaint of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough against L. C. Humfrey, esq. barrister-at-law, on the ground of certain statements made by him in the centre of the jurisdiction, and relating to the character, of his Grace, in his magisterial capacity, before persons over whom that authority was exercised, and by which its efficiency, when called into activity, was likely to be materially impaired. These statements (of which Mr. Humfrey had probably been made the unconscious instrument by other parties), were put forth by him at Woodstock on the occasion of an election of a member to serve in Parliament for that borough, but at which election Mr. Humfrey had no chance or expectation of being returned. Every statement which was at all specific and detailed was completely answered in the affidavits. The statements against the Duke of Marlborough in his magisterial capacity were, in substance, these:—That a complaint having been instituted against a tenant of the duke named Harris, for rescuing his horse when distrained by the duke's hayward for trespassing on the duke's ground, the magistrates who heard the charge refused to decide the case, but that his Grace, acting alone as judge in his own case, and sitting upon a dog-kennel, with a glass of ale in his hand, had sentenced Harris to a fine of 1s. and 19s. costs; who, not being able to pay the fine and costs, was committed by his Grace to prison. The material facts were all denied or explained in the affidavits. There were various other statements derogatory to the general character and reputation of the Duke of Marlborough.

DENMAN, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court.—There can be no doubt that the words which form the subject of this application convey a grievous imputation against the Duke of Marlborough, and it is not to be wondered at that his Grace should have thus sought the means of coming into Court, in order to deny, upon oath, the charges made against him. The question, however, which the Court has alone to decide is, whether it has the power to order a criminal information to be filed upon this application. We think it is clear that there is no authority for such a course, and that we ought not to grant this application. The only charge upon which the Court doubted whether this motion might be granted is that which imputes unfairness and corruption to the Duke of Marlborough in the exercise of his magisterial functions. The denial of this charge is complete; but the Court finds no authority or precedent in which the mere speaking of words to that effect have been held sufficient ground on which to grant an application for a criminal information, unless such words were addressed to the magistrate himself whilst in the immediate exercise of the magisterial office, and there has been some direct obstruction to the administration of justice, and not merely the speaking of words imputing misconduct. In Starkie on Libel, edit. 1830, it is doubted whether "the case may not be different if any specific act of oppression or corruption were imputed to a magistrate in the performance of his magisterial functions;" but this doubt is still a doubt without any authority to support it. The learned Solicitor-General has failed, contrary to the expectation of the Court, to shew them how any of the cases which have occurred support this application; he has not referred to a single dictum upon the authority of which it might be granted. From this omission the Court infers that none such exists. There is, however, one principle pervading all the cases which have occurred on this subject, and that is an unwillingness on the part of the Court to make mere words amount to a crime. There is in such cases so much liability to misunderstand, so much difficulty in proving what is said, and so many explanations are available for the purpose of qualifying and excusing offences which consist in verbal statements, that the Courts have been properly reluctant to act summarily on oral testimony; and we feel we ought not to interfere with a course so well understood. We could not do so without violating the authority of established precedents, and setting an example for inquiries of which the results would be unsatisfactory to the parties, and injurious to the interests of justice.

Rule refused.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6 and 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—The Baptist Chapel, situated at Golcar, in the parish of Huddersfield, in the county of York, in the district of the Huddersfield union; the Unitarian Chapel, situated at Bay's-hill, in the parish of Cheltenham, in the county of Gloucester, in the district of the Cheltenham union; Methodist Chapel, Kendal; Regd. Remington, superintendent registrar: Throop Chapel, Throop, Hampshire; Henry Pain, superintendent registrar: Biddleston Catholic Chapel, Alwinton, Northumberland; Robert Moody, superintendent registrar.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

TERM has ended, and the more important judgments are about to be given. Hence the reports will continue to occupy a large portion of our space, and to preclude much of other material, to which we should like to have given place. The vacant Commissionership in Bankruptcy is not yet disposed of. It is now said it is to be given to Sir GREGORY LEWIN. Mr. GOULBURN comes to London for certain, and Mr. BERE takes his place at Exeter.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

ATTORNEYS' AND SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

WE understand that a meeting is about to be convened by some of the principal members of the Incorporated Law Society, for the purpose of raising a fund for the relief of aged and infirm and indigent attorneys and solicitors, and also for establishing schools for the maintenance and education of the orphan children of such members of the Profession as may die in indigent circumstances.

The Law Charitable Association grants relief to the widows and families of such attorneys and solicitors as have practised in the Metropolis, and have been subscribers to the Association. It is now proposed to extend the objects of this Association by affording aid to attorneys and solicitors, whose age or infirmities and indigence render them unable to maintain themselves, and also for establishing orphan schools.—Legal Observer.

ON LEGAL EDUCATION.

Views of the Honourable Justice Story, and all the judges in the Supreme Court of the United States, on legal education, as communicated in a letter from Professor Greenleaf, of the Law School, Havard University, to the President of the Society of the Dublin Law Institute:—

"Your very kind letter which I received a few days since afforded me great pleasure, mingled, however, with regret at the information it contained of the suspension of class instruction in the Dublin Law Institute. I showed it to my colleague and friend, Judge Story, who expressed similar regret. We had both anticipated much benefit to the cause of legal education from that institution, judging from the prospectus and other papers you obligingly sent me, more than a year ago. We both commenced the study of law many years since, amidst the drudgery and interruptions of a lawyer's office, perusing with what diligence we could our Blackstone, Coke, and the other books at that time put into the hands of students, and have more recently had ample opportunity to mark the difference of progress and acquisition so much in favour of our pupils at this law school during the last ten years. Our students have access to a law library of nearly eight thousand volumes, comprising all the English and American reports and treatises, to which we are now adding those of Ireland and Scotland. My own time is given constantly to the classes, and that of Judge Story when he is not sitting in court. They are met by one of us daily, and are closely examined, in rotation, upon the portion of text studied by the class, and instructed by oral expositions and commentaries; and every week we hold a moot court, where a cause is argued by four students, which is presented usually in the form of a motion for a new trial or verdict, subject to a special case, or some other of the ordinary modes in which legal questions are presented, and an opinion is ultimately delivered by the presiding professor. The students also distribute themselves into societies which meet weekly, or oftener, for the discussion of legal questions, and we are furnished with the law periodicals of England and France as they are published. By these methods, the attention of students is constantly drawn to the law as a science in its principles, its rules, and minuter details of administration, which are mastered with a facility and readiness, and in a spirit of sound philosophy, to which the student in his private clerkship is almost totally a stranger. I have recently conversed with the editor of the North American Review, who has promised me an article on legal education for the April number, that for January being already made up. It will adopt the views known to be entertained not only by Judge Story and myself, but also by all the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and by nearly the whole bench of the highest tribunals of the several states. In our experience the advantages of associated or collegiate instruction in the science of law, followed by six to twelve months' attention to the 'manipulations' of practice in a lawyer's office, are beyond all comparison superior to any other method of instruction we have ever known, and it cannot be that it can long remain out of favour either in Ireland or England. If it should once gain the attention of Parliament, with the approbation and support of the principal legal characters in each House, the cause of legal education may be regarded as safe."

Professor Greenleaf in a subsequent communication, dated February 28, 1844, adds:—"It is most extraordinary that, while it is conceded on all hands that the sciences of theology and of medicine are cultivated most successfully in public institutions and schools, this advantage should be denied to the law, and still more strange, that this denial should be made in England alone."

WHITEHALL, APRIL 27.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Samuel Charles Watson Buckle, of Peterborough, in the county of Northampton, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—On the 4th instant, the undermentioned gentlemen, upon the customary oaths being administered to them by the proper officer of that society, before several of the benchers of this honourable society present, they were called to the degree of barrister-at-law:—Edward Beavan, the tenth son of Hugh Beavan, of Howness, in the county of Radnor, esq.; the Hon. William Knox Pomroy, the fourth son of the Rev. and Right Hon. Viscount Harburton, of the city of Dublin, deceased; Montagu Stuart Welch, the third son of Martial Laurence Welch, of Wyndham-place, Marylebone, in the county of Middlesex, esq.; George Henry Nicholson, the third son of George Thomas Nicholson, of Waverley Abbey, Farnham, in the county of Surrey, esq.; Francis Le Grix White, the only son of John White, of St. Andrew's-place, Regent's Park, esq.; James Isaac Carnegie, the eldest son of James Carnegie, of Northesk, in the county of Cork, esq.; William Trelawney Hallett, the eldest son of the Rev. Richard S. Hallett, of Axmouth, in the county of Devon, esq.; George Archibald Innes, the youngest son of John Innes, of Forest Green, Abinger, in the county of Surrey, esq.; and James Bremridge, the eldest son of John Bremridge, late of Barnstaple, in the county of Devon, merchant, deceased.

CALLS TO THE BAR.—INNER TEMPLE.—On the 3rd instant, the after-mentioned members of this honourable society were admitted to the degree of barrister-at law, they having previously taken the accustomed oaths before several of the benchers present:—Mr. Alexander Heslop, of Queen's-college, Oxford, the only son of William Heslop, esq. of Tremolesworth, in the parish of St. Mary's, in the island of Jamaica; Mr. Thomas Vance, of Trinity-college, Dublin, the second son of T. Vance, of Beechmount, in the county of Antrim, esq. deceased; and Mr. Henry Williams Hodgson, of Trinity-college, Cambridge, the third son of the Rev. Edward Hodgson, vicar of Rickmansworth, in the county of Herts.

LINCOLN'S INN.—On the 2nd instant, the undermentioned gentlemen were, after the usual preliminary oaths had been administered to them, before several of the benchers of this honourable society, duly called to the degree of barrister-at-law:—Mr. Walter Cockburn, jun. of Lincoln's-inn-fields, the fourth son of Walter Cockburn, esq. of Edinburgh; Mr. Findlayter Roper, of Trinity College, Dublin, the second son of William Roper, of Rose Mount, near Montego Bay, in the island of Jamaica, esq; Mr. Brice Frederick Bunny, of the New-square, Lincoln's-inn, the second son of Jeremiah Bunny, of Newbury, esq.; Mr. Francis Cornish Newman, of Sloane-street, in the county of Middlesex, the second son of John Newman, late of Alphinston, esq.; Mr. Thomas Pain, jun. of the Chapel-staircase, Lincoln's-inn, the youngest son of Thomas Pain, of Dover, in the county of Kent, esq.; Mr. James Cook Evans, of Hans-place, Chelsea, the third son of the Rev. George Evans, of Park-place, Mile-end, in the county of Middlesex, esq.; Mr. Lucius Graham Kinderley, of Balliol College, Oxford, the youngest son of George Kinderley, of the New-square, Lincoln's-inn, esq.; Mr. Alexander George Mackenzie, of New College, Oxford, the eldest son of the late Sir Alexander Mackenzie, of Avoch, in the county of Ross, North Britain, knight, deceased.

LINCOLN'S-INN, Wednesday Evening.—On account of the large number of proposals for the bar during the present Term of those students of this honourable society who had kept their full number of Terms, a second call took place yesterday evening—the usual oaths having been previously taken before several of the bencher present by the under-mentioned gentlemen:—Mr. John Thomas Bowles, of Rutland, in the county of Limerick, Ireland, the youngest son of Henry Bowles, of the same place, esq.; Mr. Thomas Seare, of Holborn, in the county of Middlesex, the second son of Mr. Samuel Seare, of Holborn aforesaid, engraver; Mr. Bridges Harvey, of Doddinghurst, in the county of Essex, the youngest son of the Rev. Bridges Harvey, of the same place; Mr. Frederick Currey, of Trinity College, Cambridge, the second son of Benjamin Currey, of the Old Palace-yard, Westminster; Mr. William Yates, of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, the youngest son of the Rev. Dr. Yates, of Penshurst, in the county of Kent, deceased; Mr. Thomas Deere Salmon, of Exeter College, Oxford, the second son of William Salmon, of Penllyne Court, in the county of Glamorgan, esq.; Mr. William Villiers Fowke, of Caius College, Cambridge, the youngest son of the late Admiral George Fowke, of Sible Hedington, in the county of Essex; and Mr. Robert William Keate, of Christ Church, Oxford, the eldest son of Robert Keate, of Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, esq.

THE NORTHERN CIRCUIT IN 1800 AND 1844.—According to the Law List for 1800, there were 63 barristers on the Northern Circuit, including five silk gownsmen—viz. Messrs. Law and Park, and Serjeants Cockell, Clayton, and Heywood. The Law List for 1844 names 221 barristers on the same circuit, including 13 silk gownsmen—viz. Messrs. Armstrong, Baines, Dundas, Knowles, Lewin, Martin, Starkie, Wortley, and Roebuck, and Serjeants Atcherly, Murphy, Thompson, and Wrangham.—Wakefield Journal.

ANECDOTE OF SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK.—A client of a City solicitory, who had been led to expect the assistance of a counsellor of eminence, was disappointed in consequence of illness; both client and solicitor waited with the utmost anxiety until the hour of trial arrived; the judge had taken his seat, and the jury were being sworn, and no counsel had been provided. The solicitor hardly knew what to advise, but recommended the withdrawal of a juror; the client, however, stoutly resisted, and declared that if he could get no professional gentleman to undertake the case he would plead his own cause; at the lucky moment Sir Frederick Pollock entered the room, the client stated his case, Sir Frederick undertook it, and sat down quietly until the time arrived when he was to speak; he addressed the jury with such effect, that, without waiting for the judge's charge, they simultaneously stood up and returned a verdict in favour of the cause Sir Frederick Pollock espoused. What is more extraordinary, the talented counsellor, without appearing to have read his brief, understood the subject better than men of more than ordinary talent, although their attention had been previously devoted to it for three or four months.

AN ARISTOCRATIC CONVICT.—We find the following in the Aix la Chapelle Gazette:—"The Baroness de Zoller, the wife of a very distinguished officer, has been condemned to five years' imprisonment for having confined her mother, who was about to marry a Protestant. She wanted in this way to prevent the marriage. A petition was sent in by her friends praying for a commutation of punishment, but the King replied, that looking at the nature of the offence this was impossible."

Mr. J. E. Drinkwater Bethune, the solicitor to the Home Office, has had a suite of apartments for appeal business granted him in Gwydyr House, Whitehall, where the Lord Advocate of Scotland (Mr. M'Neill), and his secretary, Mr. Robertson, have apartments for a similar purpose.

WILL OF THE LATE SIR HENRY HALFORD, Bart.—The will of the late Sir Henry Halford, Bart. of Wiston-hall, Leicester, has just been proved in Doctors'-commons, by his son and sole executor, Sir Henry Halford, Bart. to whom he has bequeathed the whole of his property. The personal property is sworn under 9,000*l.* The will bears date 1833.

ADMIRALTY COURT.—The Lords of the Admiralty have appointed by warrants and letters-patent, dated 4th May, John Deacon, esq. late Deputy Marshall, to be Marshal and Serjeant-at-Mace of the High Court of Admiralty, vacant by the death of the Hon. Hugh Lindsay.

A MARKED MAN.—In the history of escaped convicts there never was, perhaps, one more easily recognized than one who has recently escaped from New South Wales, and supposed to be at present in London. He is thus described in the Hue and Cry:—"Adam and Eve, tree and serpent, B.S.T.S. bust of a man, mermaid, half-moon, ship, George and Dragon, man, birds, heart, and darts, Hope and anchor, T, crown and flags, on the left arm; seven dots between the finger and thumb of the left hand; man and glass on the back of the left hand; ring pricked on the middle finger of the left hand; two pugilists on the centre of chest." His name is Truelove Smith, and he is about 24 years of age. He was tried at Cambridge on the 15th of May, 1830, and sentenced to transportation for life—in his tenth year.

CRIME IN IRELAND.—Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Clerks of the Peace of the several counties, &c. in Ireland, of the number of persons committed to the different gaols thereof for trial in the year 1843, have been just presented to Parliament, pursuant to the Act 56 George 3, c. 120, and were ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on the 19th of March last. We find, if our calculations of the returns in question are correct, that the gross total number of commitments in the various counties of Ireland during the past year was as follows:—viz. in Antrim, 841; in Armagh, 475; in Carlow, 353; in Cavan, 668; in Clare, 755; in Cork, 2,010; in Donegal, 388; in Downshire, 606; in the county of the town of Drogheda, 110; in Dublin, 1,606; in Fermanagh, 343; in Galway, 925; in Kerry, 741; in Kildare, 242; in Kilkenny, 511; in King's County, 540; in Leitrim, 454; in Limerick, 1,019*l.*; in Londonderry, 341; in Longford, 304; in Louth, 207; in Mayo, 973; in Meath, 392; in Monaghan, 516; in Queen's County, 655; in Roscommon, 713; in Sligo, 477; in Tipperary, 2,790; in Tyrone, 495; in Waterford, 553; in Westmeath, 404; in Wexford, 316; and in Wicklow, 306; making a grand total of committals throughout the sister kingdom amounting to about 21,028, which is from ¼ to 9-32nds per cent. in proportion to the population, if we estimate the latter at about 8,000,000.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

LIVERPOOL.

To the honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the undersigned Practising Attorneys and Solicitors of the Borough of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, sheweth,

That your petitioners, in the prosecution of the business of their profession, have constant reason to deplore the existing state of the law and practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts; and particularly with reference to the probate of wills, and the grant of letters of administration.

That your petitioners consider as one of the principal evils of the existing law, the necessity of obtaining probate or administration in two independent jurisdictions, where there are bona notabilia in different provinces, and the insecurity attaching to all diocesan grants; an evil of more frequent occurrence now than formerly, in consequence of the great amount of life insurance, railway shares, and other property, in different parts of the kingdom.

That the existing law is, in the opinion of your petitioners, also inconvenient, in the distinction which it makes in regard to probate between wills of real and personal estate, providing no place of compulsory registry for wills relating solely to realty; and, in cases of litigation relating to realty, compelling the production of original wills, in the custody of the officers of the courts where the same are registered, frequently at a serious expense, although upon questions of construction only, whereas the only occasions when the originals should be resorted to should be in cases of alleged fraud or forgery.

That your petitioners consider another evil in the existing law to be, the necessity which sometimes arises of contesting the same will in the Ecclesiastical and Civil Courts, and thus having a will adjudicated upon by different tribunals, proceeding by different modes of taking evidence, and occasionally with conflicting results; and especially as the decisions of such tribunals are subject to review in different Courts of Appeal.

That your petitioners have observed that a Bill is now before your honourable House, intituled, "An Act to consolidate the Jurisdiction and improve the Practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Wales, and for otherwise altering and amending the Law in certain matters Ecclesiastical."

That although the said Bill has professedly for its object the removal of the existing grievances in the practice of Ecclesiastical Courts, your petitioners are convinced that it does not go to the root of the evil; but that, whilst removing some imperfections, it would be productive of more harm than good, by stamping with the character of permanence, or, at least, prolonging the continuance of, the principal defects of the present system; and that in the judgment of your petitioners, it would be far less injurious to the public to suffer the whole body of Ecclesiastical Law and Practice to remain in its present state, than to tamper with it, by palliatives such as the measures proposed in the Bill now before your honourable House.

That your petitioners submit that, in making any alterations in the system, the whole civil business now transacted in the Ecclesiastical Courts ought to be transferred to the civil courts.

That, in order to simplify the practice in regard to the grants of probates and letters of administration, your petitioners conceive that all wills, whether relating to real or personal estate, should be registered in one central court, in London, accompanied with convenient local arrangements throughout the country for taking the necessary oaths and bonds.

That, in the opinion of your petitioners, the objection to one place of deposit for all wills might be removed, by having several examined copies made immediately after probate, and deposited, for inspection, in various places of registry in the country, together with indexes of all probates and administrations; and that in preparing such copies, and the copies required by the Stamp-office, by the executors, and other parties, it appears to your petitioners that lithography might be usefully resorted to.

That your petitioners are strongly of opinion that the contentious jurisdiction as to all wills and administration should be annexed to the Court of Chancery, which tribunal can equally deal with questions of real and personal estate.

That your petitioners think it desirable that on proving a will, or taking out letters of administration, the executors or administrators should be bound to deliver an inventory, as is the practice in Scotland; and that a duplicate of the account furnished to and passed by the Stamp Office, should be deposited in the central registry, with liberty to inspect and procure copies thereof at a small charge.

That your petitioners are aware that it is objected that such interference with the Ecclesiastical Courts would be of serious injury, by diminishing the inducements to the study of the civil law in this country; but your petitioners conceive that such apprehensions are unfounded, as such a course of study is considered by many, particularly by members of the Chancery Bar, a desirable, if not necessary, part of their education. And even if such apprehensions are well founded, your petitioners submit that the most effectual method of maintaining and advancing the study will be, to make it an essential part of the education of all students of the inns of court, and a competent knowledge of it the con[illegible]ion of their call to the Bar.

That to effect such alterations in the law as above suggested would doubtless require much care and consideration, and that many individuals who would be affected by the change would be entitled to liberal compensation; but that your petitioners submit that compensations, even if numerous or considerable, but which must terminate with lives in being, ought not to stand in the way of any great national measure of Legal Reform.

Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray, that the said Bill may not pass into a law, but that a measure of more extensive reform may be substituted in its stead.

A[illegible] petitioners will ever pray, &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LATE MR. COMMISSIONER MERIVALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have just perused the eulogium on the late Mr. Commissioner Merivale, contained in your highly valuable and useful publication of this morning's date; and hasten to send you the following additional particulars, which I hope may find a place in your next week's publication:—

The late Mr. Commissioner Merivale was appointed, by the late Lord Eldon, one of the London Town Commissioners of Bankruptcy (the number in all being about seventy), and was well skilled in the laws relating to real property; he was further known to the legal world as being the reporter in the Court of Chancery, also in Lord Eldon's time, during the years 1815-16-17; the reports are contained in three octavo volumes, and are held in high estimation by those members who practise in the Courts of Chancery.

Among the cases reported in the first volume, is that of Mogg v. Mogg (p. 654), which is valuable not only for its abstruse points in conveyancing, but interesting to the legal practitioner as being the case wherein Gifford (afterwards Lord Gifford, Master of the Rolls) argued for the defendants, and thereby first became known as a real property lawyer. Preston (then in the zenith of his fame, well known to the profession as the author and also editor of several valuable works relating to conveyancing, &c.) was opposed to him, and led for the plaintiff.

The second volume contains the celebrated case of Cholmondely v. Clinton (p. 171) and involves many nice and important questions as to Acquiescence (p. 362), Conveyance (p. 356), Deed, construction of (p. 173 et seq.), Disseisin (p. 357), Mortgage (p. 360), Posses[illegible] (p. 358, et seq.), Time (p. 360), and Trust (p. 358); the report is long, commencing at p. 171, and ending at p. 362; and also Leake v. Robinson (p. 363), as to the remoteness of a devise of a real and personal estate: the same volume, in the Addenda (p. 567), contains Sir Arthur Piggott's address to the Master of the Rolls (Sir William Grant) on his retirement from the judicial seat.

The third volume contains Fleeman v. Fairlee (p. 29), decided by Lord Eldon, embracing important observations relating to the conduct of executors, which case is taken from the short-hand writer's notes of the judgment, lent to the editor; and also Downes v. Gruzebrook (p. [illegible]00), as to Trust and Trustee, purchase by, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A YORKSHIRE ATTORNEY" thus writes on a subject of considerable interest:—

Seeing in your last number a notice that the county of York is about to be added to the Midland Circuit, I venture to observe that it would be a very easy task to remedy the inconvenience by dividing the Northern Circuit into two, viz. the "York Circuit" to comprise the counties of York, Durham, and Northumberland, and the "Lancaster Circuit" to comprise the counties of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancaster; and it appears to me the business of the two circuits would be pretty equally divided, and the "Bar," which is now very strong, might be divided with equal fairness, and most probably with satisfaction to counsel themselves. But as to adding York to the Midland Circuit, I think it would be pregnant with much dissatisfaction, inasmuch as the Yorkshire attorneys and the Midland Circuit Bar being comparatively strangers to each other, that feeling and confidence which ought to exist between the attorneys and counsel could not be either entertained or established; whereas, by dividing, as above suggested, the Profession would be upon the same terms as they now are; as I fancy the counsel would attach themselves to that circuit embracing the counties at those Quarter-Sessions they have been accustomed to practise, and thereby feel themselves at home. I do think it will be any thing but pleasing, or even satisfactory to the Profession, to see York severed from the Northern Circuit, when that circuit is so capab[illegible] of an equitable division.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE subscriptions for the current volume are now due, and should be paid in the course of a few days, to entitle the Subscribers to the advantages of pre-payment.

The volumes for binding may be sent by post, in parcels open at the end, accompanied with a letter, stating how they may be identified and how the bound volume is to be returned. For prices, and further particulars, see the notice above.

TO READERS.

ALTHOUGH the Supplement last week enabled us to bring up a portion of the arrears, there is still much interesting matter standing in type, which the pressing business of the Term compels us un[illegible]ly to exclude for the present. Among th[illegible] the remaining lectures of Professor C[illegible]n "Practice, Pleading, and Evidence;" [illegible] of equity reports, some correspondence, and reviews of various books received, which as yet we can do no more than acknowledge;—such are PETERSDORFF'S New Series of Abridgments of the Common Law Reports; TAYLOR'S Manual of Medical Jurisprudence, the author of which is the gentleman whose Lectures on this interesting subject are about to be reported in the LAW TIMES, revised by himself; COOKE'S Law of Defamation and Slander; Mr. A'BECKETT'S able letter on the Law of Debtor and Creditor; and a little book entitled a Guide to Oratory. All these shall receive such attention as may be deemed to be due to their respective merits, as soon as the business of the Term and of Parliament shall relax a little, so as to relieve our columns from their more imperative claims.

The steady growth of advertisements is, of course, extremely gratifying to us; for it is by their aid only that the enormous expenses of the LAW TIMES can be defrayed, and from which alone can the large capital invested in it be made to yield remuneration. There can be no doubt, both from the character and the number of its advertisements, that the LAW TIMES is now formally adopted as the advertising medium of the Profession; and by greatly reducing the scale of charges for property advertisements, we have opened it to the sellers and buyers of estates, as the best existing channel for the circulation of their sales among the parties most interested in them, and to whom it is most desirable that they should be known. Almost all the great London solicitors and auctioneers have recognized this useful characteristic of the LAW TIMES, and resort to its columns. We hope the country solicitors will soon be induced to follow the example, the advantage of which they would recognize were they to reflect that in London, and in the manufacturing districts and great trading towns, there are hundreds of wealthy men whose solicitors are instructed to be ever on the watch for the advantageous investment of the riches they scarcely know how to employ. These solicitors, taking the LAW TIMES, would then have their attention directed to any advertisement of estates for sale in the rural districts and distant counties, make it known to their clients, and, perhaps, be instructed to buy. It is a mistake to suppose that an advertisement in the daily papers will be more seen by estate buyers than in the LAW TIMES. The former are not read by half the profession in the country, and not one in ten of those who read, takes the trouble to wander through the wilderness of advertisements. But in the less crowded columns of the LAW TIMES every advertisement is distinctly seen and read by every reader, and the readers are the greater portion of the Profession, nineteen-twentieths of those of them whose business lies in dealing with land.

There are other classes of advertisements for which the LAW TIMES is peculiarly adapted, but for which, as yet, it has not been so employed as it might be; such as announcements of moneys wanted and to be advanced, applications for heirs-at-law and next of kin, bankrupt and insolvent notices, notices of assignments, the days for holding local courts, to the Profession so important, and especially the sheriffs' courts in counties, and the quarter-sessions in boroughs. Notices of private bills to be applied for to Parliament might also appropriately appear in these columns.

Let us repeat to readers, that we shall compensate by supplements whatever we take from them by increase of advertisements beyond the two leaves allotted to them. But the advertisements are not the least useful portion of the LAW TIMES to men of business.

The long list of new subscribers which appears in to-day's paper must be our apology for reverting to this subject, which we submit to their calm consideration. To them let us, moreover, repeat the remark we have often made to our early friends, that we shall esteem as a favour any suggestions for improvement, and any complaints that can be remedied. We will not promise to adopt them, but we will assure serious consideration, and that whatever is practicable shall be done.

The very commodious premises which have been taken purposely for the publication of the LAW TIMES, the CRITIC, and for the VERULAM SOCIETY, will, we hope, ensure more regularity in the business department than we were able to boast in its first domicile. A large and complete establishment has been placed under the control of a gentleman, who undertakes the entire management of the fast-growing business; and we hope and believe that our friends, who may have occasion to call, will find the most prompt attention given to their instructions, and a readiness to afford every aid and accommodation the assistants in the office can give.

Finally, we beg to say, that for the convenience of persons seeking references, an alphabetical index to the names of the cases in the current volume of the LAW TIMES, made up to the latest moment, is now kept at the office, where it may be consulted by any person at any time.

Some confusion has arisen from the numbers sent for binding not being so marked as to be identified. Will those who so forward their numbers by post indicate them by a mark, notified in an accompanying letter of directions, by which their copies may be recognized. Often twenty or thirty sets arrive at once, and it is impossible to distinguish one from the other, without some such mode of tracing ownership.

GRAND JURIES.

AT length there has been something like an official protest against the absurd machinery of a Grand Jury. At the New Court on Thursday, previous to the conclusion of their labours, the Grand Jury made the following sensible presentment:—

"The Grand Jury desire to express their belief, that no disadvantage would arise to the administration of justice, nor to persons committed for trial by the police magistrate, if the indictments against such persons were brought to trial before the Court without the intervention of the Grand Jury, and that this alteration of the existing practice would effect a great saving of expense to the districts within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and of the time of the police and witnesses generally, and would also further the ends of justice, by diminishing the disinclination of prosecutors to make the sacrifice of time and convenience which is now required of them."

To which the COMMON SERJEANT returned this equally sensible reply:—

"As your observations are confined to this district, where the committing magistrates hold regular police courts, where the bar attend, and where the press regularly report the proceedings of the courts, I agree with you, and think a great loss of time, unnecessary inconvenience, and expense, and sometimes injustice, is occasioned by the attendance here of the grand jury, and I will therefore direct that your representations be communicated to the Secretary of State at the Home-office."

But the principle is universally applicable. If the magistrate do his duty, no prisoner could be committed for trial unless there be a primâ facie case against him. But the Grand Jury have no other function than to see that a primâ facie case is made out. They hear no defence, nor do they institute a general inquiry into the case.

If this institution be useful at all, it can only be so as a check upon magistrates; but, relying upon this check, the magistrates are tempted to be more careless in their committals than they would be if such a tribunal were not interposed between them and the trial. At best it is a clumsy mode of accomplishing the object; it has no one recommendation save its antiquity, and as simplicity should be the aim of all systems of jurisprudence, the sooner the recommendation of the presentment we have cited is carried out the better for the credit of our law and the convenience of the public, who should have no more duties imposed upon them than are essential to the conduct of the business of society. The Grand Jury is a heavy burden without the slightest utility, and may be advantageously dispensed with.

STARVING JURIES.

BARBARISMS still linger in our law, which are brought out prominently at times to affront the common sense of mankind, and to confirm the public prejudices against law and lawyers, which were begotten when, absurdity was the common characteristic, and not as now, the rare feature, of British jurisprudence. One of these has just made its appearance, may we hope, to attract indignant notice, and thus to secure its instant excision.

The readers of the LAW TIMES will, doubtless, remember being some months ago startled by a report, which appeared in our columns, of an observation by Mr. Justice BALL, at a trial in Ireland, that the judges had resolved that they had no right to dismiss juries for not agreeing, but that they must be kept in confinement until they had come to one mind.

At the Central Criminal Court, Mr. Justice COLTMAN has gone a step further, and ruled that the jury shall be starved as well as imprisoned, in order to compel agreement. But the report of the scene will best tell the tale:—

"THE MARYLEBONE MURDER.

"At ten o'clock Mr. Justice COLTMAN took his seat upon the bench, when the jury, who had been locked up the whole of the night without any meat, drink, or fire, were sent for. On their appearance in court they looked very haggard, and seemed almost exhausted from the great number of hours they had fasted.

"Mr. Straight, the clerk of the arraigns, then asked them if they were agreed upon their verdict?

"The foreman answered in the negative; and expressed a wish, on behalf of the jury, to have the evidence relating to the sanity of the prisoner again read over to them.

"COLTMAN, J. said, that the learned judge who had tried the case was engaged elsewhere, but that a messenger should be instantly despatched for him.

"The foreman then asked that the jury might be allowed to have some refreshment, as they had tasted nothing for twenty-five hours.

"COLTMAN, J. said that he could make no order himself, but that when Mr. Baron Alderson arrived he would no doubt attend to their wishes.

"Clarkson here asked the learned judge to request the personal attendance of Mr. Baron Alderson.

"COLTMAN, J. said that he would

"The jury then retired, attended by two officers of the court.

"Shortly afterwards the jury sent a message that they were so much exhausted they were afraid they should sink under it, unless they were allowed some refreshment.

"Mr. M'Murdo, the surgeon of Newgate, was sent to examine the jury, and reported that they were in a very weak and depressed state, and that seven of them in particular were almost sinking from exhaustion.

"COLTMAN, J.—Are any of their lives in danger?

"Mr. M'Murdo.—I should say that they are unfit to exercise the reasoning powers of their minds, and some of them represent that they have been accustomed to stimulants, from the loss of which they are now suffering much.

"The prisoner was again placed at the bar.

"COLTMAN, J. then inquired of Mr. M'Murdo if he thought that the health of any of the jurymen was likely to be seriously injured unless they were immediately refreshed?

"Mr. M'Murdo said, that it would not be likely to deprive them of life, although they much required support.

"COLTMAN, J.—You think that their lives are not in danger, but you are of opinion that their health may be seriously injured by the prolonged abstinence?

"Mr. M'Murdo.—Yes.

"COLTMAN, J. then directed Harker, one of the officers of the court, to fetch the jury.

"The jury, when they entered the court, were again asked if they were agreed upon their verdict?

"The foreman emphatically said 'No.'

"COLTMAN, J. said, that he had sent for Mr. Baron Alderson, and that he expected his arrival every instant, but if he did not arrive very shortly, he would send for him again.

"Shortly afterwards,

"ALDERSON, B. took his seat upon the bench, and, addressing the jury, said, he presumed the only point of difference amongst them was the state of mind the prisoner was in when he committed the act?

"The foreman answered 'Yes.'"

What is this but the revival, in another shape, of the ancient practice of torture? For the purpose of eliciting a confession of guilt, the prisoner was formerly put to the rack. Improving upon the notion, our judges have resorted to torture to force jurymen to agree; that is, to rack them until some who conscientiously differ from others in opinion, shall violate their oaths, and in words assent to a verdict from which their consciences dissent. A verdict so obtained may be good in law, but it is bad in fact; it is unanimous in word, but not so in truth.

The absurdity shews the more glaringly in the cited dialogue. The surgeon reported that, from sheer exhaustion, the jury were "unfit to exercise the reasoning powers of their minds." Nevertheless, they were sent back to deliberate, the state of mind being, according to this most monstrous interpretation of the law, of no importance, provided there was no danger of corporeal death from exhaustion.

But that which would be merely ridiculous in other circumstances is horrible in the case before us. Here we have a question of life and death decided by men pronounced by the surgeon to be in an unfit state to form a judgment. They had been doubting and deberating for hours; and the law is, that where there is a doubt, the decision shall be in favorem vitæ. But this rule is to be set aside. The process of imprisonment starvation is to be applied for the purpose of stifling doubt! When their minds are by these means sufficiently weakened to lose the power of judgment, and the torture has done its work, they are required to pronounce upon the most delicate question that can engage the reasoning faculties, namely, whether a fellow-creature be sane or insane. Is not this to try prisoners by the stoutness of the stomach, rather than thus by the soundness of the judgments of the jury. Can any value be attached to a verdict obtained by such means and under such circumstances? Will the authorities venture to consign to death a man so convicted? We hope not. We trust the matter will attract the attention of Parliament; and we call upon our brethren of the press immediately to direct to it public notice, and to demand the reform of a practice so entirely repugnant to reason, to justice, and to humanity.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress for a beginning of operations, but in a small and cautious way at the first, until enlarged means shall sanction more extensive proceedings.

The plan proposed for this commencement differs somewhat from that announced in the prospectus; therefore it will be necessary to release the members from their engagements, made upon the faith of that scheme, and to ask their co-operation with the new one which alone present circumstances will justify. Hereafter it may be practicable to revert to the original design, should added numbers justify the undertaking.

With the purpose of beginning, and to give a sort of trial to the Society, it is purposed forthwith to publish the announced series of Practical Reports, comprising Magistrates' Cases, Crown Cases, Practice Cases, and, to complete the volume, a perfect Digest to all the reports of all the courts.

As the cheapest and readiest mode of circulating this publication, it will be printed in sheets of 32 large octavo pages, double columns, which will be entitled as a supplement to the LAW TIMES, for the purpose of being stamped, so as to pass free by post. The outside leaves will form a wrapper, with list of contents, so that the 28 inside pages will be kept perfectly clean and fit for binding.

The price of each number will be, to members of the Society, 1s. 1d. stamped and transmitted by post, or 1s. unstamped and fetched from the office. To other persons the price will be 1s. 6d. per number. The cheapness of this may be estimated when we state that two shilling numbers will contain as much printed matter as one seven shilling part of the regular reports.

The numbers will be issued at no fixed periods, but as soon as the materials for each are completed.

They will form one useful annual volume.

Should the plan please, it may readily be extended to the publication of a complete series of reports, in the like form and at the like trifling cost.

Other useful practical publications may be issued in the same manner.

A circular will shortly be forwarded to all the enrolled members of the Verulam Society, inclosing a form of order, to be returned by those who are desirous of possessing or willing to support this first adventure. Until these returns are received, we cannot, of course, positively announce the date of issue, for it must depend upon the number of those orders, whether the risk can be justified. If all the present 374 members will subscribe to it, it will be begun, although that will be far from paying the expenses, but in the hope that, once afloat, others may be induced to join us.

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

The Law of Distress for Rent, on Property not the Tenant's, considered and condemned; including a Report of the recent Case "Joule v. Jackson;" with Remarks thereon. Manchester, 1843. Simons and Denham.

THIS volume is devoted to an elaborate review of the law of distress as it affects goods not the property of the tenant; and it originated in the practical injustice of that law as exhibited in a case tried at Liverpool Summer Assizes, in 1840, before Mr. Baron Rolfe, in which the question being, whether some barrels or casks, the property of the plaintiff, a licensed common brewer in Salford, were liable to be distrained on the premises of a licensed publican, delivered to him by the plaintiff, in the usual way of trade between brewer and publican, for rent due from the publican, in respect of the premises in which the barrels were distrained. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, with liberty to move to enter a nonsuit, which was accordingly done; the rule was made absolute, thus deciding that the casks were liable to the distress. As we have noticed this case before, it will be unnecessary to repeat it here.

The object of the author of this volume is to dispute the decision, and to advocate an immediate alteration of a law so manifestly unjust. We wish success to his efforts.

Irish Marriage Question. Observations on the Opinion delivered by the Right Ho. Lord Cottenham, 23rd February, 1844, in the Court of Error, in the case of "Reg. v. Millis." By Sir JOHN STODDART, Knt. L.L.D. late Chief Justice of Malta. 1844. Butterworth.

THIS is an extremely learned review of the entire law of marriage, as it bears upon the memorable Presbyterian Marriage Question. We have not leisure to notice in detail the answers put in by Sir John Stoddart to the arguments of Lord Cottenham, but they are ingenious, certainly, if not convincing. Those who seek information on the subject, could not find it more fully given nor more valuable than in this pamphlet.

The Objections to Lord Cottenham's Dictum in "Whitworth v. Gaugain," briefly examined. By WILLIAM P. BROWELL, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1844. Spettigue.

THE question discussed in this pamphlet has been set at rest by the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, doubtless with the approval of Lord Cottenham, and with an assertion that the noble lord never said what he was reported to have said; so that all the alarm and controversy excited by the memorable dictum were needless. Mr. Browell has gallantly performed his part in the fray, but his essay is out of date already.

NECROLOGY.

DEATH OF THE HON. RICHARD BOOTLE WILBRAHAM, M.P.—It is with regret we have to announce the death of the above honourable gentleman, who expired yesterday afternoon, at five minutes to one o'clock, at Lord Skelmersdale's, in Portland-place. We understand that the hon. deceased had been unwell for some days previous; but his illness was considered merely an attack of influenza, and, consequently, not the least danger was apprehended either by his medical attendants or noble relatives. The deceased was eldest son of Lord Skelmersdale, and brother of Lady Stanley. He was born the 27th Oct. 1801, and married, the 22nd May, 1832, Miss Jessie Brooke, third daughter of Sir Richard Brooke, Bart. by whom he leaves issue several children. Lord Skelmersdale, Lord and Lady Stanley, Lord Alvanley, Sir J. and Lady Charlotte Egerton, and other families of rank, are placed in mourning by the demise of the hon. gentleman. In 1835, he was returned to the House of Commons for South Lancashire, which county he has successively represented in Parliament, in conjunction with Lord Francis Egerton. By his death a vacancy occurs in the House of Commons for that county district.

We regret to have to announce the death of William Beckford, esq. author of Vathek and other well known publications, which took place on Thursday week, at his house in Lansdowne-crescent, Bath. Mr. Beckford was in his 84th year, and with Rogers and Wordsworth, at the time of his death, the oldest of the eminent living authors of Great Britain. Mr. Beckford was born on the 29th September, 1760, and married in his 23rd year Lady Margaret Gordon, only daughter of the fourth Earl of Aboyne, who died in little more than three years after her marriage, leaving a family. A second daughter, Susan Euphemia, was married in 1810 to the present Duke of Hamilton, and has two children, the Marquis of Douglas and Lady Lincoln. The deceased gentlemen was the former proprietor of the celebrated seat, Fonthill-abbey, Wilts. The Duchess of Hamilton and Countess of Lincoln are staying at Bath, where the Duke and the Marquess and Marchioness of Douglas are also expected from the north.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

We have an accumulation of cases decided in this Court, most of them involving points of considerable importance, which the demand upon our space has not hitherto permitted us to insert; these we shall report from time to time as opportunity serves, without allowing them to interfere with the instant publication of the most important decisions as they are made.

NICHOLLS v. STRETTON.

Restraint on employment—Agreement between solicitors—Construction of a bond in restriction of practice.

Where an attorney had, on being articled, covenanted not to be concerned for "any person who had already been, or might thereafter become or be clients" of his master or his partners, and an injunction was granted to restrain him generally from being concerned for the plaintiff's clients; it was held on appeal to be entirely a legal question.

Quære, whether, if an agreement in restraint of industry be good in part and bad in part, the Court will apportion relief.

This was an appeal motion to discharge an order of the Master of the Rolls, by which an injunction had been granted to restrain the defendant Stretton from being concerned as an attorney, solicitor, or conveyancer for any client or correspondent of the plaintiff or his partners. The defendant had been the clerk of the plaintiff, a solicitor practising in London, who in 1838, after some negotiation, consented to take him, the defendant, as an articled clerk; on which occasion an indenture was made between them, which contained the following covenants by the defendant: that Stretton should not, after the expiration of term of his articles, either directly or indirectly interfere or intermeddle with, or be concerned as attorney, agent, or otherwise, for any person who had already been, or should thereafter become or be the client or correspondent in business of or with the plaintiff, or any partner or partners he might admit to a share with him; or any person to whom he might assign the whole of his business or profession as a solicitor, attorney, and conveyancer. That for every breach of that covenant, the defendant should pay to the plaintiff a penalty of 100*l.*, and that each day's repetition of employment on behalf of the prohibited clients, should be deemed a fresh breach. That the plaintiff's books should be conclusive evidence as to his clients. Stretton had been admitted an attorney and solicitor in 1843, and then began to practise on his own account. Three or four country attorneys or correspondents who had and still continued to employ the plaintiff, also employed the defendant, without any application having been made by him for such employment; and all of such correspondents made affidavits that they were in the habit of employing several agents, and that they did not send less business to the plaintiff by reason of their employment of the defendant.

Romilly, Rogers, and Bramwell (of the common law bar), for the appeal motion, contended that the agreement was unreasonable, for the defendant could never know when he was committing a breach of the covenant. This was not within the exceptions which had been established to the general rule of common law, which held agreements in restraint of industry to be invalid. They cited Gooch v. Goodman (2 Adol. & Ell. Reports).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the course where part of the agreement is void and part reasonable?

Romilly.—Relief will be marshalled.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does not this covenant prevent Mr. A. B. from employing the solicitor in whom he has most confidence?

Romilly.—All the exceptions had been founded on restraints within a particular distance. The last case was Mallan v. May (11 Meeson & Welsby's Rep. 653, also reported in the Jurist). Partial restraints are generally presumed to be bad, though the circumstances may shew that such presumption ought to be repelled in a particular case. Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 Peere Williams' Reports, 181; the case of the Tea Taylors of Exeter.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am now to determine whether the covenant is bad to the extent now complained of. The injunction is general, to restrain the defendant from being concerned for any client or correspondent of the plaintiff.

Romilly.—The injunction should have been limited. Whittaker v. Howe, 3 Beavan's Reports, 383; Chesman v. Nainby, 2 Stra. 739; 3 Brown's Parliamentary Cases, 349; Lord Raymond's Reports.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does this amount to more than a covenant not to interfere with the plaintiff's business? An issue at law would be more satisfactory.

Rogers and Bramwell.—The covenant is altogether void. There is no case like this. Wallis v. Day, 2 Meeson & Welsby's Rep. 281; Young v. Timmins, 1 Tyrwhitt's Rep. 226; 6 Adolphus & Ellis's Rep. 643; Horner v. Graves, 7 Bingham's Rep. 735; Ward v. Byrne, 5 Meeson & Welsby, 548; Wigg v. Shuttleworth, 15 East's Rep.

Russell and Goodeve, for the plaintiff.—Gale v. Reed, 8 East's Rep. 80. The defendant relies on the case of Young v. Timmins, but that was a unilateral agreement. Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Adolphus & Ellis's Rep. 438; Horner v. Ashford, 3 Bingham's Rep. 322; Bunn v. Guy, 4 East's Rep. 190; Archer v. Marsh, 6 Adolphus & Ellis's Rep. 959.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Taking the restrictions to be entire, how do you separate them? Will the Court apportion a covenant not to exercise a trade?

Goodeve.—[illegible] v. [illegible] Morris v. Coleman, 18 Vesey's Rep. [illegible]

Romilly, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is strictly a legal question. The motion must stand over for the plaintiff to bring an action, and in the mean time the injunction must be continued.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Wednesday, April 17.

WASTELL v. LESLIE, ex parte FORD.

Practice—Costs—Taxing master.

There is no rule or order which restricts the number of counsel who shall be employed in a cause to two only, but the number who are retained must, in a great measure, be left to the discretion of the solicitor to decide; and he must be guided by the importance of the case, the number of points which are likely to arise, and the facts to be stated to the Court. Therefore, when a solicitor comes with a suit already instituted, and gives briefs to two Queen's counsel and a junior counsel, and in so doing merely carries out the solicitor's intention to whom the conduct of the suit had been originally intrusted, he was held, under the circumstances, to have acted with a sound discretion; and the taxing master, who had disallowed him the costs of the second Queen's counsel, was ordered by the Court to review his report.

This was a petition of a solicitor in the suit against the master's certificate disallowing the costs incurred by employing three counsel on one side, viz. two Queen's counsel and one junior.

The pleadings in this cause were rather complex and voluminous. The original bill, in which Ellen M. Wastell, Richard Herbert, Lewis Bird, and Harriet Ann, his wife, were plaintiffs, and a number of other persons were defendants, was filed on the 12th of January, 1838, and arose out of the will of Sir Jonathan Miles, whose property, which formed the subject of the suit, consisted chiefly of a lunatic asylum.

It appears that Messrs. Hicks and Morris, of Gray's Inn, were the solicitors by whom the suit was instituted, and by whom three subsequent ones in the same matter were conducted, until the petitioner, Mr. Charles Ford, was appointed solicitor for the plaintiffs to conduct the suits hereafter mentioned.

Messrs. Hicks and Morris had already, by reason of the importance of the questions raised and the amount of property involved in the suit, deemed it advisable, on the same day on which the original bill was filed, to retain the now Vice-Chancellor Wigram as the leading counsel, and Mr. Bethel, then without the bar, as junior counsel, for the plaintiffs.

On the 12th of April, 1838, a cross bill was filed by John Carter, one of the defendants in the above suit, against the plaintiffs and the rest of the defendants thereto, when Messrs. Hicks and Morris again retained Mr. Wigram and Mr. Bethel as counsel for Ellen M. Wastell and Harriet Ann Wastell, two of the defendants to the cross suit.

The original cause was set down for hearing in Trinity Term, 1838, and on the 4th of July in the same year, a motion was made before the Vice-Chancellor of England, on behalf of the plaintiffs in the original cause, for a manager and receiver of the lunatic asylum before mentioned, and on the same day a similar motion was made in the cross cause of Carter v. Leslie. Both Mr. Wigram and Bethel appeared for the plaintiffs in the original cause, and for Ellen M. Wastell, and Harriet Wastell, as defendants, in opposition to such motion to the cross cause, when the facts of the case, and the several points arising in the causes, with their various merits, were gone into and discussed for two days, and at the conclusion the Vice-Chancellor ordered a reference to appoint a manager and receiver.

In Hilary Term, 1839, the first supplemental bill was filed by the plaintiffs in the original suit against other parties, which was set down for hearing in Trinity Term, 1839; and in Hilary Term, 1840, the second supplemental bill was filed by the plaintiffs against another fresh party, which cause was set down for hearing in Trinity Term, 1840.

The pleadings in the causes up to the filing of the second supplemental bill were settled by Mr. Bethel as junior counsel; but the second supplemental bill was settled by Mr. Wilbraham, as such junior counsel for the complainants, Mr. Bethel having at that time been called within the bar.

The cause of Carter v. Leslie was set down for hearing in Hilary Term, 1840.

At the time when the papers in the causes were handed over to the petitioner as the successor of Messrs. Hicks and Morris, viz. in July 1840, a considerable portion of the third copies of the briefs in the original and cross causes of Wastell v. Leslie and Carter v. Leslie were actually prepared, and the same were delivered over to the petitioner by Messrs. Hicks and Morris.

The plaintiff, Harriet Ann Wastell, intermarried with R. H. L. Bird, in June 1840, and in July following the petitioner was specially retained by the complainants, E. M. Wastell, and by Bird and wife to carry on the said suits on their behalf.

In the same month of July, the petitioner instructed Mr. Wilbraham (who had been employed as junior counsel since the call of Mr. Bethel within the bar) to settle the bill of revivor and supplement on the marriage of Harriet A. Wastell, which was filed on the 22nd, and the answer of E. M. Wastell and R. H. L. Bird and wife, which had also been settled by Mr. Wilbraham, was on the 4th of August, 1840, filed to a bill of revivor and supplement instituted by John Carter and Louisa Amelia his wife.

From the circumstance of Mr. Wigram and Mr. Bethel having been retained by the former solicitors, to both of whom the whole circumstances and merits of the cause were familiar, and who had both advised on the questions in the causes, in consultations and otherwise, the petitioner conceived it to be proper and according to the rules of professional etiquette, to deliver briefs to them.

In Hilary Term, 1841, the petitioner having completed the briefs which had, as before mentioned, been in part prepared by Messrs. Hicks and Morris, caused them to be delivered in the causes to Mr. Wigram, Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Wilbraham, on behalf of the plaintiffs, E. M. Wastell, R. H. L. Bird, and Harriet Ann his wife.

The several causes came on for hearing together on the 25th of February, 1841, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, whereupon, after the several points had been fully argued, his Honour made one decree in all the several before-mentioned suits, and declared that the will of Sir Jonathan Miles should be established, and the trusts thereof performed and carried into execution; together with many other matters comprised in the said decree, the minutes whereof were directed by the Vice-Chancellor to be prepared out of court by counsel, and the causes were afterwards set down on the said minutes, and, after considerable discussion, were settled by the Court. Against this decree J. Carter appealed, which appeal was heard before the Lord Chancellor in February 1843, on which occasion the Solicitor-General was specially retained, who argued the appeal on behalf of J. Carter, but no judgment has yet been pronounced thereon by his lordship.

On the 11th of January, 1843, in consequence of some severe and angry altercations having arisen between the petitioner and his client, E. M. Wastell, one of the above complainants, accompanied by several letters from that lady, couched in no measured terms, certain notices were served upon the petitioner, discontinuing him from acting as the solicitor for the said Ellen M. Wastell and Bird and wife; whereupon he made out, and on the 16th of August, 1843, delivered, his bill of costs against them, amounting to 418*l.* 17s. 3d. and another bill of costs against Ellen M. Wastell, alone, amounting to 14*l.* 3s. 4d. and commenced an action against her for the sum of 133*l.* 0s. 7d. being the aggregate amount of the two bills of costs. To this action she pleaded non-assumpsit, but afterwards suffered judgment to go by default; and about the 23rd November, 1843, she presented a petition to the Master of the Rolls, praying that the two bills of costs might be taxed, and that the petitioner might be restrained from proceeding in the action. Accordingly, on the 27th of the same month, his lordship made the usual order for taxation, and that in the mean time all proceedings at law, in respect of the two bills of fees and disbursements, should be stayed, and the costs, when so taxed, be paid by the said complainant, E. M. Wastell, to the petitioner.

In the month of December 1843, the taxing master proceeded to tax the two bills of costs under the order; when it was objected, on behalf of E. M. Westall, that the petitioner ought not to have employed more than one Queen's counsel, and that the employment of a second Queen's counsel was unnecessary and improper, and that all items in the bills of costs for making more than two copies of the pleadings and other proceedings in the several suits, and for attendances on and for fees paid to more than one Queen's counsel, ought to be disallowed and taxed off, and that two copies only of the pleadings and other matters in the several suits, and the fees and charges consequent on the employment of one Queen's counsel and one junior only on behalf of the complainant, E. M. Wastell, in the causes, ought to be allowed.

The petitioner attended before the master, and insisted on the propriety of the course he had taken in respect to his having delivered briefs to Mr. Wigram and Mr. Bethel, urging among other things the importance of the questions, and the intimate acquaintance which these gentlemen had acquired of the circumstances and merits of the causes, by having been all along engaged in them; and that in so doing he had only adopted th course and practice which the former solicitors were about to pursue, had they continued to act as the solicitors for the co-plaintiffs.

The taxing master, however, refused to allow the fees and charges consequent on the employment of a second Queen's counsel, and gave his reasons for such refusal in part as follows:—"It seems to me that it is the duty of a solicitor so to conduct a case of this nature as that, in the event of his client ultimately obtaining costs out of the fund as between solicitor and client, there may be as little extra costs as possible to be paid out of that client's share of the fund, and that if any extra costs were incurred, at all events with a reasonable prospect of the expenditure being for the benefit of the party employing him. If this be the rule to be observed in an extraordinary (quære, ordinary) case, it seems to me that this rule applies so much the more strongly in a case like the present, where the costs objected to are incumbered in six causes, four of those causes being so only in a technical sense, all set down for hearing together, and where, if these causes have been needlessly created, the expense has been multiplied in so serious a degree.

"I cannot discover how it could possibly have been the case that three counsel were properly employed at the hearing, because, admitting (as, indeed, I believe to have been the fact) that the suit involved important questions of law, still the arguments on these points of law might have been just as well conducted by the senior and junior counsel alone as by them in conjunction with the second Queen's counsel. If, therefore, I were to allow the brief of the second Queen's counsel, the effect of it would be to throw upon Miss Wastell an expense from which she has derived no benefit whatever, and which, even if she should hereafter obtain her costs out of the fund in court as between solicitor and client, could never be allowed to her on taxation.

"It has been pressed upon me that I ought to allow the briefs to the second Queen's counsel, on the ground that he had been retained in the original suit by a solicitor previously employed by Miss Wastell, and that, from an intimate knowledge of the case, his services were considered by Mr. Ford to be peculiarly valuable. It does not seem to me, however, that this circumstance ought to weigh with me, because the counsel in question had himself, after his retainer, changed his position at the bar, and had therefore no right to expect a brief under the altered circumstances. If, however, his services were really of such paramount importance as is contended for, then, I think, looking to the very heavy expense which the employment of a third counsel involved, it became the duty of Mr. Ford to have dispensed with the services of the senior Queen's counsel."

The Master accordingly taxed off and disallowed all the items in the bill of costs, for making a third copy of the pleadings and other proceedings and matters in the causes, and all the fees paid by the petitioner to, and charges consequent on, the employment of Mr. Bethel at the hearing of the causes; and on the 11th day of December last, the Master made his certificate, whereby he certified, among other things, that the two bills of fees and disbursements of the petitioner as taxed, were less by a sixth than the bills before-mentioned, and that, pursuant to the Act of Parliament, he had proceeded to tax the then petitioner, Miss Wastell, her costs of such reference, and the bill of costs being reduced to more than one-sixth; the petitioner, Ford, was charged with the costs of the reference, amounting to 23*l.* 15s. 1d. besides losing his costs attendant upon such reference, which would have been otherwise allowed him. The petition, therefore, prayed for liberty to except to the Master's certificate, and that it might be referred back to the Master to review his certificate and taxation, &c.

A number of letters that had passed between the petitioner and his client Miss Wastell, comprising the correspondence before alluded to, were read to the Court during the course of the argument.

Bethel and Randall, for the petition.—The papers having been handed over by the former solicitors to Mr. Ford, the petitioner, he was justified in carrying out the intention of the former solicitors by giving these briefs on behalf of his clients, viz. two to the Queen's counsel who had been retained, and one to the junior. That as to an attorney's exercising a discretion about the number of briefs, there is no order either in a court of equity or law restraining him; the question depends entirely upon the circumstances of the case. It is the constant practice to allow costs as between solicitor and client. Now, the construction upon the will of Sir Jonathan Miles not only fully justified, but even bound, the solicitor to deliver over the number of briefs he did in consideration of the former retainers. It is only necessary, even between party and party, to shew that the case was not an ordinary one to induce the Court to allow more than two briefs. Looking at the decree, it is sufficient to shew that the present suit is not an ordinary one, and it is necessary to discuss what portion of the suit ought to be dismissed. Then the question as to whether debts be charged upon the corpus or out of the income is an extremely important one, also, as it respects the tenant for life and the annuities. Therefore the nature of the questions appearing from the decree, which is an extremely complicated one, fully justifies Ford in acting as he has done. Now, as to the retainers, we do not know whether, although counsel be retained, it be necessary to deliver briefs. Therefore, setting aside the common courtesy, Ford was bound to follow up what had previously been pointed out to him. It was impossible for the Master to [illegible] the whole of the case, whether it was fit or not to deliver the second brief to senior counsel, yet he has thought fit to assume to exercise a better judgment than the solicitor. It might be important if the question referred to six causes, and the costs of all the causes, whether the amount of fees should be one sum or another, but not when the question is whether a second brief should be delivered or not. Mr. Ford had several clients' interests to attend to, Miss Wastell's and Mr. and Mrs. Bird's. How could he, upon the application of Miss Wastell, act otherwise than he did?

Bacon, for the respondent, Ellen Miles Wastell.

Cases cited: Morris v. Hunt (1 Chitty, 550); Ex parte Lloyd (cited in Ex parte Elsie, Montag. Rep. 70); Downing College case (3 My. & Cr. 474).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is a case of great importance, not only to counsel, but to solicitor and client generally. There certainly exists no rule that confines the number of counsel to be retained in a cause to two only. Now, although in Beame's explanatory paper referring to the thirty-third order of 1828, there is a floating idea, that only two counsel shall be employed, yet there is no adoption of that proposition. The matter of Downing College is different, for there the chancellor decides with reference to the case before him, and not where the application is by a party to tax his solicitor's bill. As to the correspondence, it is a remarkable circumstance, that the young lady, Miss Wastell, attained her age in 1840, and from that time until the month of November in the same year, a correspondence was carried on between her and Mr. Ford in a no remarkably gentle manner: there was, however, no attempt on her part to take the papers out of that gentleman's hands. The cause proceeded to a hearing, then an application was made by the party herself to tax the costs, as between solicitor and client; she is thus primâ facie bound to pay all the costs fairly incurred by the solicitor in her behalf. Now this present application is to review the Master's certificate; and I want to know whether the Master is right in disallowing any particular counsel his fees in the cause. There are many cases which cannot properly be brought before the Court without employing three counsel, as where observations are to be made in a variety of matters; and in going through a long statement of those matters, a counsel's strength may be entirely exhausted before he comes to apply his argument; and if a number of points arise out of the construction of a will, and a multitude of facts are to be stated, it is impossible that two counsel only can have strength to go through the case properly. I recollect holding a consultation with no less than nine counsel, and every day's experience tells us the necessity of a plurality, and the truth of the saying, that "in the multitude of counsel there is wisdom."

The case is simply this, that Messrs. Hicks and Morris were originally the solicitors employed to conduct the suit on behalf of the plaintiffs, and they intended to have retained three counsel. Mr. Ford carried out that intention. The present respondent presented her petition before the Master of the Rolls to tax the costs. In sending this back to be reviewed, I must say, that if the Master is to appreciate th quantum of benefit derived from the exertions of each counsel, he takes upon himself a very difficult task.

Ordered that the Master review his report.

BLUNDELL v. GLADSTONE.

Ex parte LORD CAMOYS.

Will, construction of—Excepted estates out of a general devise—Uncertainty.

A testator by his will devised to trustees and executors, their heirs and assigns, all his manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all and singular his real estate ("except the hereditaments thereinafter specifically devised"), of, or to which, he or any person or persons in trust for him, was or were seized of or entitled for any estate of freehold or inheritance (including all estates vested in him upon trust or by way of mortgage). The will then goes on as follows: "I give, devise, limit, and appoint my farm, with the appurtenances, in Aughton, in the possession of Thomas Haskeyne, unto the Rev. T. R. to hold the same unto and to the use of him, his heirs and assigns for ever." T. R. died in the testator's lifetime. The testator had two farms in Aughton, both in the possession of T. Haskeyne, one called M. and the other S. As to the one called S, the testator's father had with him, by a deed of covenant, attempted to create a perpetual trust in it for the benefit of a Roman Catholic chapel. Held, that there was nothing to shew with certainty what the excepted property was, and that therefore the two farms in Aughton passed to the trustees under the testator's will, and not to his heir-at-law.

This was the petition of Thomas Lord Camoys and Elizabeth Tempest, two of the defendants in the cause, which was originally heard about three years since, when the principle argued was one of personal identity. The testator had devised certain estates to trustees upon trust to the second son of Edward Weld, of Lulworth. It appeared, that at the date of his will there was no person in esse named Edward Weld, but that the then owner of Lulworth was Joseph Weld. Joseph, it appeared, had once a brother named Edward, but he died some time before the date of the will. His Honour the Vice-Chancellor of England, before whom it was then heard, held it to be clear that the testator had only mistaken the real name, and that he meant Joseph Weld, the then owner of Lulworth; but by the decree, it was ordered to be referred to the Master to inquire what farms and lands the testator had in Aughton at the time.

The testator, Charles Robert Blundell, in the pleadings of the cause named, was, at the time of making his will and at his decease, seized of two farms in Aughton, in the county palatine of Lancaster, both of which were, and are still, in the occupation of one Thomas Haskeyne, in the testator's will named, at the respective yearly rents of 50*l.* and 120*l.* The former one was called "Shepherd's," and had been held by the testator as the surviving trustee, under an indenture bearing date the 11th of May, 1793, upon certain charitable trusts mentioned therein. The other of the above-mentioned, viz. that held by Haskeyne at the yearly rent of 120*l.* was, and still is, known by the name of Molyneux's.

The testator duly made and published his last will and testament, bearing date the 28th day of November, 1834, to the purport and effect set forth in the pleadings, and thereby amongst other things devised to the trustees and executors in his will named, and their heirs and assigns, all that his manor or lordship of Ince, otherwise Ince Blundell in the county of Lancaster, and all that his manor-house or capital messuage, called or known by the name of Ince Blundell or Ince Blundell Hall, and the demesne and other lands thereto belonging; and also all those his manors or lordships of Formby, Ainsdale, Birkdale, Lydiate, Eggregarth, Melling, Cunscough, and Ranikers, with their respective appurtenances, in the County of Lancaster; and all and every his houses, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever in Ince, otherwise Ince Blundell, Formby, Ainsdale, Birkdale and Halsell, Little Crosby, Lydiate, Eggregarth, Melling, Cunscough, Ranikers, Preston, Broughton, and Chipping. And all and singular other his manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments; and also, all and singular his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever (except the hereditaments in the said will afterwards particularly devised), of or to which he or any person or persons in trust for him, was or were seized, or entitled for any estate of freehold or inheritance in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy, in or of which he had any power of disposition or appointment (including all estates vested in him upon trust or by way of mortgage), and their respective rights, members, and appurtenances, and including any copyhold estates, and all rents and franchises whatsoever relating to any of the said manors, lands, and hereditaments; to hold the same manors, messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments, real estate and premises, unto and to the use of his said trustees and executors, their heirs and assigns for ever. Nevertheless, as to such trust and mortgage estates, subject to the subsisting trusts and equity or right of redemption thereof, and so that all moneys coming to him thereon might form part of his personal estate; and as to all the other hereditaments, real estates, and premises therein before devised and appointed, upon the trusts in the said will—in that behalf particularly mentioned and described. The testator further devised as follows: "I give, devise, limit, and appoint my farm with the appurtenances in Lydiate, called Shacklady, in the possession of —— Shacklady, or all my estates and interests therein respectively, unto the Reverend Thomas Robinson, of Seel-street, Liverpool, to hold the same unto and to the use of him, his heirs and assigns for ever.

The Rev. Thomas Robinson was a Roman Catholic priest, and it was supposed that the intention of the testator was, that he should hold the devised property upon trust for the benefit of Lydiate chapel, of which Mr. Robinson was the officiating priest; for it appears by the Master's report in 1843, that by a deed of covenant and declaration, bearing date the 11th of May, 1793, which Mr. Henry Blundell, the father of the testator, entered into with the testator, the said Mr. Henry Blundell, and one T. S. Massey, he, the said Henry Blundell, declared that he had no right or title to the Shepherd's Farm, and that he held the same in trust for the benefit of the officiating Catholic priest in Lydiate for the time being; and covenanted with them, the said C. Blundell and T. S. Massey, their heirs and assigns, that he would thereafter pay to the priest officiating in Lydiate, the yearly rents of the said farm. Mr. Blundell, the covenantor, died in the year 1810, and Mr. C. Blundell, the testator, became entitled to his property, and paid the rent of Shepherd's Farm to the priest of Lydiate during his life.

The Master, in his report, also found that the farms and lands the testator had in Aughton at the time of making his will, and of his death, consisted of a water-mill and horse, and about half an acre of land in the possession of Ralph Rawstone, and about half an acre of land in the possession of Thomas Gronper; that Shepherd's farm, containing about thirteen acres, was let to Thomas Haskeyne at the yearly rent of 50*l.* and Molyneux farm, containing about thirty acres, let to the said Thomas Haskeyne at the yearly rent of 120*l.*

The petition was presented by Lord Camoys and Elizabeth Tempest, the coheirs of the testator, on the grounds that it was the farm called Molyneux which the testator devised to Thomas Robinson, and that in consequence of his death in the testator's lifetime, they were entitled thereto, and prayed that they might be let into possession of the same.

Stewart* and Parry for the petitioners, and Walker and Fleming for others in the same interest, contended that the testator intended to give a beneficial interest to Robinson. That where there are two things answering the same description, and a testator is beneficially interested in one only which is capable of answering his intention, there all uncertainty as to the object of his bequest ceases; the main question being that which was in the testator's mind at the time of making his will.

Bethell and Campbell, for the cestui que trust of the devised estates.—The plaintiff contended that the devise was void for uncertainty, or, if not, that it was Shepherd's farm that was intended to pass; in which case, the testator merely intended to give effect to the deed of 1793, which was invalid.

Hodgson and Witham appeared for devisees in remainder, who were in the same interest as the plaintiff.

Stewart, in reply.—The only question appears to be whether the testator really intended to devise Molyneux farm to Robinson; the only evidence which goes to shew this is that appearing upon the Master's report. We find from this, that the testator had a power to devise a beneficial interest in Molyneux farm, and only a legal one in that called Shepherd's. He devises not only those estates in which he had a beneficial interest, but also those in which he had a legal interest only; the former he gives with an exception, but the latter he devises to trustees without an exception. If the disposition be void for uncertainty, the heirs-at-law of the testator will be entitled to claim the benefit of that defect, and neither of the two farms will go to the trustees.

Cases cited: Bradshaw v. Tasker (2 My. & K. 221); West v. Shuttleworth (ibid. 684); Attorney-General v. Todd (1 Keen, 803); Thompson v. Lady Lawley (2 Bos. & Pul. 303); Day v. Trigg (1 P. Wms.)

The Vice-Chancellor.—All the parties interested have agreed to take my opinion upon the testator's will. It seems to me to be a very clear case; and I quite concur in what has been stated in the argument, namely, that every thing, save what has been excepted by the will, must pass to the trustees; but then comes the question as to what has been excepted? The testator commences his will in very sweeping terms, for he devises to the trustees all and singular his manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and also all and singular his real estate, "except the hereditaments hereinbefore specifically devised," and then he continues, "of or to which I, or any person or persons in trust for me, am, is, or are seized or entitled for any estate of freehold or inheritance in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy," &c. Now this constitutes a gift of every thing except what was afterwards intended to be specifically devised, yet in the same gift he includes that property which he held upon trust and mortgage; for he expressly provides for them in the following sentence: "Nevertheless, as to such trust and mortgage estate, subject to the subsisting trusts and equity or right of redemption thereof, and so that all moneys coming to me thereon may form part of my personal estate." This sentence seems to shew that, under the testator's idea of trust and mortgage estates, he meant to embrace trust estates in which he was beneficially interested. He then goes on to declare the trusts of the estates which he so devises; for instance, to his two servants, William Hall and James Messam, which would in itself satisfy that which was excepted out of the general devise, and if that part of it which relates to the farm at Aughton, given to Thomas Robinson, were clearly expressed, it would form an equally excepted part of the will; but the rule of law is, that unless you can point out what is the excepted gift, the whole, including the thing excepted, must pass. The exception which is not described does not constitute an exception. Upon the whole, is it certain that the testator having one farm in Aughton in the possession of Haskeyn, called "Shepherds," and another, held by the same person, called "Molyneux," has described one of these farms with sufficient certainty so as to exclude the other? I think he has not; for there is no proof that the "Shepherds" estate was held upon any subsisting trust by him. The deed of 1793, which is the only thing that in any way relates to the subject, does not, in my opinion, fix any substantial trust upon that estate; and unless there be something to shew that the words of a will are not meant by the testator to be understood in their strictly technical meaning, they must be taken in their legal sense. Now, if upon the true construction of the deed of 1793, it is to be taken as voluntary, and not binding upon the [illegible]; then there is no evidence that the heir considered himself as being bound by any subsisting trust, or that he did not intend to devise the "Shepherds" farm as well as any other. I put my construction upon the will with reference only to the Master's report and the deed of 1793. My opinion is, that the devise does not fall within the exception; for there is nothing upon the will to shew with any degree of certainty what the exception was as to the "Aughton" farms, and that, therefore, they will both pass to the trustees in the same manner as if there had been no exception whatever.

Petition dismissed with costs, but without prejudice to the question by whom the costs are to be ultimately paid.

ROLLS COURT.

Feb. 26 and March 28.

Lewis v. Smith.

When an answer is referred for scandal or impertinence, the Master has no discretionary power to give or refuse costs to the plaintiff, under the 22nd Order of December, 1833, which does no more than relieve the plaintiff from the expense of obtaining an order for taxation of costs to which he was previously entitled.

The general rule is, that an injunction against several persons to stay an action at law will not be dissolved till all have put in their answers, but under certain circumstances the rule will be relaxed.

A petition and a motion in this cause had been heard, and stood over for judgment.

As to the former, it appeared that in January last, the plaintiff had obtained an order of reference to the Master of the answer of two of the defendants for impertinence; and on the 6th February, the Master made his report, stating that the answer was impertinent, but that in his opinion it was not a case for costs, which, therefore, he refused to give. This he did on the supposition that he had a discretionary power to give or refuse costs, which the plaintiff denied, and gave notice of having them taxed in the usual manner. The taxing Master, being of opinion that, according to the practice of the court he was entitled to the costs, taxed them. The defendants, relying on the discretionary power of the Master, presented their petition, and the question being discussed on a former day,

May 2.—The Master of the Rolls.—The Master had no authority to determine the right to costs for impertinence previously to the Orders of the 21st of December, 1833; and by the 22nd of these the plaintiff was entitled to expunge the impertinent matter, and the Master was to be at liberty to tax the costs of the reference, and direct by whom the same should be paid. That order, however, did not do more than relieve the plaintiff from the expense of obtaining an order to which he was before entitled, the Master being thereby enabled to act without an order. Upon reading the affidavit of the defendants, and after communicating with the Master, I have great doubt whether they were misled. It may have been so, and if they think they have grounds for excepting to the report, they must have leave to do so, and the proceedings as to costs must be stayed for that purpose. If not, the petition must be dismissed.

As to the motion, it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained the common order for an injunction to stay proceedings at law in a joint action brought against him by the defendants, who were five partners in trade. Three of them were abroad in Australia, and the other two, who were in this country, having put in their answer to the plaintiff's bill, applied for and obtained the common order nisi to dissolve the injunction, unless cause should be shewn to the contrary. The order was somewhat ambiguously expressed, it not clearly stating whether the injunction was sought to be dissolved against all the five defendants, or against the two only who had answered. It was contended, on the part of the plaintiff, that the injunction could not be dissolved till all the defendants had answered, and even if it could, the method of proceeding was not by order nisi, but by making a special application in the first instance.

The following cases were cited: Nanney v. Vaughan (8 Sim. 430); Brooks v. Purton (1 Y. & C. 274); Kilby v. Stanton (2 Y. & J. 75); Joseph v. Doubleday (1 V. & B. 497); Todd v. Dismor (2 S. & St. 177); Montague v. Hill (4 Russ. 128); Imperial Gas Company v. Clarke (1 Y. 580); St. John v. Cargill (3 Anstr. 933); Naylor v. Middleton (1 Madd. 131).

Turner and Lewin, for the defendants.

James Parker, for the plaintiff.

May 2.—The Master of the Rolls.—The order nisi to dissolve is certainly ambiguous, but it must be taken to mean to dissolve the injunction as against the two defendants who obtained it, unless cause be shewn to the contrary. The plaintiff insists that he is not [illegible] cause till the other [illegible] have answered. The general rule is, that injunctions are not to be dissolved before all the defendants have answered, but cases have arisen in which the Court has ordered otherwise, and these cases at the same time shew the proper method of proceeding. [His Lordship here cited and commented on Joseph v. Doubleday, Naylor v. Middleton, Todd v. Dismor, and The Imperial Gas Company v. Clarke.] These authorities shew that an injunction to restrain an action at law may be dissolved as against some only of several defendants before all have answered; and the manner of proceeding is by order nisi. The defendants are, therefore, regular, and are entitled to the undertaking by the plaintiff, to shew cause upon the merits, or to have the injunction dissolved so far as it restrains themselves.

Smith v. Lord Effingham and Others.

Warrant of attorney—Judgment—Elegit—Outstanding terms—Ejectment.

A tenant for life of certain lands grants an annuity to B, secured by a warrant of attorney, and afterwards grants annuities and rent-charges, secured by warrants of attorney and demises, to other persons. B's annuity is paid for some time, and then remains unpaid for 18 or 19 years, when the payment ceased. B, subsequent to the grant of the other annuities, sues out an elegit, on which he was unable to succeed in an ejectment against A, because of outstanding terms; two of the other annuitants bring their bills, and succeed in establishing their claims, which, as well as those of the others, B excepted, are provided for; the assignee of B then brings his bill for relief, and an issue is directed.

This was a suit instituted to obtain payment of an annuity; and the bill asked that the plaintiff might be declared first incumbrancer upon certain freeholds at Bixley and Framlingham, in the county of Norfolk, and also an account of what was due on the annuity, the estate sold, and a receiver appointed in another cause discharged, and that the defendants might not be paid any of the rents, &c. The Hon. Francis Wood Primrose being tenant for life of the lands in question (subject to two terms of 500 and 1,000 years, which had been assigned to attend the inheritance), on the 15th Nov. 1817, granted an annuity (in consideration of 2,660*l*.) of 380*l*. to James Dudgeon, for the life of the said Primrose, with a covenant for payment thereof and a warrant of attorney, on which judgment was entered up on the 15th Dec. following. On the 9th Dec. 1818, Primrose, in consideration of 5,000*l*. granted another annuity to one Browne, charged upon the lands, with a power of entry and distress, and a demise for 99 years, if Primrose should so long live, to a trustee for Browne in trust, to secure the annuity. In the year 1840 three other annuities were granted to persons named Pearson, Waite, and Brydges, two of which were secured by warrant of attorney and judgment entered up thereon, and one also by a demise, for a term, of the lands in question. On the 22nd of May, 1821, Primrose demised the lands for a term to Lord Effingham and others, on trust for his creditors. On the 21st Dec. 1820, the last payment to Dudgeon of his annuity was made; and on the 6th Nov. 1821, he sued out an elegit, and an action of ejectment was afterwards brought, to which a nolle prosequi was entered in 1826. In 1823 a bill was filed by Browne, and in 1829 another by Brydges; and on the 20th July, 1830, a decree was made in both causes, settling the priority of the annuitants, &c. and appointing a receiver. In neither of these suits was Dudgeon made a party, nor was his claim recognised; but on 1st Oct. 1830, a bond of indemnity against his claim was executed between Browne and the trustees of the deed of 22nd May, 1821. On the 20th November, 1838, Dudgeon assigned his annuity to the plaintiff Smith, and on the 7th March, 1839, the present bill was filed. On the part of the plaintiff it was urged that the judgment was a lien from the date of the writ, and not merely from the time the elegit was sued out; that Browne had notice of Dudgeon's judgment, because Howard and Gibbs were the solicitors for Primrose in both transactions (being also the trustees of the outstanding terms of 500 and 1,000 years); and that Dudgeon, being unaware of the suits of 1823 and 1829, and not a party thereto, Smith's rights, as the assignee of Dudgeon, were unaffected. Besides, the plaintiffs gave up part of what the bill prayed, and sought not to disturb the priorities as already settled among the other incumbrancers, nor to recover any of the rents and profits already distributed under the decree of 1830. They asked only a moiety of the freeholds, as against the defendants; but as they had a security also on the copyholds belonging to Primrose, they asked to have as against Primrose the surplus, after making up the copyholds sufficient to pay the defendants; and in case of being sent to law, to prevent them setting up the outstanding terms on the Statute of Limitations no bar to the plaintiff's claim. The defendants, on the other hand, contended, inter alia, that the judgment of Dudgeon was not a lien, but only the right to acquire a lien by suing out an elegit which would not relate back to the judgment; [...] could not be [...], because the transactions, though by the same solicitor, were quite unconnected; that Dudgeon's annuity was usurious; that he had notice of the bill of 1823, for one Alderson, who acted as solicitor for the defendants therein, was solicitor for Dudgeon in the action of ejectment; and that it was on account of the apprehended charge of usury that action was stopped. They pleaded also laches, and the Statute of Limitations.

The following cases were cited: Hargreaves v. Rothwell (1 Kee. 154); Fuller v. Bennett (2 Hare, 402); Tunstall v. Trappes (3 Sim. 286); Morris v. Jones (2 B. & C. 242); Hiscocks v. Kemp (3 A. & E. 376; 1 Dowl. The Solicitor-General and Wilcock, for the plaintiffs.

Cooper, Kindersley, Tinney, Turner, Cooke, Cory, Lovatt, and Parry, for other parties.

Monday, May 6.—The MASTER of the ROLLS, in giving judgment, stated the facts at great length, and observed that the plaintiff only asked to be entitled to a moiety of the lands in priority to the charges of Browne, &c. This was less than was asked for by the bill. The plaintiff might have a right to relief, but he should first establish his claim at law. He would therefore retain the bill for a year, and give him an opportunity to bring an ejectment; and for that purpose he would interfere to prevent the outstanding terms and the Statute of Limitations from being set up no bar, but no more. It was said (his lordship continued) that some inquiry should be made how the claims arose before the plaintiff was entitled to such interference; but there was the judgment on record, and it was referred to in the bond of indemnity. It was impossible to discover why Dudgeon had not been made a party to the suit; and if the defendants have an equitable case, let them adopt proceedings to shew it. The Court, giving credit to the judgment, cannot say the plaintiff has not some claim to the estate. The receiver was not a necessary party, but he might remain. The costs of receiver to the present time must be paid by plaintiff, without prejudice to his being reimbursed, if successful.

Tuesday, March 19.

GOYMOUR v. PIGGE.

Construction of will—Life estate or tail—Deed of compromise set aside.

The words, "I give all my messuage, &c. to my daughter M. A. N. for life, and after her decease, to the first child of the body of my said daughter, whether male or female, and to his or her heirs, but if he or she die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, then to the second, &c., but if my said daughter shall die without leaving issue, or having issue, and such issue shall die under twenty one without leaving issue as aforesaid, then I give &c., to M. A. G. &c.:" giving only a life estate to the daughter.

M. A. N. suffers a recovery, and appoints to her husband, who, after her death without issue, enters into a compromise with the remainder-man under the will, in the presence only of the husband's solicitor, and by his advice the deed is set aside and the remainder-man's claim under the will enforced.

Joshua Nunn, of Hadleigh, in Suffolk, after devising by his will, dated 1st of June, 1787, to his wife Protesio, for life, all that his messuage, malting-offices, and lands, copyhold of the manor of Hadleigh, proceeded: "And after the decease of my wife, I devise the same to my daughter Mary Ann Nunn for life, and after her death, to the first child of the body of his said daughter, whether male or female, and to his or her heirs and assigns for ever; but if such child should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue of his or her body, then I devise the said estate unto the second child of the body of my said daughter and his or her heirs, &c. and in case, &c. to the third child of the body of my said daughter; and so on to the fourth and fifth, and all and every other, the child and children of the body of my said daughter as before said, regard being had to the priority, &c. and to their several and respective deaths under all and without leaving issue of their bodies; for in case of issue, it is my will that such child shall inherit the said estates; and I give the same to him or her, and his or her heirs accordingly. But in case my said daughter depart this life without leaving of her body, or having issue, and such issue should die under the age of twenty-one years without leaving issue, then I devise the messuage, &c. unto my cousin Mary Ann Goymour for life, and after her death unto Nunn Goymour, her son, and his heirs and assigns." The wife of the testator died in 1801; and his daughter having been married to one Davy, and afterwards to the defendant Mr. Pigge, and having suffered a customary recovery of the property in 1816, and appointed it to her husband, died in 1832 without issue. Mary Ann Goymour and Nunn Goymour died in the lifetime of Mrs. Pigge. The present plaintiff is the nephew and heir-at-law of Nunn Goymour. After the death of Mrs. Pigge, the plaintiff gave notice to the tenants not to pay the rents, and by himself and his solicitors took various steps to ascertain his rights, but they did not obtain such information as justified them to proceed. Mr. Pigge, on being applied to, said his wife had left him the property, she having a right to dispose of it under her father's will; and Messrs. Goodwin and Turnby, who had been Mrs. Pigge's solicitors, replied to the letter of plaintiff's solicitors: "That Goymour had no claim, Mrs. Pigge having suffered a recovery, and having thereby, whether as tenant for life or entail, destroyed the remainders over; and that the devise to Nunn Goymour was too remote, being limited after a general failure of issue." Nothing was done till April 1837, when the plaintiff, who is a poor labourer, went to the defendant's house at Heacham, and asked him for some assistance. The defendant sent him to Lynn, a distance of fourteen miles, and desired him to call on his, the defendant's, solicitor, and stay at the inn till he should see him. This was on Saturday, and on Monday the defendant met the plaintiff at the solicitor's (Mr. Goodwin), read the will, and told the plaintiff he had no claim, but that Mr. Pigge having regard for his wife's relations, would do as he had done in another case pay him the sum of 125*l*. if he would execute a deed of surrender, for if he went to law it would only be putting money in the lawyer's pockets, which he might as well have; and as Mr. Pigge intended to oppose him, he would have no chance. The plaintiff according executed the deed, and received the 125*l*. This deed recited the will incorrectly, calling the limitation over a remainder, and not an executory devise. Some time after, Mr. Pigge, having given 150*l*. to a family called Pittocks, relations of his wife, the plaintiff hearing of it, came to him in 1840, and asked for further assistance, saying, "for you know, Mr. Pigge, you could not have sold the Hadleigh estate without my signature." Soon after the compromise in 1837, the defendant mortgaged the property to a Mr. Veargate, who it was admitted took without notice; and in July 1842 put it up to sale by auction, describing it as worth 63*l*. per annum. Hopes had been held out to the plaintiff of being remembered in his will by Mr. Pigge; but the result was, after further inquiry, a resolution to institute this suit. The bill prayed an account of the rents so far back as the death of Mrs. Pigge, &c. deducting the 125*l*. the payment by the plaintiff of the mortgage debt, &c.; and that the deed of compromise should be set aside, &c. The mortgagee was made a party to the suit.

Kindersley (with him White) argued that the word "issue" in the limitation over meant "children," and that therefore Mrs. Pigge only took a life estate; also, that the compromise ought to be set aside, because, upon entering into it, the plaintiff was not upon equal footing with the defendant, and had not proper professional assistance and advice; and for inadequacy of price, &c. He cited 2 Jarm. Pow. Dev. 530, 537, Ginger dem. White v. White (Willes, 348); Goodright dem. Docking v. Dunham (Dougl. 264); Bamfield v. Popham (1 P. Wms. 54); Doe dem. Syde v. Syde (1 T. R. 596); Doe dem. Davy v. Burnsall (6 T. R. 30, 1 B. & P. 215); Doe dem. Gilman v. Elvey (4 East, 313); Malcolm v. Taylor (2 R. & Myl. 416); Ellicombe v. Gompertz (3 Myl. & Cr. 127); Carter v. Bentall (2 Beav. 551); Wood v. Abrey (3 Mad. 417).

Turner (with him Chandless) very ingeniously argued that Mrs. Pigge took an estate tail, either in possession or remainder. His argument amounted to this, that where there is a gift over on a general failure of issue, however particularly the objects of it are previously described, there must be an estate tail. He also argued that the deed of arrangement was a fair compromise of a doubtful right (the plaintiff having full knowledge of his rights, and proper explanations of the will, &c. having been made to him by the solicitor), and should not therefore be disturbed; but if the Court should think otherwise, then he asked to have an issue. They cited the following cases: Franks v. Price (3 Beav. 182); Gordon v. Gordon (3 Swanst. 400); Wood v. Abrey (3 Mad. 417); Lewis dem. Ormond v. Waters (6 East, 336); Allman v. Fryer (1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 289); Esdaile v. Gall (1 Russ. & Myln. 540); Parr v. Swindels (4 Russ. 283); Nichol v. Nichol (2 W. Blackst 1159); Vanderplank v. King (7 Jurist, 549); Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (MS. 2 Jarm. 375); Hutchinson v. Strahan (2 Kee. 240).

Rogers, for Veargate, the mortgagee, asked to be dismissed with costs, the plaintiff not having offered to redeem him.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The plaintiff, as heir of the devisee in remainder of the will, has a plausible claim; and if Mrs. Pigge took no estate tail he is entitled; but if she did, he is barred by her recovery. Mrs. Pigge having enjoyed the property till her death in 1832, the defendant then entered into possession. Very soon after, the plaintiff had some suspicions of his rights, for inquiries were made, and notice given to the occupying tenants not to pay the rents, &c.; but the attempt to ascertain his interest was not successful. [Here his Lordship stated the facts down to the compromise.] A compromise of a doubtful right on equal terms would not be disturbed, but here the parties were not upon equal terms. The construction of the will was difficult; the plaintiff, a poor labourer, away from his own connexions, and introduced to the defendant's attorney. The defendant's statement is, that the attorney read the will to the plaintiff, and explained its difficulties; but it could not have been explained satisfactorily to the mind of the plaintiff, nor could he have understood whether it was to his advantage to accept the proposal or proceed to establish his right. The attorney signified his impressions that plaintiff could not recover, that defendant had a kind feeling to his wife's relatives, and would remember them in his will. The attorney placed himself in a situation wherein it was almost impossible for him to walk uprightly in a conflict between the interests of his old client and this poor labouring man. It was not the way the transaction ought to have been conducted; one party knew all the circumstances, the other was without any advice other than that of the person with whom he was bargaining. There was not any intention to practise a deliberate fraud, but the parties were on very unequal terms; the arrangement, therefore must not stand. The decision of the question, as to the right to the estate, remains, and if I can, I will decide it without sending it to law. The mortgagee must be dismissed.

Monday, May 6.—His Lordship, this morning, after stating the provisions of the will, said, there was a clear intention to give to Mary Ann Nunn a life estate, and the question was, whether that was enlarged into an estate tail by the subsequent words. His Lordship was of opinion that it was not, that "issue," meant children, and that there was no estate tail, therefore, by implication, and consequently, that the plaintiff was entitled under the devise over. He said, that as the plaintiff had not offered to redeem the mortgagee, he was entitled to have the bill dismissed as against him with costs, unless the plaintiff should undertake to redeem whether he succeeded in his claim over against Mr. Pigge or not.

KINSHILA v. LEE.

In an administration suit by a party calling himself next of kin of the deceased, if the defendant absolutely denies his title as next of kin, a preliminary inquiry as to that point will not be granted.

This was an administration suit instituted by the plaintiff, who claimed to be the next of kin of the deceased. The defendant, however, by his answer positively denied the plaintiff's title as such, and, in fact, insisted that he was not the next of kin. Under these circumstances,

Harrison moved for a preliminary inquiry as to the next of kin.

Toller, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS refused the motion, as the defendant denied the plaintiff's title.

Wednesday, May 1.
BATHER v. KEARSLEY.

Misjoinder of co-plaintiffs—Application by one plaintiff to strike out the name of another as plaintiff, and to make him a defendant, on the ground of his acquiescence in a breach of trust by the original defendants.

This was a suit instituted by Thomas Bather and Mary his wife, and Thomas Bather an infant, against the defendants, for a breach of trust. Kearsley, one of the defendants, was the surviving trustee under the will of Mrs. Bather's father, by which certain property was bequeathed to the trustees in trust for the children of the testator, &c. Kearsley became bankrupt; and it being discovered, after the suit was instituted, that Thomas Bather had acted in the trusts of the will, and acquiesced in the accounts, Mrs. Bather now applied to amend the bill by striking out the name of her husband as co-plaintiff, and making him a defendant. The grounds of her doing so were, that he being interested in remainder in the trust property, had acquiesced in a breach of trust committed, by selling certain cotton factories, part of the trust property, to the testator's son, who had become bankrupt, for 27,000*l.* contrary to the trusts of the will, and allowing the money to remain on mortgage thereof, and advancing a further sum of 5,000*l.* on the security of the same premises. Another object of the motion was, to vary a former order, directing deeds, &c. to be brought into the Master's office, which had been before ordered to be delivered to the receiver, and that three weeks from the production of the deeds in the Master's office might be allowed for amending the bill. This was changed into three weeks from the present time. It was sought also to limit the amount of the receiver's security to the interest only of the principal money secured on the mortgage. It was contended that full justice might be done at the hearing, without making the amendment sought; and that the answer by the defendant would in a great measure be useless, and that they would lose all benefit of relief against Thomas Bather, or be driven to file a cross bill, that the costs of the motion would not be sufficient to compensate them, and that full justice to all parties could be done at the hearing. The following cases were cited: Aylwin v. Bray (2 Y. & J. 518); Small v. Attwood (Ibid. 512); Attorney-General v. Cooper (3 Myl. & Car. 261); Brown v. Sawer (3 Beav. 598); Lambert v. Hutchinson (1 Beav. 277); Holkirk v. Holkirk (4 Mad. 50).

Turner and Bailey, for the motion.

Palmer and Rolt, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—No doubt there are cases where the Court may make a decree at the hearing, though there be a misjoinder of parties; but where the misjoinder appears at an early stage of the suit, and one plaintiff cannot get relief because, from something discovered since the institution of the suit, his co-plaintiff ought to have been made a defendant, the question is, whether, because the defendant may sustain some injury, the plaintiff is to be deprived of his right to have justice done him. Of course the defendant must be put to the least possible inconvenience in the matter; but even if it should turn out that a cross-bill should be necessary, the chance of that is a less evil than the chance of doing injustice to Mrs. Bather at the hearing.

Let there be leave to amend as desired, the defendants to have the costs of the motion, and reserve the costs of the misjoinder of plaintiffs.

As to the receiver, there can be no difficulty; the money may be paid into court at once, not through the receiver.

Friday, May 3.
PEERS v. LAMBERT.

Specific performance—Construction of conditions of sale—Exceptions to Master's report.

The words "a capital wharf, with a jetty, &c." in conditions of sale, mean that the jetty is an essential part, and not merely an incident of the property so put up to sale.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff for the specific performance by the defendant of a contract for the purchase of certain copyhold property, called Ashton's Wharf, situated on the River Thames, near Blackwall. By the conditions of sale, it was described thus—"A capital wharf, with a jetty; a counting-house; extensive warehouses, with floors, cock-lofts, and a superior rigging-house. This property is copyhold of the manor of Stepney, or Stebonhurst." The title being objected to, a reference to the Master was ordered by a former decree of the Court; and on the 28th of March last, the Master, by his report, found that a good title had been made to the wharf, &c.; but that a good title had not been made to the jetty, that being erected by the permission only of the conservators of the Thames; and therefore that a good title was not made out to the whole property comprised in the description, the term copyhold applying therein to the jetty, as well as the wharf, &c. To this finding, exceptions were taken by the plaintiff; and the question now came before the Court on further directions. It was insisted, on the one hand, that the conditions should not be treated as applying the term "copyhold" to the wharf and jetty, but only to the wharf, and that the jetty was only an incident thereto; and that the Master misunderstood the language of the condition. On the other hand, it was contended that the description did apply to both, and that a title, therefore, could not be made.

Turner and Bailey, for the plaintiff.

Kindersley, for the defendant.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It strikes me that the jetty is essential to the use of the wharf, and that the description must mean a wharf with a right to have a jetty, and not merely having a jetty at the will of the conservators of the river. A jetty is merely by the sufferance of the conservators; but, as the words stand here, it is a wharf with a jetty, and how can that be other than the right to have a jetty? I incline to agree with the Master, that the jetty is described as part of the copyhold. The exceptions, therefore, must be overruled; and the title to the whole property not being shewn, let the bill be dismissed, with costs.

Tuesday, May 7.
Re JERVIS.

Petition to confirm the Master's report as to the taxation of a bill of costs of a solicitor. Motion to discharge the order for taxation, on the ground of its being obtained irregularly, and by misrepresentation. A solicitor in prison is prohibited from practising under the 31st section of the new Solicitors Act. Jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity different.

The Hon. and Rev. Augustus Cavendish, the petitioner, being in custody in the Queen's Bench prison on a writ of ne exeat regno, issued out of Chancery in a cause, Richardson v. Cavendish, respecting certain trust funds, amounting to 35,000*l.* in September last applied to Henry Zacharia Jervis, a solicitor, then also in the same prison for debt, to assist him in making out accounts, &c. in the matter of the trust, and Jervis agreed to do so. Papers and correspondence were put into his hands, and the sum of 25*l.* was given him. Some time after, Cavendish being in expectation of a satisfactory arrangement, and of his consequent liberation, asked for the papers, &c. which Jervis refused to give up, on the ground of not being sufficiently remunerated. Application was then made for a summons to the prisoner to shew cause why the papers should not be delivered; and on his being brought up before Mr. Justice Patteson, on habeas corpus, the summons was dismissed, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, inasmuch as he had not acted so as to bring him within the provisions of the Act. An order, of course, was then obtained at the Rolls by Mr. Cavendish, to tax Jervis's bill, which had been sent (amounting to 40*l.* besides the 25*l.* already paid), and Jervis was served with a warrant to tax, to which he sent in a protest, which the taxing Master entered. A second warrant was then taken out, against which he also protested, but inasmuch as he had taken no step since the first protest to set aside the order, the bill was taxed at twenty guineas, leaving four guineas and costs of taxation due to Cavendish. The motion to discharge the order now came on with the petition to confirm the report. Jervis alleged that he informed Cavendish that he had not, "since his incarceration" in January 1843, acted as solicitor, and that he could only give him assistance as any ordinary person would do; and that he had done nothing but make up accounts. On the contrary, it was sworn that he advised Cavendish to file a cross bill; and that he got the 25*l.* to fee counsel, and even mentioned several names of gentlemen retained and consulted. The petitioner having caused inquiries to be made, found that he had never applied to the gentlemen in question, nor taken any step; he also found that Jervis had taken out his certificate on the 28th of December, 1842.

Turner and Terrill, for Jervis.

Kindersley, for the petitioner.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The jurisdiction of the common law courts and this court is very different. Jervis, I admit, did not act so as to bring himself within the jurisdiction of the courts of common law, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 31, but there can be no doubt, if he had confined himself to making out accounts it might be different, but he prepared a bill and did other acts with the object of carrying on proceedings. He might be subjected to a very different process from this court. I refuse the motion with costs, and grant the prayer of the petition.

BARWELL v. BROOKS, re CATTLIN.

A petition to tax a bill of costs presented within a few days of the end of the year after payment, unless it makes out a substantial case, will not be allowed to stand over with liberty to amend to a day after the expiration of the year.

Kindersley asked that the petition of Thomas Magnus Cattlin, to tax the bill of his late solicitor, presented on the 11th of April last, might stand over with liberty to amend.

Turner (with him Shebbeare), said that the petition, as it stood, made out no case; and as the bill had been paid on the 15th of April, 1843, if permission were given to amend, it would be extending the period allowed by the new Act beyond the year. If there was any negligence in conducting the matter, the petitioner would suffer no harm, for he had his remedy over against the present solicitor.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I do not desire to shift the liability from one party to another. Amendments are generally allowed, but a party cannot be permitted, within the time, to present a piece of paper as a petition, and afterwards fill it up at his convenience. That would be to enlarge the time allowed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 31. If I do not mention it again, the application may be considered refused.

Wednesday, May 8.—His lordship said he remained of the same opinion.

Wednesday, May 8.
SAYER v. WAGSTAFFE, re SANDERS.

Appeal from an order does not stay execution thereof unless cause be shewn.

Cooper (with him Moore) said this was a motion to suspend taxation of Mr. Sanders's bill of costs pending the appeal now before the Chancellor. On the 6th inst. they had been served with notice that it was intended to proceed on the warrant, which, in fact, was taken out yesterday. The case of the Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, in which security was given for payment of the fund, afforded some analogy to this case.

Kindersley, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If I were the respondent I would consent; but an appeal from an order does not stay execution thereof unless cause be shewn.

LEWIS v. SMITH.

An injunction against several defendants (plaintiffs at law) will not be dissolved against two, who merely disclose their inability to make the discovery sought, and refer to the others for the required information. The better course of proceeding would be by demurrer.

The defendants in this case amounted to ten, of whom five, called Smith, were in partnership in Sydney, in Australia, ... partnership in Liverpool. The other defendants and the plaintiffs were owners of a ship called the Strathedan. Three of the other five defendants were in partnership, and were the ship's husbands. Consignments were in the habit of being made by the latter to Smith and Co. in Sydney, and Smith and Co. of Liverpool, used to make advances on their bills of lading. In March 1841 the Strathedan sailed to Sydney with a general cargo, and certain repairs being necessary on her arriving there, disbursements were made by Smith and Co. and charged to the account of the ship's husbands. Subsequently they failed, and Smith and Co. brought their action against the owners of the ship for the amount of their disbursements. A bill was filed, and an injunction obtained to restrain them from proceeding therein; and William and Alexander Smith having answered, moved on a former day to dissolve the injunction as against themselves, or that the plaintiff should be put upon an undertaking to shew cause upon the merits. This, accordingly, they undertook, and Kindersley (with him G. Parker) said they had no grounds to go upon, the defendants having, in their answer, professed their ignorance of the matters in question, and having referred to the other defendants in Sydney. The other answers, therefore, must come in, before they could shew cause on the merits.

Turner and Lewin, contrà.—It was a mere account of money or repairs of a vessel, and therefore a fit question only for a court of law. That there was no account between the ship's husbands and Smith and Co. of Sydney, who were only the agents of Smith and Co. of Liverpool, and, therefore, no privity; and that there was no equity to a third party arising out of matters between two other parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The defendants have adopted an unusual course, but right on the authorities. It is said there is no equity at all; but it is one thing to argue the question upon a demurrer, and another to shew cause upon an answer. The defendants not demurring (as would have been, perhaps, a better course), and not being in possession of the facts, which the plaintiffs should know before they are in a condition to shew cause, let this stand over till the other answers come in. It is not easy to discover the rule, but I would have dissolved as against these defendants, had their answers contained matter sufficient.

Thursday, May 9.

STURGE v. DIMSDALE.

Quære, whether a portion of the proceeds of real estate, directed to be sold, which results to the heir, is liable to duty.

This was an application, by Craig, for payment of money out of court; and incidentally a question arose, whether a sum of money, the proceeds of real estate, which resulted to the heir at law, was liable to duty.

Piggott argued that it was.

The MASTER of the ROLLS directed it to stand over, with liberty to amend, and that a communication should be made to the Commissioners of Stamps, to take such steps as they might think fit.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Friday, March 29.

BAGGETT v. MEUX.

Feme Covert—Separate use—Restraint against anticipation—Construction of will—Costs.

A testator devised to his daughter certain freehold estates, to hold to her and her heirs for ever, and declared that she should not sell, charge, mortgage, or incumber the same, and that she should have, receive, and take such premises for her own sole and separate use, benefit, and disposal, and have the sole management thereof independent of her husband, and that the same, or the rents and produce thereof, should not be subject or liable to the debts, control, or intermeddling of her husband, and that her receipt alone should be a sufficient discharge for the said rents, &c., and that the said estates should go to such persons as she should by her will direct. The estates in question were subject to a lease for a period almost expired, at a rent of 60l. After the testator's death, the daughter and her husband, by an indenture of lease, duly acknowledged by the wife, demised the estates to a trustee for thirty-one years, upon trust, nevertheless, for the husband, paying to the husband and wife and the survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of the wife, the annual rent of 60l. The deeds were immediately afterwards deposited to secure a sum borrowed by the husband. Held, that the lease made by the daughter and her husband was invalid, and it was ordered to be given up, and the term created by it assigned to attend the inheritance.

Where a person had permitted his name to be used as a trustee, for the purpose of obtaining a lease, from a married woman in favour of her husband, of property which she was restrained from anticipating, he was not allowed his costs in a suit instituted for the purpose of setting aside the lease.

John Warren, by his will dated the 1st of September 1828, gave and devised unto his daughter, Alice Bag-[illegible] the younger, his freehold estate in Great Windmill-street, in the parish of St. James, with the appurtenances, consisting of the premises called the Bull-yard, and several houses, one of which was the Bull public-house, to hold the same unto his said daughter, Alice Baggett, and her heirs for ever. And after making certain other dispositions in favour of his other daughters, he declared that neither of his said daughters should sell, charge, mortgage, or incumber the estates or property by him given, devised, and bequeathed to them; and that his daughters should have, receive, and take such estates and property, each of them for their own sole and separate and respective use and benefit and disposal, and have the sole management thereof independent of their husbands for the time being; and the same or any part thereof, or the rents, dividends, or yearly produce thereof or any part thereof, should not be subject or liable to the debts, control, or intermeddling of their husbands for the time being, and that the respective receipts of his said daughters alone, signed by them with their hands from time to time, should be a sufficient discharge for the said rents, dividends, and interest, or yearly produce and moneys thereby given, devised, and bequeathed to them respectively, to the parties paying the same; and that the said estates or property should go to such child or children, or other person or persons, in such share or shares or manner, as his said daughters should, by their respective last wills and testaments, to be executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, give, order, direct, or appoint the same. And the testator thereby appointed William Baggett the elder and George Baggett, executors of his will. The testator died on the 1st of September, 1828. The "Bull" public-house was subject to a lease, granted by the testator, by indenture dated the 19th January, 1816, to Joseph Goding, for thirty-one years, commencing at Lady-day 1816, at the annual rent of 60l. By various mesne assignments, and by an indenture dated the 10th of June, 1840, these premises became vested in William John Baggett for the residue of the said term of thirty-one years. By an indenture dated the 11th of June, 1840, and made between William John Baggett and his wife of the first part, John Evans of the second part, and William John Baggett of the third part, the said premises, called the "Bull" public-house, with the appurtenances, were granted, bargained, demised, and leased by the said William John Baggett and his wife, to the said John Evans, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust nevertheless for William John Baggett, his executors, administrators, and assigns, from Midsummer-day then next ensuing, for the term of thirty-one years, yielding and paying therefore yearly and every year, during the said term, unto William John Baggett and his wife, and the survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of the wife, the clear yearly rent of 60l. on the usual quarter-days. This indenture was duly acknowledged by Mrs. Baggett before a Master in Chancery. It appeared that the lease was executed for the purpose of obtaining a loan of 600l., and accordingly Messrs. Meux and Co. on the 16th of June, 1840, advanced that sum to Baggett, upon having the lease of the 19th of January, 1816, and the assignments thereof, and the lease of the 11th of June, 1840, deposited with them, accompanied by a written memorandum, signed by Baggett, by which he engaged to execute an underlease by way of mortgage, when required, and it was declared that Messrs. Meux and Co. should have a lien on the deeds deposited for the 600l. and interest thereon. Shortly after the month of June, 1840, William John Baggett took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and in October 1841, Baggett and the plaintiff sub-let the premises for three years at the yearly rent of 90l. This bill was filed by Mrs. Baggett, for the purpose of setting aside the lease of the 11th of June, 1840.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The main question for decision in this case is, whether according to the true construction of the will, the lease of June 1840 is sustainable against the plaintiff. It appears from the will that all the testator's daughters, including the plaintiff, were under coverture at the time it was made, and that the plaintiff was then the wife of her present husband. The counsel for Messrs. Meux and Co. have argued, that had the will ended with the words prohibiting the daughters to sell, mortgage, charge, or incumber the estates devised to them, the prohibition would have been void as to the property in question in this suit. That is so: the plaintiff would not then have had it to her separate use; but they have also contended that the prohibition is unavailing as the will stands, on the ground that the words have no substantial connection with the pro-[illegible] following them [illegible] which the daughters' interests are declared to be independent of their husbands; and they have also argued that such a clause is, as to the plaintiff, inconsistent with the absolute gift made to her by the will of the property in question, and not more effectual in her case than it would be had the devisee been a man or unmarried. To these arguments I cannot accede. The prohibition against selling, &c. is immediately followed by a provision forming, in truth, part of the same sentence or clause with the prohibition, and declaring that the daughters should take such estates and property each of them for their own separate use, &c. independent of their husbands. I do not perceive any sufficient reason for not construing these two unseparated parts of the same sentence or clause in association or connection together. But it is, as I have said, contended that the prohibition is void or ineffectual, on the ground of her absolute interest in it. A distinction being argued to exist between such a case and the case of a mere life annuity or life interest, it must be remembered that, in the language used by Lord Eldon, in Jackson v. Hobhouse, a feme covert, having power to alien, is a mere creature of equity to the extent to which the settlement constitutes her a feme sole and no further; and that Lord Cottenham, in Tullett v. Armstrong, says (p. 393), "When once it was established that the separate estate of a married woman was to be so far enjoyed by her as a feme sole as to bring with it all the incidents of property, and that she might therefore dispose of it as a feme sole might do, it was found that to secure to her the desired protection against the marital rights, it was necessary to qualify and fetter the gift of the separate estate by prohibiting anticipation. The power to do this was established by authority not now to be questioned, but which could only have been founded upon the power of this Court to model and qualify an interest in property which it had itself created, without regard to those rules which the law has established for regulating the enjoyment of property in other cases. If any rule were, therefore, now to be adopted, by which the separate estate, should in any cases be divested of the protection of the clause against anticipation, it would, in such cases, defeat the object of the power so assumed. A feme covert, with separate estate not protected by a clause against anticipation, is in most cases in a less secure situation than if the property had been held for her simply upon trust. In the latter case, this Court, with the assistance of her trustees, can effectually protect her: in the other, her sole dependence must be upon her husband not exercising that influence or control, which, if exercised, would in all probability procure the destruction of her separate estate. In the case of a gift of separate estate, with a clause against anticipation, the author of the gift supposes that he has effectually protected the wife against such influence or control. Upon what principle can it be that this Court should subject her to it, and by so doing defeat his purpose, and completely alter the character and security of his gift? The separate estate and the prohibition of anticipation are equally creatures of equity, and equally inconsistent with the ordinary rules of property. The one is only a restriction and qualification of the other. The two must stand or fall together. Indeed, I do not find any allusion in any case to the possibility of the one surviving the other, until after the discussion, as to the continuing of the separate estate through a subsequent coverture had commenced. In the consideration of the cases upon which I am about to enter, I shall assume that there is no ground whatever for the attempt which has been made in argument to separate the two. Every authority, therefore, which bears upon the one will bear equally upon the other." Again, in the same case (p. 405), Lord Cottenham says, "When this court first established the separate estate, it violated the laws of property as between husband and wife, but it was thought beneficial, and it prevailed. It being once settled that a wife might enjoy separate estate as a feme sole, the laws of property attached to this new estate, and it was found, as part of such law, that the power of alienation belonged to the wife, and was destructive of the security intended for it. Equity again interfered, and, by another violation of the laws of property, supported the validity of the prohibition against alienation." Now, it being clear that, with respect to a life interest given to a married woman for her separate use, she may be effectually restrained from doing, during her coverture, any act of alienation, total or partial, without any clause of forfeiture, and without any limitation over taking effect on such an act, I am at a loss to discover any sufficient reason why that which holds good as to a life interest should not equally hold good as to an absolute estate. Why should there be any difference? That during the existence of a life estate in land, the reversion or remainder in fee expectant on it should be so altered or limited as to be for the whole period in contingency, is neither illegal nor unusual. Many cases suggest themselves, in which, during the continuance of a tenancy for life, the inheritance is substantially incapable of being dealt with. It may be said that there is no reversion or remainder in the present instance; still considering what these rules are which all the counsel in this cause properly join in admitting as established with regard to the rights and powers of women with respect to their property, there is not, I think, any thing more anomalous than those rules, or more at variance with general principles than those rules are. Not entirely consistent with general principles is it to hold, as I do hold, that real estate may be well devised to a married woman in fee simple for her separate use, but in such a manner as to disable her, during her coverture, from selling, mortgaging, or incumbering her interest in it by any act inter vivos; or at least, from making any sale, mortgage, or incumbrance, to take effect against it during her life, or during her coverture. That, in my opinion, is the case here. The clause enabling the plaintiff expressly to make a will (which by the way is not without operation, and may enable her to affect the legal estate, and in 1828, when her father's will was made, the mention of two witnesses was not material) does not, I think, make any difference for the present purpose. Subject or not subject to the lease in question, the property is devisable by her; and if she shall become a widow, it will then become absolutely at her disposal inter vivos, or by devise. I think that it has not hitherto been at her disposal inter vivos. Is then the title alleged against the plaintiff by Messrs. Meux and Co. claiming through her husband under the deed of the 11th of June, 1840, a title founded on a sale, mortgage, charge, or incumbrance by her? I think it was. Substantially the sole view and single object of the transaction was to create a security to Messrs. Meux and Co. for money lent or to be lent by them. The dates of the several instruments of June 1840, the pleadings and the evidence, plainly shew it. But without resting exclusively upon the pleadings and evidence, must not the lease of itself, however intended, be considered as coming within the prohibition? Besides the manifest inadequacy of the rent, there are in the lease stipulations between the husband and wife as to matters which are usually subjects of a lessee's covenant, but Evans does not enter into any covenant whatever. Must not such a lease as this, under the circumstances belonging to it, whether those circumstances are considered as including or not including the act or intention of making it a security to Meux and Co. be considered according to a just and rational interpretation of the testator's words applied to such a subject, if not a sale or charge, at least as an incumbrance. Upon reflection I do not doubt it; and I must declare the deed void in equity against the plaintiff, and direct it to be delivered up, and the term demised by it to be assigned to a trustee for the purpose of protecting the freehold and inheritance. The husband must be made liable to the plaintiff's costs to this time. As between the plaintiff and Evans there can be no costs to this time. As between Meux and Co. and the plaintiff, they must pay her the general costs of the suit to this time, except so far as those costs have been increased by the allegations and charges which she has made of ignorance on her part, and of deception and contrivance against her; so far as the costs have been increased by such means, they are to receive them from the plaintiff; that is, of course, from her next friend.

H. Clarke asked that Evans's costs should be paid by the plaintiff, and that she should have them over, but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that he was fixed with notice of her title, and that he should have been more careful in meddling with a married woman's property, and in helping her husband to take it from her.

MULLEN v. BOWMAN.

Construction of will—Right of executors to undisposed of residue previous to the 1 Wm. 4, c. 40

J. B. by will, dated in 1823, bequeathed all his personal estate (his leasehold premises excepted) to A, B, and C, upon trust, to convert the same into money, and apply the net proceeds thereof towards payment of his debts, &c. but his wearing apparel to be given as they might think fit. He also gave to A, B, and C, all his freehold, leasehold, and other estates, upon trust, during the lives of his sisters and their husbands, out of the annual rents, to pay his debts, &c. and to support his said sisters and their husbands, and B and C, in such manner and proportions as his said trustees should think fit, and after the decease of the said sisters and their husbands, and the longest liver of them, upon trust, to sell the said estates, and out of the moneys arising thereby, after payment of his just debts, &c. to divide the residue into five equal shares, two of which were to be paid to B & C; and he appointed A, B, and C executors of his will, and directed that they should reimburse themselves all costs, &c. arising in the execution of the will. A portion of the residue being undisposed of, it was held that A, B, and C did not take it beneficially.

John Bowman, of Carlisle, in the county of Cumberland, by his will, dated the 2nd of April, 1823, bequeathed all his goods, chattels, and personal estate (his leasehold houses and premises excepted), unto his cousin, John Bowman, and his sisters, Dinah Bowman and Ann Bowman, upon trust, to convert the same into money, and apply the net proceeds thereof towards payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, but his wearing apparel to be given away to whom they might think fit. And he gave, devised, and bequeathed unto John Bowman, Dinah Bowman, and Ann Bowman, all his freehold, leasehold, and other houses, buildings, and premises in the city of Carlisle aforesaid or elsewhere, to hold to them, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for all his estates, terms, and interests therein respectively, nevertheless, upon the trusts, and for the intents and purposes thereinafter expressed and declared, of and concerning the same, that is to say, in trust during the lives of his sisters, Margaret Stephens, Elizabeth Mullen, and Mary Mathison, and the life of the longest liver of them, and also during the lives of their respective husbands, by and out of the annual rents, issues, and profits thereof, to pay off and satisfy all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and maintain and support his said sisters, Margaret, Elizabeth, and Mary, and each of them, and the respective husbands of the said Margaret and Mary, and also his nephew Thomas, son of his late brother, Robert Bowman, and who was then a minor, and his said sisters, Dinah and Ann, in such manner and proportions as his said trustees should in their discretion think fit; and after the decease of the said Margaret, Elizabeth, and Mary, and the husbands of Margaret and Mary, and the longest liver of them, upon trust, to sell and dispose of all his said freehold and leasehold houses and buildings and other premises; and out of the moneys arising by such sale or sales, in the first place, after paying off his just debts, if any were then remaining unpaid, to defray all charges and expenses attending the same sale or sales, and divide the net residue or overplus of the said moneys into five equal shares, one to be paid and divided among the children of Margaret, one other among the children of Elizabeth Mullen, one other among the children of his sister Mary, and the remaining two equally between his sisters Dinah and Ann; and the testator directed that the receipts of his trustees should be sufficient discharges to purchasers; and he appointed John Bowman, Dinah Bowman, and Ann Bowman executors of his will, and declared that his said executors and trustees might retain to and reimburse themselves all their costs, charges, damages, and expenses, which should or might from time to time arise or be occasioned by the due execution of the trusts in them reposed. The testator died in the year 1823, and the will was proved by all the executors on the 6th of January, 1825. In 1843 a contingent reversionary interest to which the testator was entitled fell in, and this bill was filed by the parties beneficially entitled under the will to take the opinion of the Court whether the interest was included in the trusts of the testator's will, or passed to the executors as residue undisposed of. To this bill a demurrer was filed.

Bacon and Lees, for the demurrer, cited King v. Denison (1 Ves. & Bea. 260); Pratt v. Sladden (14 Ves. 193); Dawson v. Clark (15 Ves. 409, 18 Ves. 247); Robinson v. Taylor (2 Bro. C.C. 589), and Southouse v. Bate (2 Ves. & Bea. 396.)

Bacon, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case, which it is agreed on both sides must be considered independently of Sir E. Sugden's Act, the only question which has been argued, and the only question for me to decide is, whether upon the will of the testator an intention appears that John Bowman, Dinah Bowman, and Ann Bowman should not take the clear residue of his estate beneficially. [His Honour then stated the will.] I have asked whether there is any case, in which, where, without any words of charge, the gross residue of the personal estate is given to persons upon trust to pay debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the same persons are appointed executors, it has been held that these persons take beneficially. I do not know of any such case, nor does such a case appear to be remembered by the Bar. Considering that circumstance, and the language of Lord Eldon in Dawson v. Clarke, and King v. Denison, and considering the whole language of this will, I think there is an intention manifested in this will, that John Bowman, Dinah Bowman, and Ann Bowman should not take the residue beneficially. The demurrer must therefore be overruled.

ST. KATHERINE DOCKS COMPANY v. MANTZGUE.

Practice—Common injunction—Exceptions to answer for impertinence.

Where the common injunction for want of an answer had been obtained, and upon the filing of the answer, exceptions had been taken for impertinence, and an order nisi for dissolving the injunction had been obtained, the exceptions were not considered sufficient cause for not dissolving the injunction.

In this case, the common injunction for want of an answer having been obtained, the defendant, on the 25th of February last, put in his answer. To this answer the plaintiffs, on the 6th of March, filed exceptions for impertinence, alleging 340 causes of exceptions, twenty-seven of which had been got through before the Master. An order nisi for dissolving the injunction having been obtained.

Russell and Hargrave now shewed, as cause against dissolving the injunction, that the exceptions had not been disposed of.

Wigram and Hardy, for the defendant.

The cases of Fisher v. Bayley (12 Ves. 18), and Dyer v. Dyer (1 Mer. 414), and the 4th and 5th Orders of April 1828, were cited.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought the objection was applicable equally, if at all, to the order nisi as to the making that order absolute, and therefore disallowed the cause shewn. His Honour considered that it was a distinct question whether the case should stand over with liberty for the plaintiffs to give notice to discharge the order nisi; and that if the plaintiffs should hereafter think fit to give such notice, they would be at liberty to do so. He, however, upon the present state of the case, disallowed the cause and dissolved the injunction.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

REG. v. THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Rating of railways—The decision in Reg. v. The South-Western Railway confirmed.

A railway company, who were themselves carriers, and received toll from other carriers who used their line, were rated to the poor at the sum which a tenant would pay as rent, calculated upon the profits of the railway, inclusive of the tolls paid by the other carriers, after making the usual deductions for expenses, &c. and for a reserved fund, but without making any allowance for the possible good will. Held, that the assessment was rightly made.

This was an an appeal against a poor-rate by the Grand Junction Railway Company, which had been confirmed by the sessions, subject to the opinion of this Court.

The case found that the Grand Junction Railway Company carried on the business of carriers on their own line: that the public had also the right of carrying on the business of carriers on that line, and that several other companies actually did do so, some using their own stations, engines, and carriages; and others using the stations and engines of the company, but their own carriages, subject only to certain tolls payable to the Grand Junction Railway Company. That the company had the right of imposing certain tolls on all carriers using their railway, not exceeding a given maximum, and that they were obliged to put up a table of tolls, and to keep a book, to which the overseers had a right of access, containing an account of the tolls paid by other carriers, and also an account of those which would be payable by themselves, if they were not the owners of the railway. The respondent had assessed the appellants to the poor-rate, upon the amount which a tenant might be supposed to pay for the rent of the railway, so increased by the use which was made of it by other companies as carriers, calculated upon the gross receipts of the company, after making the necessary deductions for the expenses of the railway, &c. and for a reserved fund, but without making any allowance for any possible good will.

The question was, whether this assessment was upon the right principle, and this involved the consideration of the correctness of the decision of this Court in R. v. The South-Western Railway Company.

The case was twice argued—first, in Michaelmas Term last, by Kelly, Q.C. and Smirke, for the respondents, and by Follett, S.G. for the appellants, the Railway Company; and afterwards in Hilary Term last, on a concilium, by Hill, Q.C. for the Company, and Kelly, Q.C. in support of the order.

The arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment, which we give verbatim.

Authorities cited: R. v. The South-Western Railway Company, and cases there cited; Smith's Wealth of Nations.

DENMAN, C.J. in delivering the judgment of the Court, said,—This was an appeal against a poor-rate, argued in Michaelmas Term last, and again, on a concilium, in Hilary Term, and heard by all the members of the Court. Independently of certain questions of detail which we shall consider hereafter, the main argument of the appellants was directed to shew that this case was distinguishable from that of Reg. v. South-Western Railway (1 Q. B. Rep.) on many points which went to the principle of the judgment in that case; but the respondent contended that the two cases were in principle the same, and that that judgment must govern the Court in this. It will be necessary, in the first place, to compare the two cases; if they should be found to be different in the material circumstances, the principle of that decision may lead to a contrary one in this; at all events, that decision will not bind us in the present case. If they should be found to be substantially the same in the present case, it may be necessary to consider whether or not any thing urged in this argument should induce the Court to depart from their former decision. In that case the facts found—and it must never be forgotten that the propriety of the poor-rate can only be determined by reference to the facts found to be in actual existence—that the Company was in the sole and exclusive occupation of the "railway, and the warehouses, stations, and lodging-places," and that being so, they were solely and exclusively carrying on the whole business as carriers thereon; and although the Act had, under certain limitations, made the railway a highway, and given to all the liege subjects on it a right to use it as such, either as carriers or for individuals to travel upon, it has in this case provided for the payment of tolls to the company, yet that, in fact, no one having availed himself of this right, nor, as we thought, having the power of doing so conveniently or effectually, no tolls were, in fact, earned. To this then existing state of facts, without applying the established principle of law, that the rate is to be on the occupier in respect to the beneficial nature of the occupation, in estimating its amount, or, in other words, ascertaining how much net rent such an occupation may be expected to command, the parish have to consider, not drily and only what may merely pass by the devise of it, but with all the existing circumstances, whether permanent or temporary, wherever situated and howsoever arising or secured, which would tend to a reasonable inference that the parties are negotiating for a tenancy as to the amount of rent. We thought it impossible in this case to separate the three or four miles of railway in the respective parishes from the whole line running into any other; or the whole line from the warehouses, stations, and landing-places; or these, again, from the peculiar facilities and conveniences which a tenant would have for carrying on, as occupier, a lucrative business, if not an effective monopoly, which the provisions of the Act appeared to give to the occupier for carrying on such trade. What under the Act was possible by law, yet, in point of fact, might be material to the principle, though very fit to be taken into account in making calculations as to the custom—yet in principle the parish officers are to look to the actual state and value of the land in occupation; and in the case now under consideration, there are some facts entirely different from those just mentioned. The case finds that other parties, as well as the appellants, exercised the right of being carriers over the various parts of the railway, including that part of it within the respondent's parishes, carrying for themselves independently of the company, subject, however, to its control under the Act of Parliament, as carriers of goods, fuel, and other things necessary for the conveyance of the goods, and the separate stations and means of communication with the railways; thus making profits by their carrying on the trade; and as to the appellants, they pay them the tolls that are fixed under the powers given by the Act. Besides this, another class of carriers hire from the appellants engines, and find their own carriages; and these also make profits of their carrying trade on the railway, and pay to the appellants both tolls and a compensation for the use of the engines, stations, and other accommodations provided for them. As the appellants receive tolls from these two classes of carriers, in respect of the goods and passengers conveyed by them on the railway, so that all that is directed by the Act is done, the tolls which would have been produced by their own conveyances of goods and passengers—these, with the compensation above mentioned, formed the total produce of the whole line of the company, which the company, if not as carriers, as lessees of the railway, and carrying on no traffic on it, would receive on the aggregate of this line after all deductions are made, the company contending that the rate ought to be imposed. We understand, though it is not precisely so stated, that to admit the principle of rating the whole line, would be to arrive at the exact sum at which they contend the rating in the respondent's parish should be fixed, by a mileage division of the whole land,—a principle convenient in itself, and rightly adopted by consent. It is unnecessary after this statement to point out the difference in the facts between the two cases; we cannot conceive how the difference bears on the principle on which this rate should be imposed, or which governed the Court in the former decision, which proceeded entirely on the existing state of facts. Each of the two companies must be rated in respect of the occupation of the land; one of them derives no profit from that occupation, except by carrying on upon the land the business of conveying goods and passengers. The division of profit into tolls and fares we think merely nominal. The other, in addition to this before-mentioned profitable occupation, which it altogether occupied, also derives profit by allowing others to carry goods and passengers on the railway; still, in both the inquiry must be the same—what is the value of the occupation, from whatever source derived, whatever the profits of trade? In neither case can the profits of trade be brought into the rate. But if the ability to carry on a trade on land adds to the value of the land, that value cannot be excluded on the ground that it is referable to trade. Suppose a house occupied by a private individual to-day, but having great advantages by situation for the purposes of trade, is turned into a shop to-morrow, and consequently lets for double or treble the former rent, would not the rating be properly increased in proportion? Yet could it be objected that to do so would be to rate the profits of trade? Or, supposing an occupier to let out different rooms to other persons carrying on the same trade as himself—and this mode of occupying would be still to increase the value of the house to let—would this at all vary the principle on which it was rated, though it might increase the profit? Or, lastly, supposing, instead of this species of underletting being at the option of the occupier, and all persons using the same trade to be rated by some statute, under certain restrictions, to carry it on in different rooms of the house, paying a large compensation to the occupier, would not the principle of the rate be still the same? would it not be material to inquire how the occupation became more valuable, except the making greater or less deductions which the nature of the occupation might make necessary? We remember when the large premises in Soho-square, now used as a bazaar, were occupied as a private residence. The present mode of occupation, no doubt, increases the rent; but whether one man, being the tenant alone, carried on the various trades now exercised there, or sold goods himself at part of the standage and let out the other, and so derives his profit in part directly from the trade, and partly from the rent paid by the traders, or let out all the standage, and so derives no profit but from the rents paid by the traders, the result would in either case be exactly the same: the overseers could only inquire what was the fair profitable value of the premises so occupied; nor, as we have found, could they inquire if the occupier of the bazaar held it under some statutable license, which compelled him to let out stands to all persons paying a certain rent, and submitting to certain regulations. It is said that the cases supposed are all referable to occupation under a special lease, that conveys exclusive dominion; and this forms entirely the means of making the profits. We have, in truth, given an answer to this; but it would be plainer to observe there is a fallacy in contending that if the lease conveys a legal title to do that which it gives the lessee the means of doing or enjoying, no two things can be more distinguishable, and it is the latter which regulates the rent the tenant shall give, and not the former. Suppose, again, two estates of equal size and equal fertility, the one surrounded by excellent roads, with a canal near to it, and a large market, and the other without these advantages; of course, the rent, if the rateable value is taken, would be larger in the one than the other; yet the tenant would take no more by a lease of the one than the other. A lease would give him no legal title which he had not before to use the roads, the canal, or the market. Or suppose a more parallel case. A, the owner and occupier of Blackacre, and having the command of a stream of water, which he can turn over Whiteacre; to him it would be more valuable than to other occupiers, because he can fertilise it at less expense than others, and he can give a larger rent than any other person, though if he has a lease he would not give more than any other person, though he ought to pay a higher rent. Now, apply the principle of these cases to the railway of the appellants. It is true, if they mean to let it to tenants, the lease would convey the land of the railway only, and give a title to the soil only. The lessee would undoubtedly consider the facilities and advantages which the occupation as tenant would afford him for carrying on the lucrative trade of carrier; and in whatever proportion these considerations would increase, his rent, in the same proportion, in the same amount, after due allowance, would be increased also. The two propositions are equally true; that the rule is not to be imposed in respect of the profits of trade, and that it is to be imposed in respect of the value of the occupation; and two propositions that are true and applicable to the same subject-matter cannot be inconsistent. And we think the respondents in the present case have shewn they are not so, as the gross yearly receipts of the company, as occupiers of and carriers on the railway, must include the subject-matter of the rate; they have therefore taken a sum agreed to represent them as the first point to start upon. They then assume an amount of capital employed in the trade, and deduct from the former sum two per centages on the latter from the interests on the capital and the profits that ought to be made on it; thirdly, the depreciation of stock beyond any usual repairs; fourthly, they deduct from the gross receipts the annual cost of the line, fifthly, the annual value of any land occupied by stations, or elsewhere; sixthly, a sum per mile for the repairs of chairs, rails, sleepers, &c. These deductions, taken together, seem to us to include whatever is properly referable to the trade, and distinguishable from the increased value the trade gives to the land. We do not now speak of the amount allowed under each item, and we are not competent to give any opinion on this point because it is more proper for the sessions. Now, if these are the proper heads of deduction, then the residue must be representative of the value of the occupation; and if these alone are to be brought into the rate, the profits of the trade are to be distinguished. Accordingly, the sessions have found, as an inference from the fact that the residue of the sum which a tenant from year to year might reasonably be expected to give for the railway and corporeal hereditaments, now occupied by the company in connection with the railway, exclusive of the occupation of the stations and other buildings rated, such tenant being assumed to have the same, and no other power of using the railway with the same, and no other advantages and privileges than the company now possess is the fair rateable value. If these deductions exhaust that portion of receipts referable to the rate, the inference of the sessions is fair; if the advantages and privileges which the company possess are profitable to the occupation, it would be raising an assumption as well founded, and we agree with them in toto. But the appellants, however, contend that even if the principle of the rate be fair, certain reasonable deductions are to be made. We consider the sufficiency of the deductions made as one mode of trying the principle, but the objection of the appellants now to be considered is one of detail; the only instance they specify is, that an allowance ought to be and has been made, for good will. We presume by this it is meant that a person bargaining with the company to become a yearly tenant of the railroad, in the expectation of succeeding to the trade as the probable consequence of succeeding to the occupation, would properly be called on to pay them something for the good will of their trade, and this in the nature of an outgoing and deduction from the profits. This objection is capable of two answers—the first and decisive one is, that the purchase of the good will implies that the trade is sold, that the company are to be bound to surrender their trade and the lease, and no longer to be carriers on the line; but the calculation of the sessions proceeds on no such supposition—all those supposed advantages for carrying on trade which the occupation gives, or whatever they may make, they must necessarily surrender; but the moment they leased the railway, they would become part of the public, and have the right to carry on their trade, retaining the whole of the good will, and all those advantages which the statute has carefully preserved for that purpose. Secondly, although that supposition as to the tenancy is to be made, yet what is incident to the tenancy—the actual terms and allowance—must be determined, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the rate by the actual state of things. On this supposition, the tenancy is the only mode of ascertaining the existing value of the occupation to the existing occupier. Now, here there is no tenancy, no good will is in fact made, and we think that no deduction ought in fact to be made in respect of its price. Again, it is contended that the existing facts in this case shew the reasonableness of the rate: the carrying trade of the company goes beyond their own line on the railway of other sets of proprietors, but the receipts arising from this having been excluded from the rate, this it is said is inconsistent; how can profits which the same engine earns by drawing goods over one mile be of a different character to those it earns in the same employ over the next mile? So far from there being any inconsistency in this, it is necessarily involved in the principle on which the trade receipts on the railway can be made; that a distinction can be made, and has been made, is no slight proof of the soundness of that principle. The moment an engine has left the railway of the company on which it runs, it ceases to have any connection with the occupation of the railway, though, of course, it does increase the value of the occupation of another line, and the advantages it would derive in the shape of toll would proportionably increase the rent the occupier would pay; but if that were allowed to swell one charge on the company, it would only do so in respect of the profits of trade. But it is said, lastly, that this principle works injustice between the company, and those other corporations or individuals who carry, on this line, their engines and their trade, and yet have paid nothing to the poor-rate directly, and indirectly only in respect of their toll, that would be supposed to be calculated in the fares only, whereas the company pay both on the tolls and fares. Colour is given to this objection from the fact that it seems to explain that the company fill two characters, and the other parties one only; but the proper answer is, a denial of the fact. The company do not pay directly or indirectly on their fares, they pay only on the increased value of the occupation of the land, occasioned by whatever circumstance. If a trader should underlet to a lodger a room in a house in which he derives a most profitable trade, such lodger would pay no poor-rate at all, but the trader would proportion the rate at which he would let the lodgings to the advantage such lodger derived from them; and hence the total rent which the trader would pay, and the rate which could be imposed on him, would be proportionally increased; but could he complain of any injustice, or say that he carried on his own trade in the residue of the house, when the fact is, that the value of the trade carried on in the residue of the occupation was also taken into account in fixing the quantum of the rate? Yet those parties who carry on their trade on the company's line, are, in effect, in the nature of lodgers, or parties enjoying part of an easement of the line, and from these considerations they increase its general value. In the examination which this case has compelled us to make, we have been necessarily led into a minute consideration of the principle on which the decision of the South-Western Railway proceeded; that decision was not directly in review before us, but the distinction of fact relied on appeared to us, on examination, to be so unsubstantial, that it was necessary, in order to get a decision against the rate, to examine the principle on which it applied. In a matter of such vast importance, and where it appears that the decision of this Court cannot be reviewed in a court of error, we are not unwilling to an examination of the question. On the whole, we are satisfied with the decision of the sessions, which appears to us founded on a just application of established principles, in accordance with several decided cases, and conflicting with none; our judgment must, therefore, be for the respondents.

If a partner in a firm be slandered in the way of his trade, the action must be brought by the firm, for they are the parties injured, and he cannot sue alone, as the law does not sanction multiplicity of actions.

By the COURT.—The defendant is entitled to judgment; the special damage is the ground of the action, and that has been done, not to the plaintiff only, but to him and his partners. There must not be multiplicity of actions; and if the law did not compel the partners to join, each of them would have a right to maintain a separate action. The words are only actionable because they have been spoken of the plaintiff in the way of his trade, and an injury to the trade is obviously an injury to all the partners.

Judgment for defendant.

FRANCIS v. STEWARD.

A party was cited into the Ecclesiastical Court for obstructing or refusing to join in the making of a church-rate. The citation charged him with having and contumaciously obstructed, or at least refused to join or concur in the making of a sufficient rate or assessment for providing funds to defray the expense of the repairs of the parish church. Held, on the demurrer, to a declaration in prohibition, that the citation was bad, as obstructing or refusing to join in the making of a rate did not necessarily imply an ecclesiastical offence, and the deficiency could not be supplied by the mere introduction of the words "wilfully and contumaciously" into the citation.

The COURT gave judgment in this case, to the effect that the demurrer could not be supported, and that the declaration in prohibition was good. The citation must contain the charge of an ecclesiastical offence, which this citation did not, because it did not charge any of those offences known by a technical name, as heresy or incontinence; neither did it set out any of these special facts, from which the Court could gather that in this matter an offence against ecclesiastical discipline had been committed. It was urged that the omission was cured by the use of the words wilfully and contumaciously, and that the special facts might be introduced for the first time in the articles; for that in all courts a minimum of allegation is sufficient in the process to bring the party before the Court. We find great difficulty in conceiving how the refusal to join is of itself an offence in a parishioner; if he is guilty of fraud, or violence, or bribes, or persuasions founded on false pretensions, for the purpose of preventing a rate from being made that would be an offence; but then the special facts must be set out. It is clear that parishioners may argue against a rate—may reduce its amount—and that they are not bound to vote in the affirmative of the rate proposed; yet all this would amount to obstruction; then every act of a parishioner is a wilful act; and as to the term contumacious, the Court cannot intend a crime because the complainant chooses to employ a reproachful epithet. This case is not to be distinguished in principle from Cooper v. Wickham, and Greenwood v. Greaves (3 Hag. 77); and we think the plaintiff was quite right in applying for a prohibition in the first instance.

REG. v. MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF STAMFORD.

Quære, whether the minutes in a corporation book of a resolution to pay an increased salary to an officer of the borough for one office held by him, as a compensation for his loss of another office, and of his assent to such resolution, are receivable in evidence to establish the agreement between the corporation and the officer, the same not being under seal.

Upon trial of an issue raised upon mandamus, as to whether the defendant had agreed to accept such compensation, the defendants tendered the above-mentioned minutes in evidence. The prosecutor, without attempting to dispute these facts, relied on the contract being bad in law. A rule to quash the mandamus, on the ground that it had improvidently issued, and would never have been granted if these facts had been known to the Court, was discharged by the Court.

In this case a mandamus had been granted, directed to the mayor and corporation of Stamford, commanding them to assess compensation to a gentleman named Torkington, for the loss of the office of clerk to the magistrates of the borough, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76. There was a return to the mandamus to the effect that compensation had been awarded to Mr. Torkington, for that his salary as town clerk had been raised to 100*l.* a year, and that he had agreed to accept that salary of the office which he did retain, so raised, as a compensation for the loss of the salary of the office from which he had been removed. On this return an issue was raised, which was tried at the last summer assizes for the county of Lincoln, and a verdict found for the Crown, subject to the opinion of this Court, upon the question whether the minutes of the town-council, which contained an entry of the agreement above mentioned, and of Mr. Torkington's assent to it, could, so far as related to the grant of the increased salary to Mr. Torkington, be received in evidence, as they were not under the common seal of the corporation; with liberty to the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them, in order to take the opinion of the Court upon this point.

In the Michaelmas Term following, Humfrey moved accordingly for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendants, on the ground of the improper reception of evidence, and obtained a rule nisi. Two days afterwards Hill, Q.C. obtained a rule nisi for quashing the mandamus, on the ground that the facts on which it had been granted, had been negatived by the finding of the jury, and that if the Court had been aware of the real state of the facts so found, it never would have granted the mandamus at all. This rule not to come on until the other was disposed of.

Case cited; R. v. Paddington Vestry (9 B. & C. 166).

By the COURT.—It appears to us that the mandamus is wrong in point of form, being directed to the mayor and corporation, instead of the town council, which latter body alone has the power of awarding compensation, and disposing of the funds of the borough. We will think of this, however, when the question of the peremptory mandamus shall be determined. With regard to the first rule, we will take time to consider. As to the second, it is an application to quash the writ of mandamus as having improvidently issued. Now, it appears that at the trial witnesses were not called on the part of the Crown to contradict the fact alleged by the defendants, namely, the agreement by Mr. Torkington to accept the compensation, because the counsel for the Crown were of opinion that they had that answer in law, which has been the subject of the other rule. We do not think that we have the right to infer from these facts that the finding of the jury was conclusive as to the real facts. This rule, therefore, must be discharged.

DAVIES v. LOCK and OTHERS.

Semble—An action against attorneys for negligence in discharge of their duties, in pursuance of their retainer, though purporting to be in case, is in reality ex contractu, and a verdict must be found against all the defendants, or none.

Where there was reason to suppose that the entry of the verdict was inconsistent with the facts proved and the real finding of the jury, the Court suspended the argument, to give an opportunity of referring to the judge who tried the cause, to amend the verdict according to his notes.

This was an action against the defendants for negligence as attorneys. The declaration, which purported to be in case, stated that the defendants had been retained by the plaintiff as attorneys; and then went on to complain of negligence in the discharge of their duties under the retainer.

The defendant Lock and the other defendants pleaded separately; but they pleaded inter alia the same plea, viz. that the defendants were not retained by the plaintiff modo et formâ. At the trial, the jury, in delivering their verdict, stated, that they found for the defendants; and, upon being further pressed, they stated, that they found it was a private transaction between the plaintiff and Lock, with which his partners, the other defendants, had had nothing to do; the verdict was eventually entered against Lock, and in favour of the other defendants.

This was a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant Lock, on the ground that the action, though in form in case, was substantially and really an action on contract, and therefore that a verdict could not be found in favour of one defendant and against another: or why the judgment should not be arrested, on the ground that the verdict, as it appeared upon the face of the record, was inconsistent and repugnant.

Kelly, Q.C. Watson, Q.C. and Humfrey, shewed cause. They admitted that the action was substantially ex contractu, and that they could not therefore sustain the verdict against Lock, but they contended that there ought to be either a new trial against all the defendants, or else a venire de novo.

Authorities cited: Com. Dig. title Pleader, s. 19, 5 Burr. 2261, 1 Wils. 35.

Roebuck, Q.C. contrà (Hugh Hill was with him), contended that he was entitled to have the verdict entered for the defendants generally; indeed, he was only asking the Court to give effect to the real finding of the jury, for their verdict was substantially a verdict for all the defendants, although it had been entered by the associate in favour of some of the defendants, and against the other.

The COURT suspended the argument, to give an opportunity for applying to the learned judge who tried the cause to amend the verdict according to his notes. Argument suspended.

(Argued April 20th.)

A wife cannot be removed away from her husband to the place of her maiden settlement without her express consent.

This was an appeal against an order for the removal of Lydia, the wife of John Morgan, and their infant children, to the place of her maiden settlement.

The order was made on the examination, inter alia, of the husband and the wife. The husband's examination, after stating that he did not know where he was born, proceeded to negative his having gained any settlement, and concluded by praying that his wife and children might be removed to the place of his wife's maiden settlement. The wife's examination, after referring to the examination of the husband, proceeded to set out her maiden settlement. It did not contain any express evidence of consent on the part of the wife to be removed without her husband to place of her maiden settlement. The sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court.

The question was, whether the wife, under these circumstances, could be removed away from her husband to the place of her maiden settlement.

By the COURT.—It is not necessary to determine whether R. v. Eltham is rightly decided, for in this case there is no evidence that the wife consented to be removed away from her husband, and the order of removal, therefore, clearly cannot be sustained.

Where goods sold at three months' credit were sent to defendant by a carrier named by him, an invoice being at the same time sent by the post, and the defendant, on their arrival at the wharf to which they were sent, said he would not take them, but did not repudiate the contract to the vendors until seven months afterwards—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of an acceptance within the Statute of Frauds.

In this case the plaintiffs were nonsuited, and this was a rule to enter a verdict for them. The action was for goods sold and delivered, and the question was, whether there had been a sufficient acceptance to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. The goods had been sent from Bristol to Hereford, the residence of the defendant, by the Hereford sloop, which was the ordinary mode of conveyance. The goods were so sent by the direction of the defendant. An invoice of the goods was at the same time sent to the defendant by post. The goods were sold at three months' credit. On their arrival at Hereford the defendant told some third person there, not connected with the plaintiffs, that he would not accept them, but he never returned or repudiated the invoice, or gave any other intimation to the plaintiffs of his intention not to accept the goods, until payment was demanded of him seven months afterwards.

By the COURT.—We think there ought to be a new trial. No doubt mere delivery of the goods to a carrier named by the vendee does not in itself constitute an acceptance under the Statute of Frauds; but here there were circumstances from which the jury might have inferred such acceptance, and the case ought to have been submitted to them.

Crowder then submitted that the rule was not drawn up for a new trial.

DENMAN, C. J.—No; but it is to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs, and we modify the rule, unless you would prefer that the rule should be absolute to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs.

WALKER v. WALKER.

(Argued April 17th.)

Award—sufficiency of—Costs.

This was a rule to set aside an award. Two causes, and all matters in difference, had been referred to an arbitrator, who had awarded in favour of the plaintiff—had directed certain lands to be released, and had further directed costs to be paid by the defendant. It was sought to set aside the award on the ground that the arbitrator had not directed a conveyance of the land, and that he had not shown by his award in what character he was to pay the costs, what costs he was to pay as administrator, and what as executor.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Wednesday, May 8.

COPLEY v. MADEIROS.

Where a defendant has been arrested under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and there are material variations between the copy of the capias and the writ itself, the Court will set the copy of the writ aside, and order the bail-bond which has been given to the sheriff to be cancelled.

This was a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the copy of the writ of capias issued in this case should not be set aside, the bail-bond given to the sheriff cancelled, and so much of the order of Mr. Justice Maule as orders the payment of costs by the defendant be rescinded; and why the plaintiff should not pay the costs of this application. An order was made by a judge for the arrest of the defendant, and it was admitted that the writ of capias which was issued on that order was a proper one; but the objection was, that the copy which had been served on the defendant did not correspond with the writ. The variations between the writ of capias and what purported to be the copy were the following:—In the writ, the action was described "in an action on promises;" in the copy, these words were altogether omitted. In the writ the words were, or until the said Madeiros "shall by other lawful means be discharged," and in the copy the words were "shall by any other lawful," and in the writ the words were, "and that in default of so doing, such proceedings," &c.; in the copy the words were "and that in default of his so doing," &c.; and, lastly, in the writ the words were, "and we do further command you that;" in the copy the words were, "and we do further command you, the said sheriff, that," &c. A summons was taken out by the defendant before Mr. Justice Maule for setting aside the copy of the capias, but the same was dismissed with costs.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause.—The 4th section of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, requires that so many copies of the capias as there are persons to be arrested shall be delivered with the writ to the sheriff, who is to cause one such copy to be delivered to every person on whom he shall execute such process; but, in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, there is no such requisition, but an authority is given to sue out a writ of capias in form mentioned in the schedule to that Act. The only place where direction is now given to deliver a copy is in the writ itself, which commands the sheriff to deliver a copy to the defendant, but there is nothing imposing such duty on the plaintiff. The cases, therefore, prior to the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, do not now apply.

CRESSWELL, J.—Is it not necessary that the capias should be so served as that the defendant may be informed what he is to do? Must not you give him such a copy of the capias as will identify the proceedings in the action by the capias with the writ of summons. [TINDAL, C. J.—Whose duty is it to make out the copy of the capias?] We say that it is not with the plaintiff, but that if it is with any one, it is with the sheriff. [TINDAL, C. J.—Is not the sheriff the servant of the plaintiff for this purpose?] It must be admitted that if it were prior to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the authorities are sufficient to entitle the defendant to the present rule. But then the Act of 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, expressly required the plaintiff to make out a copy, and the sheriff to serve such copy, and that must mean a true copy. Plock v. Pacheo (1 Dowl. N. S. 380), Richards v. Disprail (1 Dowl. N. S. 384), and Bilton v. Clapperton (1 Dowl. N.S. 386), shew that the latter Act has not the strictness in this respect as the former Act, and that the Court has the power to make such order as it shall seem meet.

Sir T. Wilde, in support of the rule.—No part of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 39 has been repealed, and the duty required by that Act of making out and serving the copy of the capias has not been altered by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. He was then stopped by the Court.

The COURT.—That seems an answer to the case on the part of the plaintiff. Under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the sheriff is to deliver a copy of the capias, and if the plaintiff, instead of making the copy himself, allows the bailiff to make it, he must be answerable for the acts of his agent.

Rule absolute, but without costs.

STROUD v. STROUD.

New trial—Verdict against evidence—Plea of plene administravit.

Sir T. Wilde, shewed cause against a rule for setting aside the verdict found for the plaintiff, on the ground of the same being against evidence.

The trial was had before Mr. Bullock, the judge of the Sheriff's Court, London, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 11*l*. The action was for wages, as a servant, against the executor of an aunt to the plaintiff. The pleas were non-assumpsit, payment, and plene administravit. The question in dispute was, whether the plaintiff had been in the service of her aunt under a contract to receive wages for her services, or only in expectation of receiving a legacy. The testatrix left her niece, the plaintiff, a legacy exceeding the claim in respect of wages, the legacy being 20*l*. This legacy had been paid to the plaintiff, and the same having been paid without knowledge on the part of the executor of any claim for wages, it was contended for, on the part of the defendant, that either this must be taken as amounting to a payment in satisfaction of the wages; or that, as there was no notice of the debt at the time the legacy was received, the receipt of the legacy must be taken as an admission, on the part of the plaintiff, that the sum was paid in a due course of administration.

Channell, Serjt. appeared in support of the rule.

The COURT thought that the finding of the jury on the question of the service being under a contract to be paid in wages, ought not to be disturbed; but that upon the issue joined on the plea of plene administravit, it would be more satisfactory if there was granted a new trial, and therefore, upon that issue only,

The rule was made absolute on payment of costs.

RAM v. DUNCOMBE.

An irregular notice of declaration was delivered on the 20th April: interlocutory judgment signed on the 6th May—An application to set aside the judgment made on the 8th May too late.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for a rule to set aside, with costs, an interlocutory judgment which had been signed by the plaintiff in this cause, on the ground that the notice of declaration which had been delivered to the defendant, did not mention the number of days in which he was to plead; the form of the notice in this part being, "unless you plead in days," &c. This notice was served on defendant on the 20th April last. [TINDAL, C. J. You might have come here before.] The judgment was only on the 6th of May instant, and it was not known until then that the plaintiff would have proceeded in the action.

The COURT.—That will not do; the application is made too late. Rule refused.

WATSON and ANOTHER v. COLEMAN and ANOTHER.

Where a plaintiff refuses on a summons to stay proceedings on payment of a sum of money, which he afterwards accepts, he may shew, in answer to the defendant's claim for subsequent costs, that his continuing the suit was not vexatious—A material witness being hostile to the plaintiff, is a good cause for afterwards discontinuing the action.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the Master should not tax the defendant's costs, subsequent to the 22nd January last; and why the plaintiff should not pay the same to the defendant when taxed, and also pay the costs of this application.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered, brought to recover the sum of 19*l*. 18*s*., the balance claimed by the plaintiffs to be due. On the 22nd January last, the defendants took out a summons to shew cause why upon payment of the sum of 4*l*. 18*s*., all further proceedings should not be stayed. The plaintiffs refused to take this, and the defendants then paid the amount into Court, and pleaded to the action. After issue was joined, the plaintiffs took out of Court the sum so paid in by the defendants, and entered a nolle prosequi as to the residue. In taxing the costs the Master refused to allow the plaintiff's costs, subsequent to the 22nd January, and refused to allow the defendants their costs generally of the defence, but allowed them the costs of those pleadings on which the plaintiffs had entered a nolle prosequi. The taking afterwards the money previously offered by the defendants, is only primâ facie evidence that the action was continued vexatiously. (Edwards v. Harrison, 11 Price, 533; Hale v. Baker, 2 Dowl. 125; Gower v. Elkins, 6 Dowl. N. S. 335.) The reason for not proceeding in the action is, that Charles Garlick, a servant in the plaintiffs' employ, who was necessary to prove the delivery of the goods, had been discharged from his employ, and had brought an action against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, when they refused the amount offered by defendants, believed that more was due to them. The defendants had, upon application to them, refused to state the nature of their defence, and therefore the plaintiff had no alternative but to proceed in the action; but afterwards finding that they must rely upon the testimony of a hostile witness, they had discontinued their proceedings.

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—The defendants disputed that they were liable beyond the amount they paid into court, on the ground that the goods were sold on a credit which at the time of the action had not expired. The plaintiffs having acknowledged the truth of this by accepting the amount, the defendants are entitled to their costs subsequent to the making of the offer. The plaintiffs might have called Garlick; and the reason giving for not wishing to rely on his testimony is not sufficient to deprive the defendants of these costs.

The COURT.—The question is, whether the defendants are entitled to costs after a sum has been tendered to the plaintiffs, which the plaintiffs have subsequently accepted and entered a nolle prosequi. The general rule is, that if after a plaintiff has had a sum of money tendered to him, which he refuses to accept, and goes on in the action, and does not afterwards recover more than the sum so tendered, he is liable to pay the costs subsequent to such refusal; but it is always open to him to shew that the continuance of the suit by him was not for the sake of oppression or vexation, and that will excuse him from his liability for such costs. We think that the plaintiffs have now shewn that the action was not continued vexatiously. Garlick, on whose evidence they materially relied, having become a hostile witness, was not a person whom they could call. This was, we think, a sufficient cause for the plaintiffs not proceeding, and therefore the case does not fall within the general rule.

Rule discharged with costs.

DOE dem. KING v. ROE.

Practice—In a country cause if the notice is to appear in one Term, judgment against the casual ejector may be moved for in the next Term, to shew cause on a day certain, which, if cause not then shewn, becomes absolute by itself.

Shee, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector. The notice which had been served on the 8th January last, was for the tenant to appear in last Hilary Term. The cause being a country cause, on the authority of Doe dem. Crawne v. Roe (6 Dowl. 270), as to the practice in such case in the Court of Exchequer, it was asked that the rule might be absolute in the first instance.

The COURT said, that though it might be desirable that the practice in all the Courts should be uniform, they must consult the other judges before the practice in this Court could be altered; but (after consulting one of the Masters), said that according to the practice of this Court, the rule might be drawn up to shew cause on a day certain, and then, if cause was not shewn, the rule would make itself absolute, without the necessity of a farther application to the Court.

Rule accordingly.

Order to pay the taxed costs of an attorney, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 43.

Channell, Serjt. applied for an order on a client of Messrs. Griffith, who are attorneys, to pay to them the sum of 251*l.* 3s. 6d., the amount of the Master's allocatur on the taxation of their bill of costs, which had been taxed under an order made in the suit of Matthews v. Groves. The application was made to have an order that might have the effect of a judgment, instead of proceeding by attachment, and the same was made under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 43.

TINDAL, C. J., that Act seems to confine itself to where the attorney has brought his action for the amount of his costs, and then directs in such case a judgment to be entered up for such amount.

Patent—Particulars of objections.

Channell, Serjt. applied for a rule for a better particulars of objections to a patent. The objections delivered, which were complained of, were the second and fourth. The second objection was, that before and at the time of granting the letters-patent, the invention was known to Mordeica Robertshaw and others, and that from them, or some or one of them, the patentee derived his knowledge. The fourth objection was, that the invention was not new, as to public use, but had been used by the said Mordeica Robertshaw and Wm. Carr Thornton, the patentee, and others. The word "others" in these objections ought to be struck out, or else the names of the parties should be given. This comes within the case of Jones v. Berger (Webster, P. C. 544). Rule nisi.(a)

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, May 1.

Ex parte TURQUAND, re DICKENSON.

Official Assignee—Indemnity—Costs of action in name of Assignees.

The petition of an official assignee, to be indemnified by the creditors' assignee against the costs of an action prosecuted in their names, dismissed with costs, under the particular circumstances of the case.

The petitioner in this case was the official assignee of the bankrupt's estate, and the object of his application to the Court was to obtain an indemnity from the creditors' assignee, against the costs of an action, brought in the name of the assignees, against a person of the name of Booth, with regard to an alleged fraudulent removal of the bankrupt's property. The action was commenced on the 19th of October, 1842. On the 20th of November, in the same year, Mr. Turquand, the petitioner, wrote to Booth a letter to inform him that he repudiated the action. There was a meeting of the creditors of the bankrupt on the 3rd of December, 1842, when it was decided by them that the action should be continued; upon which the petitioner applied to them for indemnity, which the creditors agreed to give, each in the proportion of his own claim on the estate, but the petitioner declined the offer, and insisted upon a joint and several indemnity from them. Mr. Austin, the creditors' assignee, then, through Mr. Pocock, his solicitor, offered to indemnify the petitioner, which offer was declined. The action was tried and proved unsuccessful. On the 1st of December, 1843, this petition was presented.

Swanston, for the petitioner.

Anderdon, for the respondents, offered to give an indemnity, but submitted that the petition should be dismissed with costs.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—This is a case which may and ought to be decided upon its own particular circumstances. The sole creditors' assignee considers it right, and for the benefit of the estate, to bring an action on account of the estate against a particular person. That I must assume was also the opinion of the attorneys to the fiat, their appointment resting solely with the creditors' assignee. A meeting, regular or irregular, of the creditors, or of some of them, is held at the office of the official assignee, and, I must take it, with the knowledge of the official assignee. The creditors, at least some of them, approved of the action. When this petition was before me on a former occasion, I asked whether the counsel for the official assignee were instructed to urge the impropriety of the action, which question was answered in the negative. I also asked whether the official assignee desired a reference to inquire into the propriety of the action, and that was declined. How is it possible then that I can say that this action is frivolous, vexatious, or improper? It is not to be judged by the event, though it has failed. There is no evidence to shew it to have been frivolous, vexatious, or improper. There is, however, some evidence to form an opinion that it was a proper action to bring. Under these circumstances, was it right for the official assignee to interfere or oppose any obstruction to its progress? I need not answer the question. Two species of indemnity were offered to him—the one might have been embarrassing to make effectual, but the other could not be. This indemnity was, however, declined. This occurred in 1842. Further in 1842, the attorney informed Turquand that the action was proceeding. No proceeding was taken on his part until this petition was presented on the 1st of December, 1843—substantially a twelvemonth after these things occurred. The petition prays an indemnity against all costs, charges, and expenses, on account of this action. That was substantially offered before. It goes on to pray that until an indemnity to the satisfaction of the petitioner—not of the Court—is given, the progress of the action may be stayed. Under all the particular circumstances, there are not sufficient grounds for this petition, and I am of opinion that Turquand never sustained any loss, and was never put to practical inconvenience. Mr. Pocock and Mr. Austin then undertaking by their counsel to indemnify the petitioner against the costs of the action, without prejudice to any question as to the propriety or impropriety of the action, as to any proceedings therein, and without prejudice to the question, how or by what means, or out of what fund, the costs of the action should come; let the petition be dismissed with costs, without prejudice to the undertaking so given.

Power of the Court of Review to issue an injunction to stay proceedings in a court of law instituted to recover damages on account of acts done under an order of the Court.

This case, which is reported ante, p. 20, and was directed to stand over until issue was joined in the action, was again brought on. The pleas in the case were—1st, Not guilty; 2nd Justification. On the first plea issue was joined, and to the second, twenty-five grounds of demurrer were assigned.

Swanston, Russell, and Simon now argued in favour of the application for an injunction to stay the action; and cited Froud v. Lawrence (1 Jac. & W.); Andrews v. Walten (not reported); and Aston v. Heron (2 M. & K. 290).

Bagshaw and Rolt, for the respondent, contended that the Court of Review had no power to stop the action, and cited Ex parte Whitchurch (1 Atk. 55); Thorp v. Goodall (17 Ves. 388); Ex parte Glossop (2 Glyn & Jan.); Lee v. Cloughton (2 Glyn & Jan.); Green v. Elgie (not reported); Burdett v. Abbott (14 East); Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Add. & Ell. 1).

Swanston, in reply, cited Ex parte Gowan (3 B. & Ald.); Fitzpatrick v. Durant (1 Sim. & Stu. 408); Ex parte Hornby (Mont. & Bligh); and Re Dillon (2 Sch. & Lef.).

The CHIEF JUDGE.—This petition is presented for the purpose of staying proceedings in an action brought against Messrs. Turner and Hensman by Mr. Van Sandau, which arose thus. [His Honour then stated the circumstances of the case.] Against the order of February last Mr. Van Sandau did not appeal to any other Court by habeas corpus or otherwise. This action was brought for the arrest and imprisonment under this order, and for no other cause. When the present petition was presented, the Court directed it to stand over until the issues were joined. This was not intended to prejudice any party, but to see what questions of law or fact were raised upon the record. The pleas are two—the general issue and justification. Upon the former, issue is joined, and upon the latter, causes of demurrer are assigned. As this matter appears to press, and as it is important to take the case before the Lord Chancellor at once, if it is to be taken before him at all, I give my decision immediately. I am of opinion that I am bound to consider the cases cited in favour of the application as correctly decided and binding authorities, nor do I think that the right contended for is peculiar to the Court of Chancery. If Mr. Van Sandau desires to dispute the power of the Court to commit for contempt, or to dispute the fact of the contempt, or to deny the making of the order, I think that he ought not to be restrained. I am of opinion, however, that it would be improper to allow him to raise any question as to the validity or propriety of the order. I cannot conceive, supposing this Court to have the power to commit, supposing it to have made an order shewing upon the face of it that the party was so committed, that the rules and practice of the Court, and its modes of expression, should be brought before another Court, at least in the shape of the present action. The order then that I shall make upon the present petition is the following:—Let the parties and their counsel (if such be the usual form in injunctions from the Court of Chancery), attorneys and agents respectively, be restrained from all further proceedings in the action at law until further orders, subject only and except as hereinafter mentioned; but they are to be at liberty to proceed to argument and judgment on the demurrer, and to execution on such judgment. Mr. Van Sandau, his counsel, attorneys, and agents, are to be at liberty on such argument, and for all the purposes of such argument, to contend that the Court of Review has not, and had not in February 1844, jurisdiction, power, or authority, to commit for contempt of such court, and that it does not appear upon the face of such order, as stated in the plea of justification, that Mr. Van Sandau was ordered to be committed, on the ground that, in the judgment of the Court of Review, an act or acts, considered by the Court of Review to be a contempt, had been done by him; and also to contend that it appears upon the face of the order, that the commitment thereby ordered, was on the ground of an act or acts done by the said Van Sandau, which by law did not form or amount to a contempt of the Court of Review; but the said Van Sandau, his counsel, attorneys, and agents, are not further or otherwise on the argument, or for any purpose of the demurrer, to dispute or question the validity or propriety of such order, but are on the argument of and for all the purposes of the demurrer and the argument thereon, to admit the validity, propriety, regularity, formality, and sufficiency of such order in all other respects, and particularly the points which liberty is hereby given to him to raise at law against the validity thereof as aforesaid, without prejudice to any question which may be raised in this Court as to the validity of such order, or as to damages, or as to trying the issues of fact. In all other respects the petition to stand over, with liberty to apply.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

EXETER DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re SCOTT.

This Court has power to make an order on assignees under old fiats to refund moneys received by them as such assignees.

Our readers are aware that, since the establishment of the District Court of Bankruptcy several cases have occurred, in which orders have been made on assignees under old fiats, to refund large sums of money which they had either improperly retained, or had paid away, in their own wrong, without any lawful authority. No question has ever been raised here as to the validity of those orders, but, in consequence of a case reported in the London papers last week, a very strong impression has prevailed upon the minds of many members of the legal profession, that such orders, when made upon assignees by commissioners in the country, were, in the judgment of the Chief Judge of the Court of Review, invalid and irregular, and that they could not be enforced.

G. W. Turner this morning informed the Court, that Mr. Davy, the assignee under Scott's bankruptcy, had paid over to the official assignee the balance of the sum of 540*l.* which his Honour had ordered him to pay. At the same time, he was desirous of calling his Honour's attention to a case, Ex parte Collins in re Thomas, recently decided in the Court of Review, and reported in the Morning Herald and LAW TIMES. In that case, an order made by Mr. Commissioner Balguy, simply for the payment of a debt, and without any recitals, had been discharged by the Court, and from the manner in which it was reported, a strong impression prevailed among many of his professional brethren, that, in working up old fiats, this Court had no power to make orders on assignees, to pay over any money in their hands.

The COMMISSIONER said—I am very glad Mr. Turner has taken the opportunity of mentioning the case Ex parte Collins, in re Thomas, which I have myself seen reported, or rather, I ought to say, somewhat mis-reported, in one of the London papers. In consequence of what appeared there, I felt it my duty to get an exact account, from a reporter who attends the Court of Review, of what actually took place; and I also thought the matter of sufficient importance, to induce me to communicate with the Chief Judge of the Court of Review. As to the real facts of the case, taking them from that reporter's account, there can now, therefore, be no misapprehension. It appears that a fiat, issued previously to the passing of the Act, under the authority of which we, the country commissioners, sit, had been transferred into the Court of Bankruptcy for the Birmingham district, and the usual order had been made, directing the assignees to bring into that court all the moneys, books, papers, and documents connected with the estate, in their possession and custody as assignees. Such books and papers having been brought in and examined, it turned out that the solicitor under the fiat had received a certain sum of money, which he had not paid over to the assignee. Under these circumstances, the learned commissioner did that which he was clearly bound to do; he summoned the solicitor before him, in order to shew cause why he had not paid over the money. The solicitor came, in obedience to the summons, and acknowledged the receipt and non-payment of the money, and acquiesced in an order being made upon him for the amount. An order was thereupon made, importing merely upon the face of it, that the solicitor was to pay the money, without setting out any one of the facts. After the order was made, the solicitor, although he had acquiesced in its being made, refused to obey it, and it was under these circumstances that the matter was submitted to the judgment of the Court of Review. That Court simply decided, what it did not need its high authority to determine—that in making an order upon the solicitor, simply to pay a debt, the commissioner had exceeded his jurisdiction—that Courts of Bankruptcy were not established to try and determine questions of debt, and to order immediate execution,—and that the order in that case—not setting out that the party on whom the order was made, was a solicitor of the court—or that he had acquiesced in the order—was, on the face of it, bad, and must therefore be discharged. I think it quite right that these facts, which are the real facts of the case, should be known, for it is highly injurious that reports of what transpires in courts of justice should go forth to the public, as they very frequently do, with both the law and the facts misrepresented. I have thought it the more necessary to refer to this case, because it has been supposed, though erroneously, to affect cases in which orders have been made by this court, upon assignees under old fiats, who have appeared to have in their possession money, books, or papers, belonging to bankrupts' estates, which have come into their possession as such assignees. It frequently happens, in connection with those old fiats, which, even at this late period, are being brought into this court (and we find generally, that those in which the bringing in of the proceedings has been so long delayed, are just those which most require investigation, and in which money has been withholden from the creditors),—it is, I say, a case of frequent occurrence, that in pursuing these inquiries, we find that the assignees have either money remaining in their hands, or that they have had money of which they seek to discharge themselves, by alleging payments which they had no sort of right or authority to make. In the case to which Mr. Turner has adverted, and in which, upon an audit, we have recovered 540*l.* for the benefit of the estate, it appears that the assignees had conceived that, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament, under which this court is constituted, had deprived the old commissioners of all their jurisdiction, and although, from the passing of the Act, the power of the commissioners and of the assignees, further to pay or receive, was at an end, still they might go on paying and receiving, until the proceedings were actually brought into this court. Such was their view of the law, but it is a perfectly erroneous one, and contrary to the clear meaning and intention of the Act. Were it otherwise, an assignee would have nothing to do but to go on paying money until he had fritted away and got rid of all the assets in his hands, before the fiat found its way into this court. I think it right, therefore, to avail myself of this opportunity of stating the grounds on which I have brought my mind to the clear conclusion that this Court has not only the power to make an order upon the assignee, requiring him to pay over any money in his hands, but that it has all the powers of a court of record, to enforce obedience to such order. In looking at the Act before me, the 5th and 6th Vict. c. 122, I find that the first of these questions, the power to make the order, depends upon two of the sections, the 52nd and 53rd. By the 52nd section it is declared, that "all power, jurisdiction, and authority of the commissioners named in any fiat of bankruptcy, issued before the commencement of this Act (and by the interpretation clause the word 'fiat' is to be construed to include 'Commissions') shall cease and determine." It then goes on to empower the Lord Chancellor to transfer and remove any such fiat, either into the Court of Bankruptcy, "or into such of the courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats of bankruptcy under this Act, as he may deem fit," and it declares that "all further proceedings in every such fiat shall be thenceforth carried on in the court to which the same shall be transferred, in like manner as if the proceedings under such fiat had been originally commenced therein, &c." The fiat, then, having been so transferred under the authority given by this section, the next section, the 53rd, points out what the court into which it is transferred is to do. It enacts that, on the transfer taking place, "it shall be lawful for the court, which shall thenceforth act in the prosecution of such fiat, at its discretion, to appoint some one of the official assignees appointed, or to be appointed, under the said recited Act, or this Act, to act with the existing assignees, if any, under such fiat, and to direct the existing assignees to pay and deliver over to such official assignees all moneys, books, papers, and effects whatsoever, in their possession or custody, as assignees." So much, then, with respect to the power of the Court to make an order upon an assignee to pay or deliver over to the official assignee appointed under the authority of this Act, any moneys, books, or papers in his possession, belonging to a bankrupt's estate. It is perfectly clear, not only that it has the power to make such an order, but that, by the words of this section, it is expressly enjoined to make it. This being so, the next question which arises is this—the order having been made, what power has the Court got to enforce it? In dealing with this question, we must turn to two other clauses of the new Bankrupt Act, the 59th and the 66th; and the last of these sections is exceedingly important. The 59th section gives power to her Majesty to appoint twelve commissioners, in addition to the then existing commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, "to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country;" and it then goes on to state, that "any one or more of such additional commissioners shall and may form a Court of Bankruptcy for the purposes of this Act—and that every such court shall be authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, at such place, and in and for such district, as her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, may be pleased to direct." The 66th section,—the next to which I shall advert, comprises no less than three different subject matters; and for that reason, perhaps, each one of them has not been so much and distinctly considered as it might and ought to have been. In the second clause of that section, it is enacted, "that any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat directed to the Court of Bankruptcy, shall be deemed and taken to be a court, authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat." These words were introduced into the Act, in consequence of a decision of the Court of Exchequer upon a case which occurred some years ago. In that case (Rex v. Faulkner, 2 Mont. & Ayrton, 311) was discussed the right of a single commissioner to fine for contempt—the contempt being the writing of a letter to the commissioner, referring to certain acts done by him, in his official capacity, when sitting alone. One of the chief points raised by the arguments in that case, and that on which the Court appears to have mainly decided it, was this—that, although by the Act of Parliament establishing the Court of Bankruptcy, that Court, consisting of four judges and six commissioners, was constituted a court of law and equity, and was declared to have all "the rights, incidents, and privileges of a Court of Record," and although by a subsequent section of the same Act, power was given to each commissioner to sit by himself, for certain purposes—yet there was nothing in the Act to shew that any single commissioner, when so sitting, constituted a court. It was likened to the case of a judge sitting at chambers, to transact business connected with the superior courts, and with respect to which it was the uniform practice, if a judge made an order when so sitting, to make it a rule of the superior court, before it was enforced by attachment. For the purpose of getting rid of this objection, the words which I have already read were introduced, declaring that any single commissioner, acting in the prosecution of any fiat directed to the Court of Bankruptcy, shall be deemed and taken to be a court for the prosecution of such fiat. The Court of Exchequer in that case (Rex v. Faulkner) decided that no single commissioner, sitting alone, had power to fine for contempt. That decision was declared to be law by a subsequent statute—5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 25—the proviso in which, however, the later Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 66, has repealed on the clear legal principle—leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. The last branch of the 66th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. enacts "that every court so authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat, or in the execution of any duty, imposed or to be imposed on such court by this or any other Act hereafter to be in force, shall have, use, and exercise all the powers, rights, privileges, and incidents of a court of record." The former part of the section, having made a commissioner sitting alone a court, this part of it gives to the court so constituted, all the powers of a court of record. I wish to direct particular attention to the words "in the execution of any duty imposed on such court by this Act," because I think, on referring to the 53rd section, which expressly directs the court to order the assignees to pay or deliver over all moneys, &c. in their hands, it is quite impossible to deny, that the making of such an order is a duty imposed on the court by the express words of this statute. It is quite clear, therefore, that the court has not only power to make the order, but that it is expressly enjoined to make it, and that it has all the powers for enforcing it, which belong to a court of record. I have the authority of the Chief Judge of the Court of Review for stating, that in the case Ex parte Collins, he decided nothing upon that point,—that that case had nothing whatever to do with it—and that his decision was confined to the single point raised by the facts which I have already detailed, and which I will not go over again. The power of the district courts to make such orders on assignees, as those of which I have been speaking, was in no way called in question. We now come to inquire, what are the powers of a court of record to enforce obedience to its own orders? and that point has been so long settled, that it is almost superfluous to advert to it. The law upon it is very clearly and plainly stated by Mr. Justice Holroyd, in the case of The King v. Clement (4 B. & A. 218). That was a case which determined that a court of general gaol delivery might enforce its orders by fine. At a trial for high treason, which took place at the Old Bailey, before Lord Tenterden and other judges, it was ordered by the Court, that no report of the proceedings should be published in any of the newspapers until the trial should have concluded. In spite of that order, one of the newspapers published the first day's evidence at length, and the learned judge who presided fined the party for the contempt a sum of 500*l.* That case was fought, throughout, in two courts—the Court of Queen's Bench, and afterwards in the Exchequer—and the right of a court of record to fine and imprison for contempt of its orders was very much discussed. It is unnecessary to go at length into the arguments, but we find that the point was established beyond all question. The Attorney and Solicitor-General, the late Lord Gifford, and the present Lord Lyndhurst, argued the matter very fully, and they cited from the Prac. Reg. in Chancery, 99, this definition of a contempt, viz. "a disobedience of the court, or an opposing, or despising, the authority, justice, or dignity thereof; it commonly consists in a party doing otherwise than he is enjoined to do, or not doing what he is commanded or required by the process, order, or decree of the Court." I would refer those who wish to investigate the matter more closely, to the luminous judgment of Mr. Justice Holroyd, delivered in the case. He says—"Courts, inferior to the courts at Westminster, may clearly fine and imprison for contempt, if they are courts of record, as the Court of Quarter Sessions, or the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Indeed, it is the constant practice of such courts to fine jurors who do not attend, &c." I think, then, looking at all these authorities, and at the different clauses of the Act of Parliament, there can be no doubt of the power of the Court to make such an order, as it is expressly enjoined to make in the 53rd section, and, having made it, it has all the powers of a court of record to enforce it, proprio vigore, and without reference to any other court. It is indeed perfectly true that the Court, having made an order, might refer the matter to the Court of Review, and call on that court to enforce it; and, probably, where there are funds in the hands of the official assignee to meet the expense of an application to that court, such would be the best course; but it would not be so in all cases. It frequently happens that there are no funds belonging to an estate except the property improperly kept back, and in such cases, if the power be in the court, as I believe it is, proprio vigore, to enforce its own order, it ought not to drive the official assignee to a more expensive and circuitous mode to attain an object for which his own powers are sufficient.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

Two subjects of great interest to the Lawyer have occupied the attention of Parliament during the past week.

Lord Brougham has introduced the great measure, digested by the Criminal Law Commission, for the consolidation and codification of that branch of our jurisprudence. This is undoubtedly the most valuable document ever laid before the British legislature. As such, it was received by all parties, and with very general approval it was read a second time. It will go no further at present, that ample time may be given for examination of it by the Profession. Its introduction marks an era in the history of English jurisprudence. Great credit is due to the Commissioners, and to Lord Brougham as their spokesman, for the singular skill and industry with which they have condensed the law in this volume, for such it is.

The other matter of interest was Mr. WATSON's motion for an inquiry into the Chancery compensation job. His revelations astounded the House, and he was very nearly carrying his point, and beating the Government. Of course he had no difficulty in making out a case of unprecedented public plunder. We regret that we cannot also reprint his spirited and searching speech, which was marked by great ability, and will secure for him the thanks of the Solicitors and the suitors, as it did the general applause of the House. The monster abuse must not be suffered to rest unassailed: defeat should only stimulate to further efforts; and Mr. Watson should be energetically seconded in his assault by the petitions, and still better by the exercise of the private influence, of the Profession. The Law Institution will not stir in the matter, for obvious reasons, but the town and country solicitors might act without reference to that body, which is said to have had a hand in the affair.

THE FACTORIES BILL.

It contains seventy-four clauses, with four schedules annexed. The Act is to come into operation on the 1st of October next, except any provision which is otherwise specially mentioned. No inspector to act as a magistrate. Inspectors to enter factories and schools at any time to examine any register, &c. An office in London or Westminster is to be provided for the use of inspectors, and for the preservation of factory records. Clerks and servants to be appointed. Persons beginning to occupy a factory to send notice thereof to the office of the factory inspector. Certifying surgeons to be appointed by inspectors. Fees to be fixed by inspectors. The certificate of age, &c., to apply to only one factory, and may be annulled by the inspectors. Machinery to be guarded and factories kept clean. Notice to be given of any accident. Certifying surgeon to examine into the cause and extent of accidents. Actions may be brought on the report of an inspector, for bodily injuries received from machinery. Clocks to be provided for regularity in work, and registers to be kept in every factory. Children at eight years old may be employed in factories, but not to work more than seven hours a day; to go to school; young persons to be restricted to ten hours a day. Loss of time may be recovered. Work to cease on Saturdays at half past four o'clock. One hour, at the least, to be given at meal time. Half-holidays allowed, and attendance of children at school. Inspectors to give notice of dangerous machinery. All complaints under this Act to be preferred within two months. Proceedings to be taken before justices. Power given to distrain goods in factories belonging to persons convicted. Inspectors competent witnesses. Surgical certificates to be proof of age. Penalties for infringing the Act, or parents allowing children to be employed contrary to the provisions. Penalties to be applied for the establishment or support of day-schools for the education of children employed in factories. Appeal allowed in certain cases. A very long interpretation clause is set forth. Act may be repealed or amended. In the schedules the various certificates required are set forth, and directions given for carrying the government measure into operation. An abstract of this Act, and notices, to be hung up in every factory.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION.

MONDAY, May 13.—Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of the Criminal Laws Consolidation Bill, the object of which was to effect a complete digest, not only of the criminal statute laws, but also of the common law, reducing it to written principles, so that the whole might form a certain criminal code easily understood and easily carried into execution.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said the subject was a most important one, and upon the propriety of the first part of the Bill—that relating to the consolidation of the statute law—a doubt could scarcely be entertained. Upon the second part, however, he felt so much doubt as to induce him to pause. He therefore recommended to his noble friend to have the Bill read a second time that night, and thus to pledge their lordships to the principle of his measure, after which he ought to take no further step this session, but to give time for inquiry and re-introduce it in the next session of Parliament. In the meantime the Government would take the matter up in conjunction with his noble friend, and every effort would then be made to render the measure as effective as possible. It might also be advisable immediately to repeal a number of dormant statutes, the revival of which might lead to inconvenience. Lords Denman and Campbell concurred in the propriety of this course of proceeding.—Lord Brougham assented, and the Bill was read a second time.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHANCERY COMPENSATIONS.

TUESDAY, May 7.—Mr. WATSON moved for a committee to inquire into the compensations awarded to the persons filling certain lately abolished offices in Chancery. The annual sum which was now to be paid for compensations and salaries, and which was to come out of the pockets of the suitors, was 78,000*l.* a year. He referred most particularly to the clerks in court, some of whom were now receiving 7,000*l.* a year. They had had no fixed interest in the fees for the abolition of which this large compensation was given; these were fees which the Chancellor had power to alter from time to time. Mr. Watson shewed that no duties were done for them, and quoted a speech of Mr. Pemberton Leigh, condemning them as an enormity and an iniquity. The gentlemen in Chancery-lane received more than the First Lord of the Treasury or the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Bill giving these strange compensations had been hurried with remarkable celerity through Parliament, taking some of its stages after 12 o'clock at night, in the month of August, when the House was very thinly attended, and most of the lawyers were on the circuit. Compensations ought not to fall on the suitors' pocket or the suitors' fund; so much as ought to be paid at all should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. The Solicitor-General (Mr. THESIGER), in opposing this motion, admitted that the state of things in the Six Clerks'-office at the date of this Bill had been a state of abuse. The office of the Six Clerks was then little more than a sinecure. Each had power to appoint ten persons, who were called the sixty or sworn clerks. They did only part of the duties, and employed agents under them, who, though they had no vested interest in their employments, were practically officers for life. The abuses connected with the establishment of the Six Clerks and sixty clerks were generally felt, and it was judged to be necessary that, in order to make way for a remedy, the then existing interest should be cleared away. The clerks, whose offices it was thus proposed to abolish, lent their aid to the whole scheme of Chancery reform, on the distinct understanding that they were to receive a full and fair compensation. This was done under the supervision of a commission composed of very distinguished men—Lord Langdale, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Mr. Pemberton Leigh, and the late Mr. Sutton Sharp. The interest of the sworn clerks, though it had originated in abuse, was a vested interest, and had long been recognized as a matter of purchase and sale, of succession and of family arrangement. The attention of Lord Cottenham was specially called by Mr. Wainwright, the sworn clerk who prepared the Bill, to the compensation clauses, while the measure was in progress through the House of Lords; and Lord Cottenham saw no ground of objection. The Bill did not pass sub silentio through the House of Commons, where Mr. Ward made the same observation which had been repeated to-night about the disparity between political and professional remuneration, and Mr. Hume stated that he had examined the Bill, and had found it quite correct both in principle and in detail. Thus fairly and carefully was the Act of Parliament passed; and if there was any blame, which he did not, however, admit, it was the blame of the whole Legislature. He quoted previous compensation Acts, to shew that the Act now complained of proceeded upon precedent. It was a mistake to suppose that these compensations were thrown upon the suitors' fund; it was only from the suitors' fee fund that they were to be taken. The suitors would equally have borne this burden if the reform had not been made; with this difference—that then the burdens would have been permanent, whereas now it would pass away as the lives should fall in; but, at all events, there was no reason why it should be shifted from the suitors who were liable to it all along, upon the Consolidated Fund, or, in other words, upon the public who had nothing to do with it. He explained the liberal way in which the Chancellor had waived his own patronage in the new appointments under this Bill, for the sake of saving to the suitors. He concluded by appealing to the justice of the House whether it was reasonable, when a settlement had been fairly made, and the arrangements of domestic life completed on the faith of it, that a committee should be appointed to seek fresh grounds for the repeal of the Act of Parliament.—Mr. JERVIS said, that the Solicitor-General had furnished additional reasons for inquiry, by shewing that the Bill had been prepared by interested persons. If there was so good a case, why resist inquiry? He mentioned instances in which the Chancellor had, of his own authority, abolished fees taken by the sixty clerks, and argued thence that their interest was not a vested one. There was no vested interest but that of the Six Clerks, whose offices were patent ones; to the case of the sworn clerks, the principle of compensation was inapplicable. But still looser was the way in which the amount of it was calculated; for new judges were appointed who cleared away the arrears; and there was consequently an end to all these profits which the arrears had yielded, but which profits were yet calculated into these compensations. At all events this was a case for inquiry.—Mr. Redhead Yorke supported the motion. He never saw a case which more required reconsideration, or would leave a greater responsibility on a Government refusing inquiry.—Sir J. Graham said, that length of time, though it could not warrant injustice, might sometimes fortify a title originally unsound. The bill had been prepared and completed under the sanction of the commissioners before-mentioned; and one of them, Lord Langdale, had conducted it through the House of Lords, where it received the marked attention of Lord Cottenham. In the House of Commons, the conduct of it was taken by the present Lord Chief Baron, then Attorney-General, than whom no man had ever enjoyed in a greater degree, or more justly, the confidence of the House. (Much cheering from both sides.) The execution of the Act was committed to the Lord Chancellor, and he acted with the judicial assistance of Lord Langdale and Vice-Chancellor Wigram in the adjustment of the compensations. After all these cautions, it did not seem probable that any useful purpose could be answered by any inquiry which the House could now institute.—Mr. Williams pronounced it a gross job. It was part of the general system of oppression by indirect taxation.—Mr. C. Buller, in opposing this inquiry, begged the House to recollect the great evils entailed upon the public by the existing state of the law, and not to allow that a false economy should multiply objections and obstacles to measures of law reform. There never were reformers more sincere than those by whom these compensations had been sanctioned. No larger sum was paid from the date of the change than had been paid before; but you had this advantage—that you had commuted a permanent payment into a terminable annuity. If you meant to get the co-operation of those who could aid or impede your reforms, you must be liberal in your compensations; and when you found a man who had reason to look upon his income as a permanent one, though his interest in it should not be actually vested, you should treat him as person entitled to compensation. He (Mr. C. Buller) then adverted to another matter included in Mr. Watson's proposed inquiry—the general subject of taxation. He insisted upon the general hardship of throwing the whole expenses of litigation upon individuals; he thought that all officers in courts of justice should be salaried by the public like policemen, and not paid by fees from the suitor.—Mr. Warburton feared that if you gave these large compensations, you would disgust the public with all law reforms. The mover had admitted the principle of fair compensation, but the question was here, what was fair?

Mr. Watson replied, and the House divided—

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

The Police Force.—A return of the number of the Irish police force, and of the Metropolitan Police, in each year since they were established, and the amount of public money voted for the same in each year, has been printed on the motion of Mr. W. Williams, the member for Coventry. The first branch of the return relates to the Irish constabulary force, which was re-organized on the 1st of October, 1836. It appears that, with respect to this force, the number of head and other constables amounted in 1837 to 7,388; in 1838, to 7,938; in 1839, to 8,135; in 1840, to 8,309; in 1841, to 8,345; in 1842, to 8,996; in 1843, to 8,766; and in 1844, to 8,887. The number of officers averaged about 275, and the number of stipendiary magistrates to about 55, yearly. The total annual expense of this force amounted, in 1837, to 357,275*l.* and in 1844, to the sum of 436,152*l.*; the highest amount having occurred in the year 1843, when the expense reached 441,605*l.* The larger proportion of this expense is borne on the Consolidated Fund, and the smaller proportion by the various counties and cities of Ireland. The charges are never defrayed by Parliamentary votes, but by advances from the Consolidated Fund as the service requires. Turning to the Dublin Metropolitan Police we find that the total annual strength of that force (including the superintendents, inspectors, serjeants, and constables, &c.) amounted in 1838-39, to 1,010; in 1839-40, to 1,210; in 1840-41, to 1,150; in 1841-42, to 1,150; in 1842-43, to 1,180; and in 1843-44, to 1,130. The total sums voted by Parliament in each of the above years, having been respectively—28,732*l.* 33,963*l.* 34,959*l.* 38,100*l.* 35,600*l.* and 31,400*l.* We next proceed to our own Metropolitan Police Force, established in the month of September 1829: the total strength of this valuable body of men (inclusive of superintendents, inspectors, and serjeants,) was in the year 1830, 1,039; in 1831, 3,338; in 1832, 3,350; in 1833, 3,398; in 1834, 3,395; in 1835, 3,408; in 1836, 3,420; in 1837, 3,502; in 1838, 3,475; in 1839, 3,499; in 1840, 3,687; in 1841, 4,338 (this increase being accounted for by the circumstance of the police district being considerably increased in the year 1840); in 1842, 4,394; in 1843, 4,393; and in 1844, 4,673. There is no amount of public money voted for the police of this metropolis in each year, but the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 89, provides for the payment of a certain proportion of money from the Consolidated Fund, towards the maintaining of the police, not exceeding the sum of 60,000*l.* in any one year. The New Police Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 47), which was passed by the Whig Ministry in the year 1839, provides for an additional yearly sum out of the Consolidated Fund, not greater in each case than the amount of 2d. in the pound on the additional rental assessed to the Metropolitan Police by reason of such addition.

Grand Jury Presentments (Ireland).—We have been put in possession, by order of the House of Commons, of abstracts of the accounts of presentments made by the grand juries of the several counties, cities, and towns in Ireland in the year 1843 (pursuant to the Acts 49 Geo. 3 cap. 84, and 4 Geo. 4, c. 33). It appears from this Parliamentary paper, that the following were the gross total amounts of the presentments in the various counties of Ireland (exclusive of re-presentments) for the past year, viz.:—In Antrim, 60,938*l.*; in Armagh, 24,891*l.*; in Carlow, 17,429*l.*; in Carrickfergus, 798*l.*; in Cavan, 24,415*l.*; in Clare, 44,641*l.*; in Cork, 77,390*l.*; in Cork (city), 43,963*l.*; in Donegal, 35,055*l.*; in Downshire, 42,251*l.*; in Drogheda, 2,519*l.*; in Dublin (county), 25,925*l.*; in Dublin (city), 31,455*l.*; in Fermanagh, 20,477*l.*; in Galway, 43,788*l.*; in Galway (town), 4,259*l.*; in Kerry, 41,694*l.*; in Kildare, 21,593*l.*; in Kilkenny, 29,702*l.*; in Kilkenny (city), 3,067*l.*; in King's County, 24,805*l.*; in Queen's County, 24,127*l.*; in Leitrim, 19,206*l.*; in Limerick, 37,917*l.*; in Limerick (city), 4,974*l.*; in Londonderry, 31,322*l.*; in Longford, 18,944*l.*; in Louth, 15,847*l.*; in Mayo, 35,289*l.*; in Meath, 30,151*l.*; in Monaghan, 19,574*l.*; in Roscommon, 30,442*l.*; in Sligo, 22,072*l.*; in Tipperary, 68,751*l.*; in Tyrone, 41,2[illegible]l.; in Waterford, 23,924*l.*; in Waterford (city), 4,540*l.*; in Westmeath, 29,733*l.*; in Wexford, 37,33[illegible]l.; and in Wicklow, 25,858*l.* The total amount of presentments for the whole of Ireland was, consequently, 1,142,302*l.* exclusive of re-presentments. The sum of 111,850*l.* was for new roads, bridges, pipes, &c.; 323,330*l.* for repairs of roads and bridges; 8,604*l.* for the erection or repair of Courts of Session-houses; 5,264*l.* for the building, &c. of gaols, bridewells, houses of correction, &c.; 88,264*l.* for all other prison and bridewell expenses; 189,090*l.* for police and police establishments; 97,815*l.* for the salaries of certain county officers; 95,657*l.* for public charities; 134,476*l.* for repayment of advances to the Government; and 96,573*l.* for miscellaneous matters.

Bank of England Notes.—A return of an account of notes of the Bank of England in circulation, the amount of deposits and securities, and amount of bullion in the Bank at the close of business, in every week, from the 7th of July, 1840, to the 2nd of March, 1844, has just made its appearance. It is a pity that the framers of this return have neglected to append an annual general abstract, by which the reader might be enabled, at a glance, to make himself acquainted with the policy of the Bank in regard to their assets and liabilities. Taking only the present year—for it would require considerable time and labour in order to afford a summary of the whole period, we find, that on the 6th of January, 1844, the bank-notes in circulation amounted to 19,528,000*l.* (including those issued by the branches), and that at the same time bullion to the amount of 15,271,000*l.* was lying in the Bank vaults; on the 13th of January the bank-notes in circulation amounted to 21,268,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,299,000*l.*; on the 20th of January the bank-notes in circulation amounted to 21,934,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,376,000*l.*; on the 27th January, the bank-notes to 22,030,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,555,000*l.*; on the 3rd of February, the bank-notes to 22,061,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,692,000*l.*; on the 10th of February, the bank-notes to 21,791,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,803,000*l.*; on the 17th of February, the bank-notes to 21,578,000*l.* and the bullion to 15,974,000*l.*; on the 24th of February the bank-notes to 21,307,000*l.* and the bullion to 16,107,000*l.*; and on the 2nd of March the amount of bank-notes in circulation was altogether 21,206,000*l.* and the bullion in the coffers of the establishment, 16,162,000*l.* It appears from a second return (moved for by Mr. C. Wood, M.P.) that the total number of country bankers who act with Bank of England notes exclusively amounts to 43 (2 being in the metropolis, 7 at Liverpool, 7 at Newcastle, 7 at Portsmouth, 5 at Birmingham, and 4 at Manchester), and the total amount of their credit 2,429,000*l.* The rate of discount charged to the country bankers who have fixed amounts is stated at 3*l.* per cent. per annum.

Grain and Flour.—Mr. Hawes, M.P. has obtained a return of an account shewing the total quantities of foreign and colonial grain and flour entered for home consumption, at each rate of duty, from the 5th of January, 1843, to the 5th of January, 1844, &c. We find from this paper that the total quantity of foreign wheat entered for home consumption in the United Kingdom during the past year, under the Act of the 5th of Victoria, sess. 2, cap. 14, was 844,319 quarters, at rates of duty extending from 14s. to 20s. per quarter; 731,298 quarters were entered at the lower duty (14s.), and 17,824 quarters at the highest of all (20s.) The quantity of wheat flour entered during the same period was 30,393cwt. 12,407 quarters of British colonial wheat (and 176,367cwt. of British colonial flour) were entered at duties ranging between 1s. and 5s. per quarter. The quantity of foreign barley imported amounted to 222,745 quarters, at duties ranging from 6s. to 10s. per quarter. The total quantity of foreign oats, to 41,479 qrs. at duties of 6s. 7s. and 8s. per quarter. The quantity of rye imported was 2,724 quarters; that of peas, 36,184 qrs.; and that of beans, 45,702 quarters. The quantity of wheat imported from Canada under the new Act 6 & 7 Victoria, c. 29 (which came into operation last October), amounts to 12,412 quarters, at the duty of 1s. a quarter; and the quantity of wheat flour to 220,117 cwt.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

We have procured a verbatim report of the important judgment of the Queen's Bench in the case of Reg. v. The South-Western Railway, which reviews the much-agitated question of the rating of railways. This case was decided rather upon its peculiar merits than upon the principle, but nevertheless it will be a standing authority upon the subject, and therefore we have given it thus at length.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—Easter Term, 1844.

Wednesday, May 9.

Reg. v. The Justices of Cornwall.

When the Court of Quarter Sessions has decided on the materiality of any omission in the examination of a pauper, or in the grounds of appeal against an order of removal, this Court will not interfere; and the magistrates' costs must be paid by the parties making the application.

On the removal of Richard Gray and his family from the parish of Kenwyn to the parish of Redruth, both in the County of Cornwall, the overseers and churchwardens of the parish of Redruth gave notice of appeal; and stated as one of the grounds of appeal, that "subsequently to the acquisition by Richard Gray (the father of the pauper, from whom the alleged settlement in the parish of Redruth was derived) of his alleged settlement in Redruth, the said pauper acquired a settlement by inhabiting, as an apprentice, by the space of forty days and upwards, in the parish of Aberavon, in the county of Glamorgan, at divers intervals in the years 1822, 1823, 1824, and 1825, or thereabouts, under and in pursuance of an indenture duly made and executed by the said Richard Gray, and one James Jenkins, now of Aberavon and then a mariner, in or about the year 1822, whereby he bound himself to serve, &c." There were several other grounds of appeal, setting up settlements gained by inhabiting in other parishes, "under and in pursuance of the said indenture." The appeal came on to be tried at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace in and for the County of Cornwall, held at Bodmin, on the 17th of October, 1843; when the respondents proved the settlement of the pauper's father in the appellant parish; the appellant's counsel then proposed to go into evidence to prove the pauper's subsequent settlement by apprenticeship in the parish of Aberavon; but the counsel for the respondents thereupon insisted that the grounds of appeal were defective, in not stating particularly the date of the indenture of apprenticeship therein set forth, and that the appellants, therefore, were not at liberty to give any evidence in support of them; and the Court of Quarter Sessions, so holding, confirmed the order of removal. In last Hilary Term, the appellants obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal.

The following cases were then referred to: Rex. v. The Justices of Derbyshire (Castleton v. Bradwell), 6 Add. & Ell. 885; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (Drighlington v. Pudsey), 2 Q. B. 505, 1 Gale & D. 706; Reg. v. North Bovey (2 Q. B. 500); Reg. v. Inhabitants of Stowford (2 Q. B. 526); Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Stoneleigh (2 Q. B. 530), and Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Margaret, Rochester (2 Q. B. 533).

M. Smith now shewed cause. The case of (a) Reg. v. Justices of Kesteven, Lincolnshire (3 Law T. p. 55), decided in this court during the present Term, is a conclusive authority against this rule. There the sessions held, that an omission to state in the grounds of appeal the particular house in which the apprentice resided was, under the circumstances of that case, a material omission, and the Court refused to interfere.

DENMAN, C. J.—Mr. Greenwood, what do you say to this case?

Greenwood, for the appellants.—This objection to the grounds of appeal assumes as a fact, that every indenture of apprenticeship bears date.

DENMAN, C. J.—No! The sessions say, that in this case the date ought to have been stated, they hold the omission material, and we cannot interfere. The rule must be discharged.

Greenwood.—I hope not with costs. The case of Reg. v. The Justices of Kesteven was not decided when this appeal was tried.

DENMAN, C. J.—If the magistrates are the real defendants, their costs must be paid.

Rule discharged, with the costs of the justices only.

REG. v. FRAMPTON.

A defendant in an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, is not entitled to be discharged from the indictment upon the production of a certificate of two justices and affidavits, which merely state that "the road is now in repair;" they should shew something done since the finding of the jury.

Barstow shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cockburn, Q.C., on a previous day in the present Term, calling on the prosecutor of an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, situate in the parish of Wool, in the county of Dorset, to shew cause why a fine of 6s. 8d. should not be levied upon the defendant; and why, upon payment of the same, he should not be discharged from the said indictment. The rule was obtained upon the production of a certificate signed by two justices, and an affidavit of one John Swaffield, bailiff, stating that they had severally viewed the road, and that "it is now in repair." It is submitted that that is not sufficient, and that a defendant, liable ratione tenuræ to repair a road, cannot discharge himself from an indictment for non-repair found against him without shewing that, since the verdict, some money or labour has been expended upon it; otherwise, the Court would be called upon to try over again upon affidavit the question already decided by the jury. Here the certificate of the justices and the affidavit of Swaffield merely contradict the finding of the jury, that the road was out of repair.

Cockburn, Q.C. contrà.—It is quite clear that this certificate and affidavit are no contradiction of the finding of the jury; they refer to a different time; and the fact that the road is at present in repair is not denied by any affidavit on the other side.

DENMAN, C. J.—I think the more reasonable course will be to enlarge the rule.

Cockburn, Q. C.—I hope your lordship will allow us to amend our affidavits.

Barstow.—I trust not. I am entitled to discharge the rule according to the practice of the court; but I consent to its being enlarged.

DENMAN, C. J.—The rule must be enlarged.

(a) Rule enlarged.

(a) An accurate report of this case will be published in the forthcoming part of these reports.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

FROM the Times we take the following letter on the County Courts Bill, shewing how preferable would be a reconstruction of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, where the machinery is already existing, and there would be neither compensation to old officials nor the cost of new ones. It will be seen, that the proposition is similar to that which the LAW TIMES was the first to submit to the Profession, and we are glad to have the aid of so able an ally as the RETIRED BARRISTER, whom we should be glad to number among our correspondents.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"Sir,—Believing it to be the intention of Government to introduce a County Courts Bill during the present session of Parliament, permit me, with much deference, to submit the following observations to your superior judgment.

"I am one of (I believe) a vast majority of my countrymen who think that where alteration in any branch of the administration of the law is called for, it should be based, if possible, upon the ancient and existing institutions of the country. Instead, therefore, of creating new courts of law, and thereby altering and unfixing the settled notions and habits of the community, and necessarily causing additional expense and vexatious attendance and trouble to jurors and suitors, I trust that you will agree with me in thinking that it would be far preferable that any alterations required in our legal proceedings should be grafted on the old courts and system as at present existing.

"The criminal law of this country (apart from the metropolis) is, in the main, administered at the assizes and quarter sessions—time-honoured and well-known tribunals. The civil rights of the subject, those of the greatest importance, are also litigated and adjusted at the assizes; whilst those of inferior importance, which form the great bulk of the affairs and business of life, are disposed of in inferior courts of local jurisdiction, known to be irresponsible in their composition, expensive and arbitrary in their proceedings, and capricious and unsatisfactory in their decisions. To transfer the adjustment of this portion of the civil rights of the subject from courts of this description to tribunals to be presided over by competent and responsible judges, may, I humbly submit, be carried into effect without any other change than the making the Courts of Quarter Sessions civil as well as criminal courts of judicature.

"All the necessary capabilities, machinery—in a word, the staff, for effectuating this great object, are, with one exception (but that a great one), ready at hand—officers, courts, and fixed times of holding—respected, accustomed, and well known: a judge only is wanted, hitherto the stumbling-block of this much-desired change in this country, although the successful experiment of the appointment of assistant barristers in Ireland ought long since to have paved the way for the establishment of similar judges in the Courts of Quarter Sessions in England.

"The objection (and it may be, politically speaking, a delicate one) addresses itself to the retirement of the present chairmen of the Courts of Quarter Sessions. The present Government is too strong to permit such an objection to weigh for one moment against the introduction of a measure by which the administration of justice in this great country, as regards the civil rights of the great majority of its inhabitants, would be so manifestly improved. As a body, however well-intentioned the chairman may be, it must be admitted that in qualifications, even as criminal judges, they must yield to individuals (such as no doubt would be selected), who, being in daily practice in the superior courts in London as well as on the circuits, familiar with the ever-varying decisions of the judges, breathing the very atmosphere of law, would be regarded, from their talents, knowledge, and experience, as future candidates for the highest honours in their profession. The decisions of such men in the criminal Courts of Quarter Sessions would be looked up to, respected, and give unmixed satisfaction, because, being strangers in their several districts, they would have no local feelings or prejudices to gratify, no knowledge of the parties before them but what the depositions contained, no other object in view but the impartial and indifferent administration of justice according to the very letter of the law. Why not permit the same gifted individuals also to hear and determine the civil rights of the subject in the same courts, in the same places, and before the same juries? No change but in the chairman would then be required to assimilate the practice and respectability of the Criminal Court of Quarter Sessions to that of the Crown Court at the assizes. No change in the litigation and adjustment of the civil rights of the subject would be requisite, if, instead of the establishment of new judges, additional and experimental courts of judicature, with their necessary concomitant inconveniences and expense, the simple plan were adopted of permitting the same judge and the same jury to dispose of the civil causes after they had disposed of the calendar of prisoners. You would then have two intelligible, distinct, and concurrent tribunals throughout the land, viz. the assizes for the disposal of greater causes and crimes, the courts of quarter sessions for the disposal of those of an inferior nature, both courts presided over by competent and satisfactory judges, for their decisions and their demeanour will be always under the public eye. Besides, every juror and suitor would at once be sensible of the broad distinction between the two classes of courts, the latter of which, if carried out as proposed, would do no violence to long-established opinions and habits, give very little, if any, perceptible additional trouble to parties attending the Quarter Sessions; but, what is of far greater, indeed of immeasurable importance, would eventually give greater stability (if possible) to our legal institutions, to which the people of this country have already so deeply-rooted an attachment.

"But if, instead of this simple plan, you create new courts and new jurisdictions in civil matters, necessarily preserving all the criminal, and in cities and boroughs the civil, courts which at present exist, you unsettle the public mind by their very novelty, you entail certain expense by their experimental establishment upon the public purse, cause additional harassing and vexatious attendance of jurors (already with too much justice complained of), and offer to the many a specious pretext for dissatisfaction with the hitherto venerated institutions of (what they would then call) this law-ridden country.

"The people appear to be at present perfectly apathetic on the subject of local courts, and therefore if, instead of this experimental, expensive, and uncalled-for legislation, the appointment of good and sound lawyers to preside over the Courts of Quarter Sessions in the way proposed should hereafter prevent the necessity of having recourse (to say the least of it) to so doubtful an innovation, the Conservative Government, of which you form so distinguished a supporter, would have the high satisfaction of reforming without scarcely altering, of improving without impairing, of invigorating without endangering, the long-established, time-honoured, and venerated legal tribunals of our beloved country.

"If these observations should be the means only of calling your attention to this very important subject before the Legislature shall have become pledged to the introduction of the proposed County Courts Bill, the object of the writer will be partially attained.

"I have the honour to be, with many apologies for the intrusion, your most obedient servant,

"A RETIRED BARRISTER."

London, May 12.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

INUTILITY OF GRAND JURIES.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Thursday the clerk to Messrs. Gregson and Co., solicitors applied to Sir P. Laurie to be allowed to give in bail to answer for the appearance of a person who had been indicted before the Grand Jury, for having published a libel reflecting upon the character of another.

Sir P. Laurie said, the observations which had been made on the subject of grand juries last sessions at the Central Criminal Court, were calculated to attract the attention of the Government in a very emphatic manner to the question of the propriety of the institution. It was of course known to the gentlemen who attended upon the part of the defendant, that a presentment at that time to the Commissioners of the Central Criminal Court designated grand juries was wholly useless, and rather calculated to defeat than to serve the ends of justice.

The solicitor said he was aware of the fact.

Sir P. Laurie desired to be informed under what circumstances the case alluded to appeared before the Grand Jury?

The solicitor declared, that he believed the defendant was wholly ignorant of the particulars, but it was conjectured that a letter, written by the defendant, containing matter presumed to be libellous, and calculated to do injury to the individual reflected upon, had been laid before the grand jury, and a true bill found, and that a warrant was about to be issued for the apprehension of the accused. That was the state of the case, as had been by some means or other ascertained by the defendant, who was connected by ties of blood with the complainant. The former, upon hearing that the bill of indictment had been found, was advised to keep out of the way until the necessary arrangements should be made to meet the accusation.

Sir P. Laurie declared, that he felt gratification at the appearance of an opportunity for exciting the observations of practical men on a subject of such vast importance to the community as the grand jury system. Mr. Clark, the clerk of the arraigns, than whom no man was a higher authority with regard to the working of the system, was most decidedly of opinion that no man was safe who was subjected to the operation of such a power. He entirely agreed in the views of that excellent officer, and considered that there should be no intermediate authority between the committing magistrate and the trial of the accused. To say nothing of the intolerable inconvenience and expense, the perversion of justice frequently resulting from the temptations which presented themselves to persons liable to be tampered with in the interval between a charge and the preferring of a bill was most frightful. To be sure, the recent order made by the judges that a qualified person should be present at the sittings of the grand juries to see that the evidence of the witnesses in support of the presentments was in accordance with that in support of the charges when originally made, had accomplished great good; but still there were inherent faults in the system, which partial applications could not remedy.

The solicitor said he was astonished when he was told that a bill had been presented and found upon the occasion to which the magistrate's attention had been thus particularly called, as the usual mode adopted in cases of alleged libel was by criminal information in the Court of Queen's Bench or by action at law. He was rejoiced that his application had called forth the observations of Sir P. Laurie, as every thing should be done to show the necessity of prompt interference of Government to remedy the grievance.

Sir P. Laurie.—I believe that no two gentlemen, however extensive may be their practice, are qualified to form a more correct judgment on this important question than Mr. Clark, the clerk of the arraigns, and Mr. Goodman, the chief clerk of this justice-room. I should wish to be guided by them on this matter. I know, and I have long complained of the delay and the palpable injustice to which prosecutors and witnesses have been exposed, and I have been always impressed with the feeling that the accuser and the accused should be placed face to face, and I trust that her Majesty's Government will make inquiry into the merits of a question which is becoming daily more important to the community.

Sir P. Laurie then accepted the bail in the usual form.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

PETERBOROUGH.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned Attorneys at Law, resident in the city of Peterborough, humbly sheweth,

That considerable outlay being required before your petitioners are enabled to practise, and their being subjected to an annual tax of eight pounds in the exercise of their profession, occasions in them much surprise when they find in section 75 of the County Courts Bill, now before your honourable house, that except by leave of the judge, they will not be entitled to argue any question as advocates for others in the Courts to be established by the Bill.

That the time and knowledge required to prepare the case and evidence, is the same on an average in any action of Assumpsit, Case, Debt, or Replevin, whether the amount sought to be recovered be forty shillings or forty pounds. Nor is the duration of the trial less, by reason of the amount of debt or damages awarded by the jury.

That the maximum costs of fifteen shillings to be allowed the plaintiff's attorney in any of the above actions in the County Cou ts, are wholly inadequate to the time and labour which must necessarily be consumed from first to last in the proceedings: and even these your petitioners observe are not to be considered as costs in the cause, unless the judge shall so order.

Your petitioners, therefore, most respectfully ask for a removal of the restriction pointed out in section 75; and with equal respect beg to solicit, that a moiety of the costs and expenses allowed to attorneys in actions under twenty pounds, now heard by writ of trial before the sheriff, be paid to attorneys in the County Courts; or for such relief in the premises, as to your honourable house shall seem meet.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

NORWICH AND NORFOLK.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the Attorneys and Solicitors of the Norwich and Norfolk Law Society, sheweth,

That your petitioners approve of the principle of a bill now depending in your honourable House, for the more easy recovery of small demands in the County Courts of England.

But your petitioners most strongly protest against the 75th clause, by which it is intended to prevent any barrister or attorney from being heard as of right in the proposed courts, and provides a most inadequate remuneration for professional services when employed.

They most respectfully submit to your honourable House, that, for the benefit of the suitors themselves, such a remuneration should be allowed for professional assistance as will secure the services of persons of reputable character, and that such remuneration should be made costs in the cause.

Your petitioners also submit that all summonses, warrants, precepts, and writs of execution should be issued by the attorneys, conformable to the uniform practice in all courts, and the registering of them only should be the duty of the clerk; but by the 13th section, as it now stands, a monopoly will be created in the sole power of the clerk, which may give occasion to irregular practices in fees between the clerks and the suitors, and not very easily to be controlled or prevented by the Court.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that the 75th clause may be either expunged from or amended in the said Bill, and that the 13th clause may be so altered as to secure the issuing of process by the attorneys. And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Signed on behalf of the above Society,

JOHN SKIPPER, Chairman.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I hold in my hand "The Justice of the Peace," of the 13th April, 1844, the names of whose editors, "Charles Clark, Esq., Barrister at Law; John Mee Mathew, Esq., Barrister at Law; and J. L. Jellicoe, Esq. (?), stand forth in Roman capitals upon its first page. I have no objection to Messrs. Clark, Mathew, and Jellicoe giving (like the Village Apothecary) "advice to the poor gratis," but I do object, and through your columns beg respectively to protest against the perpetual and indecent violation of professional usage and propriety perpetrated by these gentlemen in answering, through the columns of their newspaper, cases which evidently arise in actual practice, the answering of which cannot be justified by any desire of giving "Advice to the poor gratis." In page 251, of the number alluded to, is a case commencing thus—"Two parishes having suspended hostilities for your opinion on the following case, will you be so good as to give an answer to the following case?" and an answer is given. With a paper published anonymously, such a mode of arbitrament would seldom be resorted to, the decision of an unknown would be considered valueless; but the people who state such questions as these, and select "The Justice of the Peace" for their Mentor, perfectly well know that, even if the tail-end of the Editorial Triumvirate be no higher than an unwigged student at law, or not so high, Messrs. Clark and Mathew are barristers, who, by emblazoning their names on the title-page, become responsible to the public for the correctness of any opinions which they and their coadjutor, as editors, advance.

A client of mine (a magistrate of station and fortune) consulted me on a doubtful and important point connected with his private affairs; I thought it highly proper to consult counsel, and proposed to prepare a case. "Oh, no (said my client), you need not do that, as I can get a counsellor's opinion for nothing, by sending a statement to 'The Justice of the Peace.'" He did send, and he got what was wanted, and I and some barrister were thus deprived of our legitimate fees.

Yours, &c.,

Liverpool. AN ATTORNEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reference to your publishing my name as an "Advertising Attorney," I have to complain that your remarks upon my letter of explanation of the 28th Feb. last, were more calculated to retain than to remove the odium which has been most unjustly attached to my professional character; and I, therefore, take this opportunity of stating, that Messrs. Cowburn and Norris, of Settle (having just then entered into partnership), were the gentleman who inserted a card along with mine in the Leeds Mercury; and, as a proof of their respectability, I beg to refer you to the LAW TIMES of the 6th April last, where they advertise for sale by auction upwards of 250 acres of land, and other property. I think you will agree with me, that these gentlemen were not actuated by dishonourable motives, in announcing to the Profession that they had become partners, in the method universally recognized and adopted in this county; and, therefore, why should such motives be imputed to me, when I took the same simple course, to make known to the Profession, also, that I had ceased to be a clerk and had taken a higher stand amongst them?

I served my articles with Mr. S. F. Harrison (of the late firm of Harrison and Brown), of this town, one of your earliest subscribers, and a gentleman of high standing in the Profession, and was in the office of him and his partner for upwards of eleven years, and they will bear testimony to my character and respectability, as also will my agent, Mr. Fiddey, 3, Paper-buildings, Temple.

I concur in the laudable course taken by your journal in exposing the abuses of the Profession; but, I submit, that if, in doing so, it has been the means of inflicting an unmerited injury, it is the duty of the gentleman who conducts it, to make due reparation.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JOS. FRANCE.

Wakefield, 7th May, 1844.

[We deem Mr. France's explanation perfectly satisfactory. If it be the custom of the Profession in Yorkshire to advertise their cards, he cannot be blamed for doing as others do; but it is a custom that all should abandon, because, once permitted, there is no limit to its indulgence. We cannot give up the names of informants in any case.—ED. LAW TIMES.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I thank you for your reply of the 11th inst. and, in return, beg to say, as to the Welsh attorneys' clerks, that there are three modes of meeting the nuisance:—

The first, too expensive and slow even to bear mentioning.

The second, by the solicitors within a circuit of thirty miles, refusing to meet or correspond with such clerks, or their pretended masters—and by such solicitors intimating to the Bar that such men are without the pale.

The third, by making it known that the worthies who cloak such clerks cannot compel payment of any costs for their services or for those of such clerks.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A. T. STEAVENSON.

Darlington, 13th May, 1844.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

G. J. sends the following on the subject of SHERIFFS' FEES.

I observe, in a recent number, a short article on the subject of fees to sheriffs; and by which you seem to lay down that the sheriff is now entitled to poundage on ca. sa.'s; will you, therefore, allow me to call your attention to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, sec. 31, being "An Act to amend the Laws concerning Prisons" (passed 10th August, 1842), which section enacts that after 1st March, 1843, no poundage shall be payable to sheriffs, &c. for taking the body of any person in execution.

The Act has placed the sheriffs in Wales in a very awkward position (if my view of it is correct), for, in all cases where the defendant resides fifteen miles from the sheriff's office and prison, the sheriff will be actually out of pocket, leaving the great responsibility of the matter out of the question. I will illustrate the case in the following way:—

FEES ALLOWED BY STATUTE.

Warrant	£0	7	6
Caption	1	1	0
Mileage, fifteen miles at 6d. per mile	0	7	6*
Conveyance, at 1s. do.	0	15	0
	£2	10	6

FEES ACTUALLY PAID.

Paid officer	£1	1	0
Ditto his mileage	0	7	6
Conveyance of defendant to gaol, fifteen miles, at 1s. 6d. per mile	1	2	6

	2	15	9
Deduct fees allowed	2	10	6

I shall now leave the matter in your hands, trusting that you will, through the medium of your valuable paper, advocate a repeal of such an act of injustice.

* A conveyance cannot be procured in Wales under 1s. 6d. per mile on these occasions.

Revising Barristers' Decisions.—A return of the appeals from the Courts of the Revising Barristers to the Court of Common Pleas, pursuant to the Act 6 and 7 Victoria, cap. 18 (the new English Registration of Voters Act), shews that the total number of appeals, including both counties and boroughs, has amounted to 13, on the hearing of which the judgment of the Court was pronounced in favour of the appellants in only 3 cases, and for the respondents in 10. No order respecting the payment of the costs of any of these appeals has been made by the Court of Common Pleas, it not having appeared that any of the cases were frivolous or vexatious.

To Readers and Correspondents.

It seems there was a mistake in our report of last week of the case of Reg. on the prosecution of Rogerson v. Grimshaw, in the Queen's Bench (p. 101), in which it is stated that the Court held "there had been sufficient ground for issuing the writ, and that the points could be better argued upon the return." The rule was made absolute, but without remark by the Court, indeed it is obvious that such a remark could not have been made upon such a motion.

F. S.—We think not.

F. W. M.—If he will apply to the gentleman who reported the case, no doubt he would give the information requested.

Four or five long communications on the subject of capital punishment have been received. They cannot appear for some time, if at all, for lack of space.

Thanks for the report from York. But recorders at city sessions are not authorities, which alone our reports comprise.

A Subscriber.—We have not the remainder of the case of W. Barnard.

E. Williams.—The paragraph is not quite legal enough for our columns.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Publisher begs to inform subscribers, that no agent calling upon them in the country is or has been authorized to receive the subscriptions to the Law Times. He would be extremely obliged to any subscriber who may have been asked to pay his subscription by any person, or who may incautiously have paid it otherwise than by letter, or at the office, at once to inform him when and by whom the application was made.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The subscriptions for the current volume are now due, and should be paid in the course of a few days, to entitle the Subscribers to the advantages of pre-payment.

The volumes for binding may be sent by post, in parcels open at the end, accompanied with a letter, stating how they may be identified, and how the bound volume is to be returned. For prices, and further particulars, see the notice above.

NOTICE.

It continually happens that papers of great value and interest to our readers are excluded from the columns of the Law Times, in consequence of their length rendering their publication impracticable without absorbing the space which the plan of the journal claims for matters falling under its various departments. This difficulty has been pre-eminently forced upon our notice during the past week, in consequence of the receipt of Lord Brougham's Bill for the consolidation of the criminal law, a document of extraordinary interest, invaluable to the lawyer as condensing the whole of that branch of the existing law; but so voluminous that it is impossible by any condensation or contrivance to bring it within the limits of these columns.

And so it is with many other documents which we should be glad to put into the possession of our readers; such as abstracts of Parliamentary papers relating to the law, reports of commissions, and so forth, but which are precluded by the limitations of the Stamp Act.

A plan has been proposed to us for overcoming this difficulty, to which we have devoted due deliberation and are inclined to give it a fair trial.

It is requested by many of our readers that we should publish the documents to which we allude, and which, though not within the compass of the Law Times, are yet of great interest and value to the Profession, in the form of an Appendix, which may be issued as occasion requires, distinctly paged, so as to be separately bound, if desired, and the taking of which shall be entirely at the option of the subscribers. The Supplements to be continued as heretofore, and the contents of the journal to be in all respects the same as hitherto.

The numbers forming the Appendix will be stamped and transmitted by post, but only to those who order them; and, as the issue will be uncertain, the cost of those of the past half-year may be paid with the pre-payment for the ensuing half-year.

The Appendix will be printed precisely as the Law Times; but as it will contain no advertisements, it will consist of sixteen pages of reading matter; the price, One Shilling per Number, stamped. The numbers will be issued at no regulated interval, but probably about one per month; the issue being necessarily regulated by the documents deserving publication. The first number will contain the commencement of the important Bill for the Consolidation of the Criminal Law. When this is completed, Mr. Serjeant Manning's Report on the Law of Debtor and Creditor, and abstracts of some of the important Parliamentary Returns of the session relating to the Law will follow. We hope, moreover, in this form to be enabled to put the Profession in possession of some of the most valuable of the reports, and other documents, which will be collected by the Society for the Amendment of the Law.

We repeat, that the Appendix, which will be separately paged, and have an Index of its own, will be entirely distinct from the Law Times, which will be complete in itself without this addition, so that it will be entirely at the option of our Subscribers whether they will avail themselves of the information it will give them at a very trifling cost. But we shall be obliged to those who purpose taking it, so to inform the Publisher as soon as possible, that he may be enabled in some manner to regulate the quantity to be printed.

RICH AND POOR WITNESSES.

The impartiality with which justice is administered to all classes of the community is one of the fundamental principles of English law. Yet, not an Assize or Sessions passes, which does not afford instances of the distinction which is made in the administration of justice between the rich and poor. We allude especially to the practice of allowing witnesses of a superior station in life to give their evidence out of the witness-box. This is a distinction which is calculated, more than any other, to foster and encourage the opinion which prevails among the lower orders of the people, that there is one law for the rich, and another for the poor.

It is certainly inconsistent with the proud boast of English justice, that one place should be assigned to the rich and another to the poor, from which to deliver that evidence (which all classes are equally capable of rendering; and) the reception of which depends, not on the rank or condition of the witness, but solely on the truth of the testimony which he gives.

This is an evil which is in the power of all, who preside in a court of justice, to remedy: and neither Judges of Assize, Chairmen of Quarter Sessions, nor Recorders in boroughs, ought longer to permit a practice to exist, which, if it do not actually pervert the course of justice, tends, without doubt, to confirm a prejudice in the minds of certain classes, that "equal justice" in this country, is a mere fallacy and idle delusion.

THE CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.

Mr. Watson, on Tuesday evening, astounded the House of Commons by his searching exposure of the most atrocious job ever perpetrated by officials or sanctioned by a Government. In a speech of great ability, whose length forbids its transference to our columns, he laid bare to the indignation of the country the secret history of this disgraceful affair, and proved that the compensations awarded are even more extravagant—the plunder of the suitor more iniquitous—than had appeared when first the Profession was startled by their announcement. He was opposed by the Government, and, proh pudor! by Mr. Charles Buller! Yet, spite of the weight thus flung into the scale against him, his motion for an inquiry was rejected by a majority of fifteen only. We trust that the subject will not be allowed to slumber; that it will be discussed in the House of Lords; and that in the Commons it will be renewed again and again in various shapes, while for the good service he has already done, the hearty thanks of the public and of the Profession will be given to Mr. Watson.

The Times has handled the subject with its usual power; and some passages from its article of Thursday may fitly be preserved among these legal records. The old abuses which the new abuse was introduced to reform (!!!) is thus pleasantly described:—

"The six clerks, sworn clerks, and waiting clerks (for it appears that

'Those also serve who only stand and wait),' bore the brunt of the battle. The office of the six clerks is to do nothing; and about two or three hundred years ago the sworn clerks (about sixty in number) were appointed to help them. But these duties being found too onerous, a new class of officials, called agents, were invented, upon whom the principal burden was thenceforth to fall. For these services a grateful public, or rather that unhappy part of it which comes to be pummelled in Chancery, rewarded them with an aggregate income of 77,000*l.* per annum. The offices, as may be supposed, were too good things to be easily parted with; and became, by a very ordinary law of nature, hereditary and saleable. One such place has, before now, fetched 27,000*l.*; 15,000*l.* has been given for part only of another; and a Mr. WAINWRIGHT's family have been in possession of a third, from father to son, since the time of the Commonwealth. And all this out of the pockets of the public."

These bloated sinecurists were to be bought off. Because they had been so extravagantly paid for doing nothing in office, it was proposed to pay them still more extravagantly for retiring.

"The late Bill was certainly no ordinary development of the Buller apophthegm. Compensation to range from two-thirds to the full amount of the condemned salaries, at the discretion of the Chancellor, and fresh salaries of 2,000*l.* a year to a fresh kind of appointee, who is to be the deputy of the agent who was the locum tenens of the sworn clerk, who did the work of the six clerk, who was appointed to do nothing at all at 7,000*l.* a year! The discretion of the Chancellor and Commissioners has been wisely exercised in cutting the Parliamentary compensation down to a minimum, and in selecting the new officers from among the displaced; but even now the sum chargeable on the suitors amounts to 45,000*l.* a year; and the different items of this enormous amount are not payable, after the ordinary fashion of compensations, during the lives only of the ejected clerisy; but, in consideration of the hereditary nature of the defunct job, hang on for seven years, payable in a reduced shape to their posterity."

It is this that is so utterly indefensible. The history of English jobbing records some instances of paying off a useless officer with a pension equal to his full salary, even when no services had ever been rendered in return for that salary. But we doubt whether, in the catalogue of that very black book, there is to be found such an instance of jobbing out-jobbed as this invention of the Chancery officials for securing to themselves not only full pay for the rest of their lives, but for seven years after their deaths!

Imagine a band of clerks retiring with pensions greater than those of the judges or the ministers of state—and given in consideration of their being sinecurists! Our readers will agree with the Times that "public payments are an acknowledgment of public services, past or present." A sinecurist has no claim to compensation. He may ask it of our generosity: he cannot demand it of our justice. A sinecure is an abuse, and its holder must know that he is pocketing that to which he has no right, because the title is bad, and he took it knowing the defect of title. To a fair and reasonable remuneration nobody would have objected; but for such wholesale plunder as Mr. WATSON has denounced there can be but one feeling of indignant reprobation among honest men of all parties.

And the Legal Profession has especial cause for complaint in the matter, for no small portion of the money thus grasped will, in fact, come out of their pockets. As thus. It was to meet the demand of the public for Chancery Reform that its abuses were made the subject of legislation. But reform that did not diminish costs to some extent was felt to be a fraud upon the country. The sinecurist compensations would swallow up the proceeds of the fees of court; the cormorants who were to prey upon the fee-fund must first be satisfied. In this dilemma what was to be done? How contrive at once to provide for the compensation job and make a show of reduced costs? Why, what should be done but to curtail the solicitors' fees? Let them pay very nearly as before, but let them not receive half so much: the suitor will save something, and we shall save every thing; the weakest shall go to the wall!

So the solicitors are shorn of the profits of their labours, that a band of sinecurists may receive enormous compensations for doing nothing.

Are we not right in saying that the solicitor is the party really wronged and robbed by the Chancery Compensation job?

LOCAL COURTS.

IT is very desirable for many reasons that an energetic effort should be made to procure the postponement of the County Courts Bill over the session. It is, as we propose to shew in another article, a singularly crude, imperfect, ill-digested, and impracticable measure. It continues, and creates where now it does not exist, imprisonment for debt, which another Bill is passing through Parliament for the purpose of abolishing. It provides for an enormous number of compensations, and the Chancery job should give the Legislature a righteous suspicion of the very name of a compensation clause, which is not fenced about with all the protection against jobbing that ingenuity can devise. There is a rapidly growing feeling in favour of an efficient reform of the Quarter Sessions, as the best foundation for a perfect system of Local Courts, a reform which would be indefinitely postponed by the opposition of new interests that would be created by the officials, &c. of the County Courts. And, lastly, because the Society for the Amendment of the Law which now numbers in its ranks the greatest lawyers of all parties, will probably direct its first attention to the subject of the Quarter Sessions and Local Courts generally, with a view to devise a plan for carrying out the objects that all desire in the most efficient manner and at the least cost.

For these various reasons, may we hope that all who have influence will employ it to prevent the further progress of that most imperfect measure now pending, not with any design of permanently preventing Local Courts, which are undoubtedly much wanted, but that, when established, they may efficiently accomplish their object, and secure the approval of the public and benefit the Profession; objects which, however incompatible some may deem them, are nevertheless perfectly consistent, nay, as we believe, are so intimately blended, that whatever law reform benefits the public will ultimately prove beneficial to the Profession.

THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

WE are pleased to find that the Court of Aldermen have passed a resolution for the purpose of purging this court from the herd of disreputable Attorneys, and persons calling themselves Attorneys, but not so, by whom it is infested, and owing to whose presence it is that, as Mr. Wilkins justly observed, "it had become almost a matter of reproach for Counsel to practise" there.

The following scene on Friday se'nnight, as reported in the Times, illustrates the mischief of which we complain, and announces the projected reform:—

"THE COURT AND THE ATTORNEYS.

"Mary Ann Joblyns, 35, married, and Mary Pettigrew, 81, widow, were placed at the bar charged with feloniously and maliciously setting fire to a dwelling-house, Charles Ayre being therein alive.

"Payne was about to open the case on behalf of the prosecution, when

"COLTMAN, J. asked if any counsel appeared for the prisoners?

"Horry said that he had been instructed to appear for both the prisoners.

"Crouch immediately afterwards rose and stated that he also had been instructed to defend the prisoners. (A laugh.)

"COLTMAN, J. asked if he appeared for both?

"Crouch.—Both, my lord.

"COLTMAN, J. said, that all that could be done in the dilemma was to ask the prisoners which of the two counsel they would prefer.

"The prisoners, on being asked, stated that they wished to be defended by Mr. Wilkins.

"This announcement was received with great laughter in court, in which Mr. Wilkins, who appeared surprised by the declaration, heartily joined.

"The case was ordered to stand over for the present.

"Shortly afterwards,

"Wilkins said, that he wished to state the reason why he declined to defend the prisoners. It appeared that a brief had a day or two back been prepared by an attorney for him (Mr. Wilkins), but owing to his absence from court yesterday, it had been presented to his learned friend Mr. Crouch; it would therefore ill become him now to interfere with the management of the case. That Court ought to be the first criminal court in the world, but owing to the disreputable class of persons who were in the habit of performing the duty of attorneys, it had become almost a matter of reproach for counsel to practise in the court. Instructions had been given to Mr. Horry without the sanction or the knowledge of the prisoners at the bar, and he (Mr. Wilkins), in conjunction with most of his learned friends round the table, felt it to be a personal matter, which was the reason he had expressed himself so strongly upon the subject.

"Alderman Sir Peter Laurie said, that the Court of Aldermen had passed a resolution to correct the abuse complained of by Mr. Wilkins, which should be sent for and read.

"Horry observed, that Mr. Crouch had only been instructed for the prisoners the day before; whereas he (Mr. Horry) had been instructed since the beginning of the session.

"Sir P. Laurie said, the question was, by whom had he been instructed? If he would state the party's name, orders should be given to the door-keepers in future to prevent his entering the court as they were determined to put a stop to such practices.

"Horry resumed his seat without any further observations.

Payne observed, that the instructions of the Court of Aldermen should be more stringent, especially against their own officers, who were in the practice of delivering instructions to counsel; he did not disguise that he alluded to the ordinary of Newgate, who was in the habit of doing so.

"COLTMAN, J. said the discussion was altogether irregular, although perhaps it might be necessary."

Similar difficulties not unfrequently arise in the country from like causes. The disreputable class of persons who are in the habit of performing the duties of Attorneys infest every Assize and Sessions. We would earnestly direct to their doings the attention of the Profession, recommending the local Law Societies everywhere sternly to enforce the provisions of the recent statute.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

IN a few days the members will receive a circular requesting those who purpose to support it to transmit an order for the first adventure of the Society, The PRACTICAL REPORTS.

These will comprise,

I. MAGISTRATES' CASES, by A. BITTLESTON and J. C. SYMONS, Esqs. Barristers-at-law.
II. PRACTICE CASES in all the Courts; those of each Court to be contributed by the gentleman who reports them for the LAW TIMES.
III. REAL PROPERTY CASES of special importance, contributed in like manner as the Practice Cases.
IV. NISI PRIUS and CROWN CASES, by various hands; each Case to be authenticated by the name of the Reporter.
V. An ANNUAL DIGEST of all the Reports of all the Cases in all the Courts.

The above will form one volume in every year; but each series of reports will be separately paged and indexed, that it may be complete in itself.

It will be printed in large octavo, and issued in numbers of 32 pages, stamped and unstamped. To members, the price of the former will be one shilling and one penny, and the latter, one shilling only; to other persons, the price will be eighteen-pence.

Should the manner of getting up this series of Reports prove satisfactory, the next publication for the Society will be the announced SERIES OF PRACTICAL STATUTES, continued from the well-known work of Chitty. Others will follow as rapidly as the increase in the number of members, and consequent resources, will permit.

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

The Speeches of Mr. Wilkins, in Defence of William Henry Barber, &c. Taken in short-hand by H. GREGORY. To which are appended Notes and Observations. By a Barrister. 1844. Crockford, Law Times Office.

THE title-page of this pamphlet describes its contents. The speeches here published from the short-hand writer's notes need no praise from us. Their fame has gone over the country. They could be only duly appreciated by those who heard them. Read in print they lose some of their interest, but they will be preserved as specimens of brilliant forensic eloquence reappearing just at the moment when it seemed to b departed for ever.

Our present concern is with the remarks contained in the appendix.

Mr. WILKINS defended Barber with a full conviction of his innocence of the crime with which he was charged, and that confidence remains unshaken to this moment. In such circumstances, the exhibition of extraordinary zeal on behalf of the client is not only to be excused, but to be commended; and if that zeal should induce an advocate somewhat to overstep the limits assigned by the coldness of professional etiquette, which prescribes the same formula of demeanour, whether we are defending the innocent or the guilty, it would be but justice to put the charitable construction upon excess of zeal, and overlook a fault that leaned to virtue's side.

But such is the miserable spirit of jealousy at the Bar, so keen is its rivalry, that charity in this, its noblest and most Christian phace, is rarely to be found there. If a man be a nobody, and have nothing in him, he may escape with impunity, even from the commission of many serious offences; but let there be a rising man, and instantly he is marked for the shafts of detraction. Every word, every act, is watched with keenest eye; his errors will be magnified, his best deeds wilfully misconstrued; every empty noodle will be shaken at him; and they who do nothing will hug themselves with self-gratulations that they are better than their successful rival, who, perchance, does sometimes, amid the multitude of his occupations, fall into error, from which the detractors are safe, because they are never called upon to think and act, and, doing nothing, they can, of course, do no wrong.

Mr. WILKINS has not escaped the spirit of detraction we have described. Feeling strongly for his client, he exerted himself to prove the innocence of which his own mind entertained no doubt. He desired to accumulate evidence which, though not strictly legal, might carry with it a moral conviction to the minds of the authorities in whom was vested the power of mitigating the sentence. He inserted an advertisement in the Times to this effect.

Perhaps this was not strictly in accordance with the rules of professional etiquette; but it certainly proceeded from the most generous motives: its intent was unquestionably good. But Mr. WILKINS is a rising man, and the opportunity for attack was too excellent to be lost. A stream of invective was poured forth upon the occasion; and it was assumed that the purpose of the notice was not that which was avowed, but that it was intended as a covert advertisement of himself and his chambers.

The simple answer to this absurd charge is, that Mr. WILKINS has no need to advertise himself, for already he possesses as much business as he can well get through. Mr. WILKINS published a letter in vindication of himself. The letter is made new food for attack. And so it would be through a dozen explanations; it never suits detractors to be satisfied.

There is but one mode of meeting this sort of assault, to which every successful man at the Bar is invariably exposed. It is this: not to care for it; to do right and fear not; to be content with success, without hoping to have the good will of those who are left behind in the race. Genius will always survive slander, and often it shines the brighter for the very conflict from which it has emerged. Leave to the little-minded envious the enjoyment of their sneers; the only compensation they can find for themselves is the discovery that the men by whom they are distanced are not faultless; admit the fact, own the error and pass on. It is only littleness that cannot afford to confess a fault. Thus are foes disarmed, and thus it is that, let society and institutions do what they will, in the long run the order of nature is restored, and men take their places according to their capacities. Detraction has its day; and when it has manifestly failed, and the rival has passed beyond reach of rivalry, those who most envied, most hated, and most tried to depress him, are the first to lick the feet they sought to trip up, and to slime with their slaver the fame and fortune they had done their best to destroy.

A freehold and copyhold estate, exonerated from tithes, situate in the county of Northampton, in the parish of Braunston, three miles from Daventry, consting of a farm-house, all requisite agricultural buildings, and 100a. 2r. 12p. of arable and pasture land, about 74 acres of which are copyhold, and the remainder freehold—5240*l.*

THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On Wednesday, at one o'clock, a sale by auction of the St. James's Theatre, with two houses, forming the wings of the elevation, took place at Garraway's Coffee-house, Change-alley, Cornhill, by Mr. Farebrother. The sale was "made by order of a second mortgagee, subject to a fee farm rent of 20*l.* per annum; and also to prior mortgagees, for securing a sum of 12,000*l.* and interest thereon at 4*l.* 15s. per cent.; and to further charges for securing the sum of 2,500*l.* and interest thereon at 4*l.* 15s. per cent.;" as stated in the catalogue. The whole was in the occupation of a highly respectable tenant, whose term of lease expired at Michaelmas, 1844, at a rent of 1,200*l.*; while there were extensive cellars, producing a rental of 160*l.* per annum. The pit would hold 300 persons, the gallery 230 persons, the slips 60; while there were—on the first circle 18 boxes, 8 on the second, with 8 private boxes, and sitting-room for about 120 persons. The auctioneer said that Mr. Braham, the original proprietor, gave 8,000*l.* for the site only; and Mr. Beasley, the architect, had estimated the value of the theatre from 28,000*l.* to 30,000*l.* The sale was subject to the payment of the two prior mortgagees, amounting to 14,500*l.*; and the property of Mr. Braham, consisting of the wardrobe, scenery, &c. was included in the sale. The auctioneer, after reading the conditions of sale, put up the valuable property. He proposed 20,000*l.* and lowered the amount by 1,000*l.* successively; when at 8,000*l.* an offer was made. The next bidding was 8,100*l.* The competitors advanced 100*l.* at each bidding, and which continued up to 9,400*l.* No other offer being made, the lot was knocked down at that price, at which it was stated the property was bought in.

DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE'S ESTATES, CUMBERLAND.—On Wednesday last, the valuable estates belonging to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, situate at and in the parish of Penrith, in the county of Cumberland, were offered for sale by Mr. Small, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in forty-one lots, in the assembly-room, at his grace's hotel, kept by Mr. John Galloway. The ruins of Penrith Castle, the farm-house, and about five acres of the castle farm, called the Castle Garth, comprised one of the lots. The competition for this lot was pretty smart between Joseph Bean, Esq., of Lowther, steward to the Earl of Lonsdale, and T. W. Bleaymire, Esq. It was declared a sale at 1,300*l.*, and ultimately was struck off to Mr. Bleaymire, at the price of 2,000*l.* It is understood that this lot was purchased for the Directors of the Carlisle and Lancaster Railway Company. The interesting and venerable ruins of Penrith Castle stand on an easy eminence on the west, overlooking the town, and it is conjectured to have been built at the close of the fourteenth century. It was the residence of the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard the Third. In the reign of Charles the First it was dismantled by the adherents to the Commonwealth, and was fortified with a rampart and a very deep ditch. From the remaining part of the walls, the castle appears to have been a very large and strong fortress, with spacious vaults beneath. The situation is a most beautiful one; the lands adjoining of the best quality, and admirably calculated for building-ground. His grace's celebrated hotel, buildin s, and spacious shambles adjoining, comprised another lot, which was offered at 4,000*l.*; but there being no bidders, it was bought in at a reserved price for the vendor. The greater part of the other lots were town-fields, scattered over the parish, some of which the projected line of railway runs through, and are immediately adjoining thereto. Some of these lots were sold at the rate of about 265*l.* per acre. Nearly the whole of the remaining lots were bought in for the vendor. His grace did not offer the royalty of the "Honour of Penrith" for sale, which, it appears, he wishes to retain himself.

NECROLOGY.

SIR JOHN LOWTHER, BART.—The demise of this highly respected and venerable baronet took place on Monday last, at Swillington Hall, near Leeds, his principal residence. He was the son of the Rev. Sir William Lowther, bart. rector of Swillington, and Ann, his wife, a descendant of the ancient family of the Zouches; was born in April 1759, and had consequently just completed his 85th year. On the 4th of September, 1790, he married Lady Elizabeth Fane, second daughter of John, the ninth Earl of Westmorland, by whom he had three sons and three daughters; but one of the latter died an infant, and another in 1812. Sir John was next brother to the late excellent Earl of Lonsdale, whom he strongly resembled, both in features and personal disposition. His baronetcy dates from the year 1824. The successor to his title and estates is his eldest son, John Henry (born March 23, 1793), one of the members for the city of York—now, of course, Sir John Henry Lowther, bart.

FEARNSIDE v. DERHAM.

THOMPSON v. DERHAM.

Practice—Prosecution of decrees.

These causes, upon which the Lord Chancellor had given judgment last term, stood in the paper to be spoke to on the minutes, and which had occupied nearly the whole of the last motion-day of last Term.

The Lord Chancellor said there was a general decrée for the administration of assets in Thompson v. Derham, and that the plaintiff Fearnside, whose lien had been established in Fearnside v. Derham, might go into the Masters' office and assert his claim in Thompson v. Derham.

Tinney, for the plaintiff in the first suit, objected, that the first suit was expressly to establish the plaintiff's lien, whereas in the second suit he would merely go in as a defendant to establish his claim, and would be embarrassed by the interests of the other parties; but

The Lord Chancellor.—It is all a matter of account; and the right of the plaintiff being established, all he will do will be to go into the Masters' office in the suit of Thompson v. Derham, when his claim being allowed, he will have nothing more to do with the suit. No one professes to have any claim before the plaintiff but the family. The mortgage account will be settled. Nothing can now remain in controversy in which the plaintiff is concerned, except the amount of his mortgage. I can give the plaintiff all the proceeds of the sale. He is interested in one item; when that is settled it is taken out of the general account, and he can have an interim order for the sale and payment of the money. The decree in Fearnside v. Derham having settled the priorities, the plaintiff is ordered to go in and claim in Thompson v. Derham.

Minutes settled accordingly.

MATHER v. SKELMERDINE.

Pauper plaintiff—Practice—Affidavits.

Willcock moved to discharge an order made by the Master of the Rolls, by which the plaintiff was declared not entitled to sue in formâ pauperis, on the ground, that by the testimony adduced on affidavit on the part of the defendants, he appeared to be worth more than 5*l*. The defendant's affidavits stated that the plaintiff was a coachmaker at Manchester, and that he had "a carriage," and many implements of his trade, amounting in value to more than 20*l*.

This the plaintiff contradicted in general terms, but he did not particularly deny that he had "a carriage." His solicitor, also, made an affidavit, stating many circumstances leading to the inference of the plaintiff's poverty, but he did not state positively that he believed he was not worth 5*l*.

Follett, contrà, was not called on.

The Lord Chancellor.—There is a general answer by the defendant's affidavits to the general allegations of poverty on the part of the plaintiff; and the defendant states positively that the plaintiff has carriages or a carriage, and the plaintiff afterwards makes an affidavit, but does not deny it. The solicitor also makes no express statement that the plaintiff is not worth 5*l*. The order of the Master of the Rolls was right.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Wednesday, April 24.

MAITLAND v. RODGER.

Practice—Rule of the 15th sect. of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36—Notice—Service—Taking a bill pro confesso—Jurisdiction of the Court—Vesting order under Insolvent Debtors' Court—Discovery—Pauper defendant.

The 12th rule of 15th sec. of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, enacts, where, upon application of the plaintiff, the Court shall be satisfied that justice cannot be done to the plaintiff without an answer to the bill or to the interrogatories from the defendant himself, "that the defendant do remain in the custody of the keeper of the King's Bench prison, until he shall fully answer the plaintiff's bill, or this Court make other order to the contrary; but this order is without prejudice to the plaintiff's availing himself of any of the provisions of the Act of Parliament in that case made and provided."

Where, under the above rule, the plaintiff obtained an order that the defendant might remain in custody until answer or further order, he was not compelled to proceed according to the 13th rule of the 15th sec. to take the bill pro confesso.

Where the defendant is so detained in custody, and his answer is necessary for the purpose of doing justice, the Court will order him to remain in custody, although the plaintiff has obtained a vesting order against the estate of the defendant in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and the defendant has filed his schedule: for this Court will not forego its own inherent powers, or cast aside its machinery of bill and answer for enforcing a discovery, upon the presumption that the necessary discovery may possibly be made in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, by means of an examination there, which the defendant may answer or not at his own option.

This was a motion to discharge the defendant out of custody of the keeper of the Queen's Bench Prison, where he had been placed for contempt, without the defendant paying the costs of his contempt, and that an order made on the 13th July, 1843, under the above-mentioned 12th rule, sec. 15, 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, might be discharged with costs.

The facts of the case were these:—It appears that the plaintiff and defendant had carried on business for some time as tailors, and the latter was the only acting partner, and that lately the defendant had made a discovery that the defendant had misconducted himself in the concern, and had been carrying on a system of fraud against the plaintiff—for, upon examining into the partnership accounts, he found that the books in many instances shewed considerable debts due to the concern, which, upon the plaintiff's making inquiry of the several debtors, were proved either to have been paid to the defendant, or which he had set off against debts due from himself to them. The bill prayed a dissolution of partnership—that the accounts might be taken—that a receiver might be appointed—and an injunction issued by the Court; but the prayer of the bill did not extend to any balance that might be found due from the defendant upon taking the partnership accounts. The bill was filed on the 21st of January, 1843, and the defendant duly appeared thereto, but did not file his answer; and an attachment issued against him accordingly for want of an answer. On the 15th of June following, the defendant was brought to the bar of the Court by habeas corpus, and then remanded to prison. The defendant still refused to put in his answer, whereupon the plaintiff proceeded ex parte, and under the 12th rule of the 15th sec. of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, obtained an order for the defendant to remain in custody until he should have fully answered the plaintiff's bill. The order was not served upon the defendant, but was, on the 18th of July, lodged with the clerk of the papers of the Queen's Bench prison. The plaintiff presented his petition to the Insolvent Debtors' Court on the 12th of August, and obtained a vesting order against the defendant's estate. The defendant filed his schedule, but upon applying to that Court, on the 19th of March last, for his discharge out of custody, his application was opposed by the plaintiff, by reason of the defendant not having filed his answer under the terms of the above order of the 13th of July; whereupon the defendant was again remanded, and then obtained an order to defend in formâ pauperis.

Anderton, for the defendant, urged that he ought to be discharged out of custody, on the ground of irregularity, for that the plaintiff ought, according to the 13th rule of the 15th sec. of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, to have proceeded to take the bill pro confesso; but he had not done so within the time allowed by that rule. Moreover, that the order of 13th July having been obtained without notice, and not having been served upon the defendant, it was irregular, and that the directions contained in the 13th rule,(a) under which the defendant ought to have been brought up for the purpose of taking the bill pro confesso, were not waived by the order of 13th July.

Rasch, for the plaintiff.

Cases cited: Woodward v. Conebeer (1 Hare, 297); King v. Bryant (3 My. & C. 191).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am of opinion that the plaintiff was not bound in obtaining the order under the 12th rule to give notice to the defendant; the principal question to be decided is, whether, at this time, there is a sufficient reason for detaining the defendant in custody. On behalf of the defendant it is urged, that since the order made in July, the vesting order made by the Court for the relief of Insolvent Debtors has passed all his interest into his assignee; it therefore lies upon the plaintiff to shew that it is material to obtain an answer from the insolvent: the plaintiff does not seek relief, but comes for a discovery only as to the manner in which the defendant has carried on his dealings with the customers. Now, it might happen that, with respect to some of them, the defendant has made no entries of their dealings in the partnership books; in such a case it would not appear what was due from them; and in respect of these debts to the partnership concern, the plaintiff is entitled to an answer. I must, therefore, act with an even hand between the parties; and although the whole spirit of the English law is without question in favour of the liberty of the subject, yet, where a party has been brought into custody under circumstances of such an unfavourable character, he has no right to complain of being detained in custody, so long as he refuses to disclose the state of affairs as they exist between himself and his partner. It is true that the defendant has now no interest in the matter; and it has been suggested that the whole state of the partnership transactions will be unfolded in the proceedings in the Insolvent Debtors' Court. But it is urging a somewhat novel argument to say, that this Court is to throw away its machinery of bills and answers, and so far trust to what another Court may do in furthering the ends of justice between the parties, as to allow a defendant to go out of Court upon the ground that inquiries may be made in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and questions put which the defendant may answer or not at his option. I am of opinion that the justice of the case demands that the defendant should answer; for without a discovery, the plaintiff cannot know how his affairs stand. I cannot, therefore, at present, order the defendant to be discharged. If he be not prepared to put in an answer, but is in a condition to make a fair statement as to the matters inquired into, perhaps you may come to terms.

CARTER v. GORDON.

Practice—Subpœna to appear and answer—8th order, 26th Aug. 1841.

The 8th order directs "that if the defendant being duly served with a subpœna to appear to and answer the bill, shall refuse or neglect to appear thereto, the plaintiff shall, after the expiration of eight days from such service, be at liberty to apply to the Court for (a) The 13th rule above referred to directs, "That if a defendant does not put in an answer within two calendar months after he is lodged in gaol or prison, or the attachment is lodged against him, he being already in prison, the plaintiff shall, at the expiration of such two calendar months, proceed to take the bill pro confesso, and shall accordingly obtain an order for taking the same pro confesso within six weeks after the period computed from the expiration of such two calendar months, within which he may be able to take the same pro confesso; or, in default, that the defendant shall, upon application to the Court, be entitled to be discharged out of custody without payment of any of the costs of the contempt unless the Court shall, under the power thereinbefore contained, see good cause to amend and detain the defendant in custody.

leave to enter an appearance for the defendant; and the Court being satisfied that the subpœna has been duly served, and that no appearance has been entered for the defendant, may give such leave accordingly; and that thereupon the plaintiff may cause an appearance to be entered for the defendant; and thereupon such further proceedings may be had in the cause as if the defendant had actually appeared.

When under the above order a party moves to enter an appearance, the subpœna must also call upon the defendant to answer.

This was an application by motion to the Court that, in pursuance of the 8th order of Aug. 1841, the plaintiff might be at liberty to enter an appearance for the defendant, he having neglected to appear thereto.

Cole, for the motion, contended that, notwithstanding the subpœna was the common one to a bill of revivor, and which did not call for an answer, yet that it was substantially the same as the subpœna to appear to and answer, for the defendant was in a position to plead, answer, or demur to such bill of revivor in the same manner as he might use such modes of defence to an original bill.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR. Does the subpœna in this case call upon the defendant to appear and answer? If not, I cannot think that it is within the scope and meaning of the order, which expressly says, "That if the defendant, being duly served with a subpœna to appear and answer the bill, shall refuse or neglect to appear thereto, &c." I am of opinion that unless the subpœna call for an answer, it does not fall within the 8th order. Motion refused.

Infant—Maintenance—Costs.

The costs of a petition by infants for the application of the income of property to which they were entitled for their maintenance, their father being unable to support them, ordered to be paid out of the corpus of the property.

Under the will of Richard Broadbridge, dated the 18th of June, 1833, the petitioners, who were infants, were beneficially entitled to a fund in the possession of trustees. The father of the petitioners being unable to maintain them, a petition had been presented, praying the usual reference to the Master, and that they might have the whole income of the fund applied for their maintenance. Upon this reference, the Master made his report on the 23rd of March, 1844, whereby it appeared that the whole income of the fund in question (87*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* per annum), would be properly applicable for the maintenance of the petitioners. A petition was now presented, praying the confirmation of the Master's report, and that the costs of the petitions should be paid out of the corpus of the fund. This petition had been heard on a previous day, and stood over for the production of authorities as to the payment of the costs out of the corpus.

Renshaw, for the petitioners, now cited Ex parte England (1 R. & M. 499); Ex parte Swift (1 R. & M. 575); Ex parte Chambers (1 R. & M. 577); Ex parte Green (1 Jac. & Walker, 255); Ex parte Thomas (Amb. 145), and Ex parte Whitfield (3 Brown, 5 0 n.)

Piggott, for the trustees, assented to the payment of the costs in the way proposed.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think, upon the authorities cited, I may venture to do it, particularly as I understand that the fund is the absolute property of the infants.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, May 22.

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE CITY OF OXFORD.

The guardians of the poor, acting under a local Act of Parliament, are bound to obey the orders of the Poor Law Commissioners, notwithstanding such orders are at variance with the provisions of the Local Act—Approval by Commissioners, under 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 22.

Erle and Thomas shewed cause against a rule, calling on the guardians of the poor within the city of Oxford to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue directed to them, and commanding them to appoint a proper person to be master of the workhouse, pursuant to an order issued by the Poor Law Commissioners on the 14th August, 1843, for the government of the workhouse belonging to the incorporation of the guardians of the poor within the city of Oxford. The order of the commissioners directed the said guardians, or the majority of them present at a meeting of that body, "on the occurrence of any vacancy, to appoint a master of the workhouse," and prescribed certain regulations as to the mode of appointment. The guardians, on the 22nd September of each year, had been accustomed to appoint their officers for the term of one year, commencing on the following 29th September; and Mr. Price, the present master of the workhouse, was appointed on the 22nd September, 1842, and had been annually so appointed on the same day for several years previously. On the 21st September, 1843, the guardians passed a resolution, which was entered in their books in the following form—"Ordered, that the officers in this establishment are officers during pleasure, and that no appointment shall for the future take place as on an annual election." No election took place, either on the 22nd or 29th of Sept., 1843, but Mr. Price continued to act as master. In the month of November, the Poor Law Commissioners issued a second order, directing the guardians "to proceed to appoint a fit and proper person to act as master." The guardians disregarded this order, upon the ground that, as Mr. Price had not been removed, there was no vacancy in the office; and thereupon this rule was obtained, on the ground, 1st, That the guardians were bound to obey the order of the Poor Law Commissioners of the 16th August, 1843; and, 2ndly, that the resolution of the guardians of the 21st Sept. was invalid, from want of approval by the Poor Law Commissioners, and 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 96, s. 22.

It was now submitted, first, that the order of the Poor Law Commissioners did not apply, as there really was no vacancy. Secondly, that the resolution, making the appointments of officers appointments during pleasure, was not a matter connected with the relief of the poor, and therefore not within the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 22. Thirdly, that the order of the Poor Law Commissioners was a interference with the constitution of the guardians, inasmuch as it enabled a majority of the guardians present at any meeting to do an act which, under the local act, required a number not less than five; and that such interference was unlawful under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 9, unless the consent of three-fourths of the guardians had been previously obtained.

Thesiger, S. G., and Tomlinson, contrà, were not heard.

The COURT held, that although the guardians were acting under a local Act, they were nevertheless exempt from the authority of the Poor Law Commissioners, and consequently were bound to fill up the vacancy in compliance with the order, provided a vacancy existed, which would depend upon the validity of the resolution of guardians of the 21st Sept. That resolution was necessarily invalid for want of the approval of the Poor Law Commissioners, under the 22nd section of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and therefore a vacancy must have occurred on the 29th of September, which ought to have been filled up in pursuance of the Poor Law Commissioners' order.

Rule absolute.

Re GEORGE LUKE.

Re-admission of attorney—Neglect of town agent to instruct counsel to move for re-admission.

Willes moved for leave for the applicant to be re-admitted as an attorney to take out his certificate. It appeared that proper affidavits had been filed, and notice of the applicant's intention to apply for re-admission had been given for the last day of last term, but by inadvertence on the part of the town agent counsel were not instructed to make the motion. Fresh notices for the first day of this term have been given. An application had been made to Patteson, J. at chambers, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, but this learned judge was of opinion that the Act did not apply to such a case, and the party was therefore obliged to come to ask the Court to exercise the discretion reposed in them of moulding their rules to suit the circumstances of the case. It was sworn to be a matter of great importance to the applicant, who had not been in any manner instrumental in the irregularity.

The COURT held that all they could do, would be to allow the same notices to stand for the last day of the present term, although there was no former instance of indulgence given even to that extent.

Rule refused.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

TRINITY TERM, 1844.

Wednesday, May 22.

REG. v. SCOTT.

Erle, Q. C. mentioned this case again. He had moved last Term to discharge a recognizance, entered into by the defendant, as engineer to a railroad company, to erect a bridge in a particular manner.

Upon his failing to do so, the recognizance was estreated by the Court of Queen's Bench. The bridge had afterwards been finished in a proper manner, and it then became necessary to apply to this Court, as in a matter concerning her Majesty's Exchequer, to discharge the recognizance.

The application was made last Term, and postponed, in order that the defendant might produce a certificate from some competent person of the completion of the bridge. A certificate from General Pasley was now produced. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. WILLIAM THE FOURTH and OTHERS v. ROE.

Hayes moved to strike out several of the demises in the declaration, which were entirely fictitious.

The defendants had not appeared, or entered into the consent rule.

By the COURT.—We know nothing of your client until he signs the consent rule. All we know is, that Richard Roe has been polite enough to give some one notice to appear. You must make this application after you have done so.

Re H. H. HARRIS.

Jervis shewed cause against a rule obtained by V. Williams, to set aside the taxation of an attorney's bill, upon the ground that the bill had been paid more than a year.

The application was founded on the late Attorneys and Solicitors Act. The payment had been made by a bill of exchange, and it was now contended that such a payment was not within the statute.

The Court were of this opinion.

Rule discharged.

WHELDAL v. NORTHERN and EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Jervis, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Lush, to set aside the judgment signed by defendant as irregular, or to review the taxation.

By a rule of Court, the party seeking the increase of costs is required to serve a copy of his affidavit upon the other side. In this case, the copy served by the defendants omitted the jurat, and it was contended by the plaintiff that it was not a copy of an affidavit at all, but a mere nullity. For the defendant, it was contended that the omission was altogether immaterial.

Upon this point, the Court held that the copy was insufficient, and that the rule ought to be absolute to review the taxation. Jervis then objected that the rule asked for too much, that it should not have been to set aside the judgment, and that therefore it should not carry costs.

Rule absolute, without costs.

HIGGS v. HARRISON.

M. D. Hill and Hayes shewed cause against a rule obtained by Adams, Serjt. to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and enter a nonsuit. The case was tried before Gurney, B. at Northampton.

The contract, upon which the action was brought, was for the sale of some goods, and also for the lease of a house and premises. The action was to recover the value of the goods. For the defendant it was contended that the contract ought to have been in writing.

For the plaintiff, it was argued that the contract was, at all events, good as to the sale of the goods, but that it was also good as a parol demise of the land, which was to take present effect.

By the COURT.—This case seems to be decided by the fact, that neither portion of the contract was for a future interest in the land.

Rule discharged.

MILLER v. CHIFFINS.

Bramwell moved to set aside a fi. fa. Rule nisi.

COLQUHOUN v. BURFORD.

Miller moved to strike out the indebitatus counts in the declaration.

The application had been made in the first instance to Gurney, B. at chambers, and referred by him to the Court. Cause to be shewn in the first instance.

Jervis, Q. C. now shewed cause. The declaration contained, first, a special count upon a warranty of a horse; and, secondly, a count for money had and received, and on an account stated. It was now contended for the plaintiff, that it did not appear upon the face of the counts that they were for the same cause of action, and that in point of fact they were not so. The first count claims uncertain damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of the breach of the warranty; the second claims a specific sum paid by the plaintiff in pursuance of a contract, which he now alleges has been rescinded by the act of the defendant.

For the defendant it was argued that although the two counts, as they appeared in the declaration, did not appear to be for the same cause of action, yet that the plaintiff had by his particulars shewn that they were so, and had restricted himself from giving evidence of damage under one count, which he might not prove under the other.

By the COURT.—The only question for us to consider is, whether upon the face of the counts they seem to us to be for the same cause of action. Now they do not; and, therefore, this application cannot be entertained. It may be that the plaintiff has precluded himself, by his particulars, from giving evidence upon one of the counts, but that can only be taken advantage of at the trial. Rule refused.

THE NEW TRIAL PAPER.

HARRISON v. WRIGHT.

Hill, Q.C. and Humfrey shewed cause against a rule obtained by Whitehurst for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for the defendant. The action was tried before Gurney, B. at the last assizes at Nottingham. The case turned upon the facts.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

LOCKWOOD v. WOOD.

By letters patent of the 15 Car. 1, a weekly market and two fairs at E. with certain tolls and profits, were granted to one G. H. and his heirs, through whom the plaintiff claimed. By a deed bearing date the 31st August, 1646, and made between the said G. H. of the one part, and four persons therein described as yeomen and by-law men, for the year 1646, for the said township of E. on the behalf of themselves and all the inhabitants of E. aforesaid, mentioned in the schedule thereto annexed, of the other part, the said by-law men and inhabitants granted to the said G. H. his heirs and assigns, the market-place at E.: and the said G. H. covenanted, that the said by-law men and the rest of the inhabitants, their heirs and assigns for ever, should have a free market within the said town of E. to buy and sell all cattle and commodities, toll free, in as ample a manner as the said G. H. had by the recited letters patent. It was proved that the plaintiff was seized in fee of the freehold of the market-place, and that the defendant was an inhabitant of E.: but it was not shewn that he was either the heir or assignee of any of the grantees named in the schedule. Held, first, that the exemption from toll mentioned in the deed of 1646 included an exemption from stallage also; secondly, that inhabitants, quà inhabitants, cannot prescribe for an easement in alieno solo, but can only claim by custom, and therefore that the grant in question being a modern grant, not made by the Crown but by a subject, the defendant could not, as an inhabitant of E. and by virtue of that deed, claim exemption from stallage, and insist upon a right to place his stall on market-days on the plaintiff's land, without making any payment for the same.

This was a bill of exceptions. The facts of the case and the arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the judgment of the Court. The case was argued on the 17th June and 27th Nov. 1843.
